Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I answered "present" because I have a general pair with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK]. I have tried in vain to ascertain by wire what his vote would be on this motion if he were present. I should have voted "aye" but for my pair, in view of certain things which have been happening lately in the House of Representatives——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. We would like to hear what is being done. I make the point of order that gentlemen must take their seats. We would like to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen in front of the Speaker will please take their seats.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FORDNEY. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 210, nays 91, answered "present" 1, not voting 125, as follows:

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I was not. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Would I be permitted to declare that if I had been present I would have voted aye?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has already made that statement.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

COCONUTS.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a concurrent resolution, and asks unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Concurrent Resolution 67.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to strike out "coconuts," appearing in paragraph 1626 of the bill, as agreed to in conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I understand that coconuts were inadvertently placed on the tax list and on the free list.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that that is the case. In the conference action coconuts were put on the dutiable list, but by a typographical error—and it seems little less than miraculous that in all the changes that were made there were not more typographical errors—it was put on both lists.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And this resolution is to put it on the dutiable list?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would it not be agreeable to the gentleman to put it on the free list instead of the dutiable list? I will not object if the gentleman will do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman will not object anyway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMPARISON OF TAXES FOR WAR AND EDUCATION.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from Capt. L. M. Overstreet on the comparison of taxes for war and education.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the method indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

COMPARES TAXES FOR WAR AND EDUCATION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 22, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. MCLAUGHLIN: There seems to be a general belief that hundreds of dollars of the taxpayers' money are spent for war, and only a few dollars for education. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD recently quoted a speaker as saying that "Out of every thousand dollars paid by the people in taxes, the sum of $930 went for obligations arising either from past wars or for preparation for possible future wars * * * and $10 for education, research, and development of the race." The speaker was evidently considering only taxes to meet congressional appropriations.

In order to explode this erroneous belief, I have investigated the question of taxation in our own county of York, Nebraska, with the following results:

Taxes paid in York County, Nebr., 1921.

State taxes	$172,420.62
County taxes	114,947.10
Township taxes	55,988.44
School taxes—all county schools	348,136.61
Total—State, county, and township taxes	691,492.77
Taxes for city of York	65,311.56
Taxes for eight villages	16,237.73

York County has a population of 17,146. Of this number 5,388 people live in the city of York, 2,879 in the eight villages, and the remaining 8,879 on the farms. In order to meet the State, county, township, city, and village budgets the taxpayers of York County paid the following amounts, per capita, in 1921:

People on the farms	$40.32
People in the villages	45.96
People in city of York	52.44

According to the Treasury Department report, "Statistics of income" for 1920, the people of Nebraska paid the following amount, per capita, to meet the congressional budget for the support of the National Government:

Personal Federal income tax	$6.45

These figures show that when the people of Nebraska pay their taxes they contribute but $6.45 per capita for the support of the entire National Government, which includes the cost of all wars past, present, and future, as well as the costs of the civil administration. Of the county taxes, over $20 per capita were allotted to the county schools. Of the State taxes, $1 per capita went to the State university, which institution costs the State annually over a million and a half dollars. The taxpayers of this county in Nebraska certainly contributed over three times as much for education as they did for war.

In considering the taxpayers' burden, we should always include the four great, but distinct, budgets which the people have to meet. They are the National, State, county (including township), and city budgets. The Department of Commerce, in a publication, "Wealth, debt, and taxation, 1913" (Vol. II, p. 12), gives the following statistics to show the total cost of government and the amounts allotted to education in 1913 (amounts are given to nearest million dollars):

Budget.	Government.	Education.
National	953	17
State	383	133
County	385	58
City	1,247	233
Total	2,968	441

The State, county, and city budgets in 1913 were twice as great as the National Budget, and they provided over twenty-five times as much for education. Complete statistics similar to the above are issued every 10 years. The Department of Commerce, however, shows in Financial Statistics of States, 1919, that from 1913 to 1919 the State budgets have increased from $383,000,000 to over $640,000,000. The amount allotted to education has been more than doubled from 1913 to 1920. The New York City budget has grown from $99,000,000 in 1901 to $174,000,000 in 1911 and to $346,000,000 in 1921. The National Budget expanded rapidly during the recent World War, but the State, county, and city budgets have evidently kept pace with it. There seems to be a demand from the Atlantic to the Pacific to slash the military expenditures beyond all reason in order to reduce the National Budget, while little effort is made to reduce the other three ever-growing budgets.

It is the sole duty of Congress to "provide for the common defense." It is not the duty of Congress to make appropriations to defray the cost of general education in the several States. Congress does, however, appropriate money for the education of naval officers, Army officers, Indians, and for the support of approximately half the schools in Alaska and in the District of Columbia. It is really surprising that as much as $10 out of every $1,000 appropriated by Congress is devoted to education.

The States, counties, and cities make liberal appropriations to support the schools of the several States. From certain budget reports it appears that New York City allots to schools over $55,000,000 from an annual city budget of $345,000,000, Chicago nearly $27,000,000 from a city budget of $133,000,000, and San Francisco over $6,000,000 from a city and county budget of $24,000,000.

The Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, reports that in 1920 the States appropriated over $1,036,000,000 for public schools, nearly $50,000,000 for the 93 State colleges and universities, and about $20,000,000 for State normals and teachers' colleges, or a total of over $1,100,000,000. Although the taxpayers expend over $50,000,000 annually on State colleges and universities, the students expend many additional millions on fees. Such colleges as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, University of Pennsylvania, Chicago, Northwestern, Stanford, and many denominational colleges are supported by private funds. In fact, more actual money is expended on private colleges than on the public State colleges.

The people of the United States—including Alaska and Hawaii—paid "personal Federal income taxes" in 1920 amounting to $1,075,000,000 to meet the congressional budget. The remaining funds to meet this budget came from corporation Federal income taxes, other internal revenues, customs receipts, sale of public lands, and from miscellaneous items. It should be remembered that all money spent by the National Government during the recent World War, such as the millions of dollars spent by the Railroad Administration, and the millions spent to build a merchant fleet, are charged against past wars. This method of accounting is not entirely fair.

Referring to direct taxes, the kind the taxpayers notice the most when they face the tax collectors, it is clear that in 1920 they paid $1,075,000,000 in direct taxes to support the National Government—including all war as well as civil expenditures—and over $1,100,000,000 to support their State public schools and colleges. The National Budget for this year amounts to $3,182,000,000, of which approximately one-third will be raised by direct personal income tax and two-thirds by indirect corporation taxes, customs receipts, etc.

The people may be groaning under a heavy burden of taxes, but the heaviest taxes for the farmer are those levied by the counties, and for the city man those levied by the cities.

Sincerely yours,

L. M. OVERSTREET,
Captain, United States Navy.

Hon. MELVIN MCLAUGHLIN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

REGULATING TRANSACTIONS ON GRAIN FUTURE EXCHANGES.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 11843, an act for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain, by regulating transactions on grain future exchanges, and for other purposes, and move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I made the motion after conferring with the members of the Agricultural Committee. While the amendments are not entirely satisfactory in every respect, rather than send them to conference and take the chance of their passage, we thought it would be better to accept the amendments and take what we could get. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. WINGO. Before the gentleman yields, will the gentleman tell us what the effect of the Senate amendments are?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from Minnesota will explain that.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. For some years there has been more or less agitation calling for the abolishment of the grain exchange. Many a legislator has cried out, "Destroy them," only to modify his opinion after full hearing and consideration. The grain exchange is not perfect. It can undoubtedly be improved by wise and carefully thought-out legislation. This fact remains, however: It is the farmer's market. It is the present system for marketing grain, and, apparently, the best than can be devised. With whatever faults it may have, it must be remembered it is the only present method of marketing.

Wise statesmanship should before destroying this first set up another and better plan. The effect of this bill is to destroy this present system without substituting another. Today the farmer needs markets more than ever. Instead of improving the system you destroy it. Why? Is it because through lack of knowledge and understanding you first sought to destroy while now you feel you must pass some legislation, wise or unwise, because of your previous commitment? Why this haste? The grain futures act was declared unconstitutional last May. In two weeks time thereafter this bill was being hurried through the House. Every effort almost to perfect it was opposed by the committee. The elections were coming and speed was imperative. Yesterday the bill was considered in the Senate. About 15 to 20 minutes only were devoted to it. The proceedings cover only one page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It comes over here with amendments, and they are to be considered to-day. Again I say, why the haste?

Mr. Speaker, this Congress has already passed one unconstitutional bill covering future trading. Haste, in my judgment, will only result in repeating the performance.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Does not that fact convince the gentleman that Congress ought to pay more attention than it does to whether the acts that it passes are valid, constitutional acts?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There can be no question about it. Yet with our experience with the previous bill and the decision by our Supreme Court in Hill against Wallace, we pay practically no attention to the objections as to its constitutionality.

The Secretary of Agriculture claims not to want further unconstitutional legislation. I quote from his letter of August 17 to the subcommittee of the Senate:

> There is no point to Congress again enacting a future trading act which may be declared unconstitutional.

Yet the Secretary himself insists that certain very objectionable sections from a constitutional standpoint remain in the bill. I refer especially to sections 3 and 5 (e). These sections under the rules laid down by the Supreme Court in its decision in the futures trading case would seem to be as vulnerable as the Secretary has himself described in that letter. The decision indicates what are some of the regulations contained in the act, such as the prevention of false or misleading reports, prevention of manipulation of prices, or the cornering of grain, and enforce the admission to membership in the exchange of the representatives of cooperative associations of producers or the abrogation of rules against rebates as applied to such representatives. This bill in its essence and on its face is a complete regulation of exchanges. Such regulations are held to be within the police powers of the States. House v. Mayes (219 U. S. 270) and Broadnax v. Missouri (219 U. S. 285) are cited in that opinion with approval. The court then refers to its recent decision in the child-labor case, Bailey against Drexel Furniture Co. I quote from this case as follows:

> Grant the validity of this law, and all that Congress would need to do hereafter in seeking to take over to its control any one of the great number of subjects of public interest, jurisdiction of which the States have never parted with, and which are reserved to them by the tenth amendment, would be to enact a detailed measure of complete regulation of the subject and enforce it by a so-called tax upon departures from it. To give such magic to the word "tax" would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress and completely wipe out the sovereignty of the States.

Referring to this case and this extract from the opinion, the court then says:

> This has complete application to the act before us and requires us to hold that the provisions of this act we have been discussing can not be sustained as an exercise of the taxing power of Congress conferred by section 8, Article I.

If the words "interstate commerce" are inserted in place of the word "tax" so as to paraphrase the paragraph, an attempt to bring these regulations belonging to the States, under the commerce clause, would seem equally as obnoxious as the attempt to use the taxing clause.

One of the noticeable features in the discussion of this measure by its proponents is their unwillingness or inability to discuss the basic features of this bill as to whether or not Congress has any right to enact it. They have claimed loudly that they based it upon the facts and principles laid down in the decision of Hill against Wallace. Even a cursory reading of that decision will show that this is untrue. The decision itself states the well-known principle that "sales for future delivery on the boards of trade are not in and of themselves interstate commerce." They can not come within the regulatory power of Congress as such unless they are regarded by Congress, from the evidence before it, as directly interfering with interstate commerce so as to be an obstruction or a burden thereon. It was upon this principle that in Stafford against Wallace we held it to be within the power of Congress to regulate business in the stockyards of the country, and include therein the regulation of commission men and of traders there, although they had to do only with sales completed and ended within the yards, because Congress had concluded that through exorbitant charges, dishonest practices, and collusion they were likely, unless regulated, to impose a direct burden on the interstate commerce passing through.

Not a syllable of these charges against the stockyards' interests and those dealing in them has been made against the grain interests and those dealing on the exchanges. The sole reason, as stated in this bill, as a basis for the jurisdiction of Congress and of the commerce clause is that there is a burden and interference with commerce caused by fluctuations of prices upon boards of trade by reason of manipulation and cornering which frequently occur on these boards of trade. The testimony has clearly shown that these statements are incorrect and that very few substantial fluctuations in prices have been caused by such manipulation and control on the boards of trade.

The facts are so well known that the courts could well take judicial notice of them, and these facts appear in the hearings and can be substantiated overwhelmingly by the most competent witnesses in the country, that the fluctuations in prices which occur on boards of trade are mainly caused by natural reasons occurring in any part of the world and which by reason of the speedy means of communication and the close intimacy with the boards of trade in this country with conditions in various parts of the world bring these facts to public notice, and upon such information fluctuations are based and always must be. The Secretary himself in his letter clearly admitted that the substitute amendment of Senator NELSON in the Senate would deprive Congress of jurisdiction of this bill because if the facts set forth there be true there would be no cause for regulation of commerce, because these fluctuations being natural could not be regulated as a burden upon commerce. It seems rather queer to one seeking the truth in this important matter to be informed by the Secretary that the department has abundant evidence to show that at times fluctuations have been due to manipulation. Why did not the department place these facts in evidence before the committees? If the department desires to have recitals made a part of this legislation so as to show such ultimate facts as it has set forth in section 3, why does it not trust the committees and Congress to know what are the facts upon which these recitals are based? The representatives of the exchanges have been summoned to state the facts there from their standpoint, and they have done so extensively, plainly, and truthfully.

The department has not so exhibited its facts to the committees or Congress as a basis for these recitals, and yet it asks that the court shall trust its statement unsupported by evidence as against the statements of the representatives of the exchanges who have exhibited their statements plainly and honestly as a basis for their testimony. The Secretary, in this letter of August 17, 1922, boasts that the recent decision of the Supreme Court shows that it attaches a great deal of importance to conclusions of Congress when the constitutionality of an act is in doubt, and this section is drafted on the theory that Congress, following the suggestion of the court, should make a straight declaration to show that the matter is within its jurisdiction. The court necessarily assumed that Congress had investigated the situation and the facts and declared the result of its investigation. The testimony before the committee and the letter of the Secretary himself show that Congress has not fully investigated these facts and that these recitals in section 3 are the result of the declaration which the Secretary states is based on statements on file in his department which have not been made public in Congress at all. This sort of legislation and this sort of procedure by Congress will take away the influence which it should have with the courts in showing what the facts actually are. It is a protest which should be made by every Representative who seeks to guard the influence of the legislative department of the Government. Under the Constitution the courts are the final judges of the facts and will give Congress due credit when it shall adduce what are the facts in the proper way. The history of this legislation has shown that this course has not been followed and that these recitals in section 3 and elsewhere are not worthy of the consideration by the courts of which the Secretary in his letter desires and assumes as a basis for the jurisdiction of his department.

I now call attention to the amendment on page 8 to section 5 (e). This is the provision requiring exchanges or boards of trade to admit the representative of any cooperative association of producers. I can see no objection to this up to line 23, where the proviso commences. In fact, I believe most of the exchanges now admit these cooperative representatives to membership on same terms as others. This is true in Minneapolis. The proviso reads as follows:

Provided, That no rule of a contract market shall forbid or be construed to forbid the return on a patronage basis by such cooperative association to its bona fide members of moneys collected in excess of the expense of conducting the business of such association.

What is the significance of this proviso? Simply this: Members on the exchange, under regulation of the exchange and under authority of the laws of the State in which the exchange or board of trade is located, charge a certain commission for the service done. Under like authority and regulation and for obvious reasons they are forbidden to rebate any part of this commission. Sound public policy is behind the rule, and in Minnesota the laws of the State also forbid it. This rule and the law is therefore, in Minnesota, applicable to all who trade, whether representing the ordinary commission men or cooperative associations.

If the proviso is adopted the cooperative association will be able to rebate, not in dividends at the end of the year, based on investment, but on a patronage basis either immediately following the transaction at the end of the year or season or at any other period. Either way constitutes a square rebate now forbidden by the laws of the State and the rules of the exchanges. This law and these rules are designed to compel honest dealings by the membership with each other and their customers.

The main purpose of these cooperatives is to sell the produce of their own members. Many of them, however, do a commission business as well; that is, they buy and sell grain not produced by their own members. If this proviso is adopted, the cooperatives will be permitted to rebate not only on their own grain but on deals made involving the grain of nonmembers. In this manner the whole rule would break down. In addition, it is clear to all that such a law permitting rebates to one and not to others on the same kind of transactions and among competitors would be most unjust and grossly discriminatory. The practice of rebating being pernicious in itself has in the past been so injurious and destructive to the exchanges that they have provided against it by rule, and rigidly enforced it. Their position is sound and they have continued to fight all rebating.

There is, therefore, very good reasons for adopting these stringent rules, because if there is any business where a man ought to have reliability it is in the grain business, where he is handling other people's property and other people's money. And so there are no rebates permitted on the part of the broker or the seller. That is ground for expulsion, but here we are making these changes. I also want to call further attention to the constitutional features of section 5 (e).

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Some of the transactions on the grain exchange involve interstate commerce. The question of membership has nothing to do with interstate commerce. There can be no question involving a direct burden upon interstate commerce because some individual can not under the rules rebate his commission. Congress, therefore, can have no jurisdiction under the commerce clause. The police power, involving regulatory power over these exchanges, was under the tenth amendment reserved to the States. This subdivision is a clear encroachment upon the police power of the States, and if this remains in the bill it will not surprise me if this bill is also held to be in violation of our fundamental law. This should lead us to pause, rather than haste.

Mr. BURTNESS. Has not the gentleman's own State a statute regulating this very matter?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. My State and the gentleman's State has a perfect right under the Constitution to regulate exchanges in the manner they see fit, and I contend not only as a matter of policy but as a matter of constitutionality that the Federal Government has no right to go in and so regulate.

Mr. BURTNESS. Do I understand the gentleman to go further and criticize the statutory provision of his own State in reference to these exchanges?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am not thoroughly familiar with the details of this legislation in my State. It is my impression that these representatives are admitted only on the same terms as to rebating as others. If, however, it contains language like this proviso I should say that it was unfair and unjust.

Mr. BURTNESS. Has not the gentleman overlooked the wording in the bill that the returns shall be on a patronage basis?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. No. This would include not only on what they produce and sell but what they may buy from others and sell.

Mr. Speaker, if the farmer is to realize on his grain, he must have a market where people buy, and people will not buy where they can not sell. The effect of all this legislation so far is to curtail buying of grain and to bring down upon the farmer the inevitable effects of such a policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take much time to discuss this bill now. It has been discussed here several times, but in addition to what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] has just said concerning the admission of members of the cooperative associations to boards of trade, I want to say that so far as the Board of Trade of Chicago is concerned this is a State corporation operating under a special charter granted before the adoption of the present State constitution in 1870. Now it is attempted by this legislation by the Federal Government to dictate to a corporation thus organized within a State with a State charter as to who shall be admitted to its membership.

Secondly, I again want to call attention to a very vicious feature of this legislation which we are getting into the habit of attaching to legislation of this kind. This bill makes assertions of facts which are not substantiated either by the hearings that were had upon the bill or by the conditions which actually exist. The bill recites that "the transactions on the boards of trade are susceptible to speculation, manipulation, and control," and that "sudden and unreasonable fluctuations in price very frequently occur as the result of such speculation, manipulation, or control." In other words, it is said solemnly in this legislation, and recited as a matter of fact, that fluctuations upon the market caused by the ordinary laws of supply and demand, by market and financial situations, by weather conditions, by drought and rain, by conditions of the soil—by all of these economic laws and natural conditions—are caused by manipulations and maneuverings of the boards of trade.

Of course, it is not true. We know it is not true. But we are putting these statements into the law, to give a color of consitutionality to the act, and try to make the Supreme Court believe that they are conditions of fact upon which this legislation is based.

It is too late in the day now to argue this bill with the membership of the House, but I have no doubt that when the case is finally presented to the Supreme Court that court will agree not only with the contention of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] with reference to the provision compelling admissions to membership on the boards of trade and exchanges, but also as to the proposition that we do not establish conditions of fact merely by reciting them in a bill as a basis for legislation.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I yield for a question.

Mr. CURRY. Does the gentleman believe that this bill is constitutional or unconstitutional?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, I do not often argue constitutional questions here, but I suggest to the gentleman from California that in view of what the Supreme Court has said in a prior case, I have little doubt that at least some portions of the bill, such as those already indicated, will be decided by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, and particularly those provisions to which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] referred. I think that then the cooperative associations will not be so keen for this legislation.

What they want is to get into the boards of trade and exchanges, and there get the benefit of their splendid organization and record for reliability and integrity and of their experience, gained during all the years in which they have built up their business, and then rebate to their members the profits which they earn and which the members of the board of trade themselves are not permitted to rebate under their rules and organization.

Mr. CURRY. I do not know how the court would rule upon this bill, but I do know this, that there is a great deal of talk in the House about the constitutionality of bills, and about the number of bills passed by Congress that are held to be unconstitutional by the courts, when as a matter of fact from the adoption of the Constitution down to the present moment there have been only 39 acts of Congress that have been held to be unconstitutional by the court. Now the Supreme Court is very careful——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is not asking a question. He is making a statement. I yielded to him only for a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It has been strenuously argued in the debate on this bill that recent decisions of the Supreme Court attach a great deal of importance to the conclusions of Congress when the constitutionality of an act is in doubt, and that a straight declaration as to an ultimate fact will serve to show that the matter is within the jurisdiction of Congress. The exact language of the Supreme Court in its last decision on this subject, in Block v. Hirsh (256 U. S. 135), is as follows:

> No doubt it is true that a legislative declaration of facts that are material only as the ground for enacting a rule of law, for instance, that a certain use is a public one, may not be held conclusive by the courts. * * * But a declaration by a legislature concerning public conditions that by necessity and duty it must know is entitled at least to great respect. In this instance Congress stated a publicly notorious and almost world-wide fact.

This case involved the Ball Rent Act, and the "notorious fact" was the emergency growing out of the war.

Under the doctrine of the Supreme Court in that case any statements in this bill would be only prima facie and entitled merely to the respect which they might deserve. Proof to the contrary may be shown and taken into consideration by the court, and if such proof shall overcome the presumption of any statement by Congress proper consideration would doubtless be given to such proof by the court. The testimony before the committees in Congress has clearly shown that very rarely have fluctuations been due to manipulation, but, on the contrary, the great majority of these fluctuations of prices are caused by conditions over which the members of the various boards of trade have no control whatever.

These conditions may be world-wide, or arise at any moment in any part of the world and exert more or less influence over conditions in any board of trade in this or any other country.

The bill is further based on the ultimate fact which Congress assumes to lay down in section 3, that such fluctuations in prices upon the exchanges are an obstruction to and a burden upon interstate commerce in grain and the products and by-products thereof. Of what avail is this recital when it is shown that the fluctuations on which the charge must be made were caused by world-wide conditions or conditions in such far-away countries as India, Argentina, and Australia, which are entirely without the control of the members of any board of trade in the United States? Will those conditions be the basis for the so-called burden and obstruction upon interstate commerce over which Congress should take jurisdiction? And should the members of the various boards of trade be punished for having part in any of the transactions connected with such fluctuations?

Again, in this same section 3 there is a provision that transactions in grain involving the sale thereof for future delivery as commonly conducted on boards of trade, known as "futures," are affected with a national public interest. This assumes and implies that these transactions are legitimate, are for the public benefit, and therefore should be protected by the law, and should be so regulated that they may be of some benefit to the people without possibility of injury to them. And, again, in this same section appears the phrase that the prices involved in such transactions are generally quoted and disseminated throughout the United States and in foreign countries for the information of the producer and consumer of grain, and to facilitate the movement thereof in interstate commerce, and are utilized by shippers, dealers, millers, and so forth. In other words, these transactions by the exchanges are recorded as worthy, legitimate, and beneficial to the public and the trade to such an extent that they should be protected and regulated for the benefit of the people, but in the latter part of this same section the fluctuations which are inherent in such business, over which neither the exchanges nor the members nor those dealing with such exchanges have any control, are said to be burdens upon commerce and are made the basis not only for the regulation of the business itself but also for the punishment, as for crimes and misdemeanors, of those operating on the boards. Nor are ordinary rules in criminal jurisprudence ample for the terrible offense of violating this act. One who carelessly delivers for transmission false or misleading reports on conditions that tend to affect the price of grain may be fined $10,000 or imprisoned one year, or both, if the court should so direct.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the question has been raised as to the constitutionality of this bill. When the bill was passed before, it attempted to regulate the grain exchanges by taxing them; that is, by fixing a tax upon certain transactions, providing they had not complied with certain requirements. Now its enemies want some foundation for believing that the Congress could do that. We all know that the oleomargarine law is more or less of a regulation by taxation. However, we are not technical; we propose to comply. The court has said how we can do this if it is necessary, and we are law-abiding and follow our courts. At the same time that the Committee on Agriculture brought in and this House passed this bill we passed the packers' control act, and with equal assurance that we had precedents for the constitutionality of that act under the commerce clause of the Constitution. The Supreme Court upheld the packers' control act, which the same gentlemen who are fighting this bill condemned and were sure would be declared unconstitutional. But the court, in knocking out the section of the grain futures act which was really material, called attention to the fact that if grain was in interstate commerce we could reach the situation in this bill; and this bill is strictly following the dictation, you might say, of the Supreme Court, if you want to regulate this industry.

Now, we come to the question, is there any occasion for regulation? I say that this bill has had more consideration from the constitutional standpoint than pretty nearly any other measure that I know of, and not only have we considered the precedents, but we have had the legislation and have gone to the court itself for a precedent, and have followed the decision of the Supreme Court and the facts in writing this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case which tested the last law say that it is questionable whether or not the provisions compelling members of cooperative associations to be admitted into the boards of trade may properly be in the legislation?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I do not think that is in the opinion, and I am fairly familiar with the opinion.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think the gentleman will find it is so.

Mr. TINCHER. Now I want to call attention to the facts as to whether there is any necessity for this legislation. A great many people in this country are producing wheat. Is there any occasion for the grain exchanges? The authors of this bill do not advocate the prevention of speculation in grain. Nobody has attempted to do that. But the grain gamblers of Chicago, not the exchanges, decline to recognize the difference between a man who gambles or speculates in grain and the man who manipulates the price of grain. The man who manipulates the price of grain is not a gambler; he is not sport enough to go in and take his chance of making money either by buying or selling grain, but he has the machinery there by which, by manipulation, he can fix the price, and he fixes it to the detriment of every producer of bread and every consumer of bread in America.

Let me call your attention to just what happened. On the 15th day of May of this year this law was held unconstitutional. This country produces on an average 850,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum. From the 15th day of May until the 31st day of May, without any law to curb them, the grain manipulators of Chicago—not in the whole United States but in the city of Chicago—sold on the Chicago market nearly 8,000,000,000 bushels of wheat in the form of May options. What for? To depress the price of cash grain. Did they do it? Yes. In that 15 days' time they depressed the price of cash grain 36 cents a bushel and stole from every American farmer that had a bushel of wheat 36 cents; and I defy any man on this floor defending those dealers to call attention to one case where they ever gave the benefit of 1 cent of that in the form of breadstuffs and bread to any man, woman, or child. I may be a little intense on this subject. We had hearings for six months. We had the dealers and grafters before us. We listened to their story. I heard them admit manipulating the grain market in America for the English grain buyers. I heard them admit that they could at any time manipulate the grain market and fix the price of the farmer's grain, not 100 men but a dozen men in Chicago.

This matter has been before the Congress in some form for 30 years. The Senate amendments do not change the substance of the bill. The Senate amendments at any rate do not strengthen the bill, but it is the only chance that we have for legislation that can possibly affect this year's grain crop. Yesterday, through the magnificent manipulation of our Chicago friends, they had the price of wheat cheaper than it has ever been since the war.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I wish I could give all my time to the Minneapolis and Chicago grain exchanges, but, my goodness, I have been raising wheat for those institutions for 20 years, and I do not want to give up all of my wheat and all of my little 10 minutes' time. [Applause.] I tell you, my friends, the American people are tired of this kind of thing, and you can not blame them. I am very glad that this bill is in such shape that we can accept the Senate amendments and have a signed bill. You did not hear any complaining except from these dealers and grafters from the 24th day of December until the 15th day of May. The bill was in operation then. They were under regulation, and they were not stealing the grain crop. But the law went out at a bad time for this year's crop. If there is anything wrong with the law now, let us pass it and get it to the Supreme Court in time to comply with any other requirements they have before the next crop. Surely no one except the manipulators want to have this practice continued. Why should every farmer and every bread user pay them toll?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Do I understand the gentleman as not desiring to yield? In view of the fact that so many of my constituents pay such fine prices to his constituents for grain I would think he would like to yield. Does not the gentleman know that potatoes are bringing far less to-day than they were bringing one year ago? Yet is there a potato exchange dealing in futures upon potatoes?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not know how to trace the potato market, but I do know how they fix the price of wheat, and the hearings on this bill will demonstrate it to any man who will read them, and he will know that the price of wheat is fixed by manipulators from the gentleman's section of the country; and when he says they pay us fine prices for wheat, he means fine in the sense that they are so small you can hardly notice them. That is the only kind of price they ever pay for wheat. If the gentleman will compare the price they pay for wheat with the price at which they sell flour, he can account for their being millionaires while our people are still struggling along trying to make an honest living.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. TINCHER. I thought I did.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman knows that there are no exchanges handling potatoes.

Mr. TINCHER. I know they claim there are potato manipulators.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. With a futures market?

Mr. TINCHER. I expect those fellows up at St. Paul and Chicago that have been stealing wheat for so many years have got on to it so that they can steal from the men who raise potatoes, and perhaps some day it will be necessary to pass a law to stop them from stealing the potato crop from the man who raises the potatoes. The man who buys potatoes to eat surely does not get them too cheap.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So far as I am concerned, if it will help the gentleman back home to say these things about our constituents, I have no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. You can not help me back home. The only rivalry in my district now is between me and my opponent as to which one can say it the loudest, and who can be the most effective here. Everybody has known it for 20 years. Everybody in my section of the country has known that the price of the products produced in my section has been fixed by a few of your constituents for a long time. [Applause and laughter.]

Under leave to extend, I simply want to say the amendments were agreed to and the bill finally passed within a very few moments by more than a 3 to 1 majority.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I desire to invite your attention to page 15 of the bill. I think this section contains elements of such importance that I shall take your time for a moment to read the whole of section 9:

SEC. 9. Any person who shall violate the provisions of section 4 of this act, or who shall fail to evidence any contract mentioned in said section by a memorandum in writing as therein required, or who shall knowingly or carelessly deliver for transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce by telegraph, telephone, wireless, or other means of communication, false, misleading, or inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of grain in interstate commerce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

I called the attention of the House to certain portions of this penal section when the bill was up before, and I desire now to call your attention to the fact that you are making subject to a $10,000 penalty and to a year's imprisonment any person who shall "carelessly" deliver misleading information by telegraph or post office. Note especially that the word "carelessly" has never appeared before in a penal statute of the United States.

If you mail a newspaper that has in it unintentionally misleading information and do not carefully examine the market reports to see that they are correct, you commit a $10,000 misdemeanor. There are too many unenforceable laws already in existence without adding this additional one.

I want to urge you before voting finally upon this bill to have consideration for the fact that you are creating further loose legislation in reference to the penal laws of the United States.

You can not find in the criminal code of the United States any offense which is committed "carelessly," and you will be putting on the statute books not only a bill which I consider unconstitutional but a bill which for the first time imposes a $10,000 fine and a year's imprisonment for somebody doing something "carelessly" without any criminal intent or without that degree of negligence which amounts to criminal intent in the law. Therefore I say this bill is utterly vicious.

When the bill passed the House I discussed its assumption of broad powers over business and stated that in my opinion it trespassed so far on State's rights as to be unconstitutional. This is a matter for State and not Federal legislation. I shall vote against the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to delay the passage of this bill further. I might detract from the splendid speech delivered by my colleague from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]. I simply want to express the hope that this bill will soon become a law. I regard it as another one of the great achievements of this Congress, in behalf of the agricultural interests of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I sincerely hope the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] will prevail and that the Senate amendments will be speedily agreed to. By so doing we shall add another constructive measure to the long list of accomplishments wrought by this Congress on behalf of the American farmer.

This is no new subject. For 30 years the American Congress has been grappling with the question of saving the producers and consumers of the country from the manipulations of the light-fingered gentry who "toil not neither do they spin," but who buy and sell a thousand times the farmers' grain without ever having a single bushel delivered or to deliver. Some of the gentlemen who are opposing this measure would leave the impression that we are trying to destroy the great marketing systems of the country. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are only seeking to eliminate those harmful, speculative, gambling, and manipulative transactions which have always resulted in decreased prices to the farmer and increased prices to the consumer. In my judgment, this bill will accomplish that purpose. My only regret is that the former bill which we passed was found by the Supreme Court to have an unconstitutional section. Our farmers have sadly needed some such relief during this period of agricultural depression. The law which we passed many months ago was on the 15th of May of this year declared to be unconstitutional because we had attempted to regulate the exchanges by the exercise of the taxing power; that is, by imposing a tax upon certain transactions. The law was in operation from August 24, 1921, to May 15, 1922. During that period there was a greatly increased stabilization of the market. Immediately following the action of the Supreme Court there followed a great depression in the grain market. On the Chicago market alone nearly 8,000,000,000 bushels of wheat were sold in the form of May options, resulting in a depression of more than 30 cents per bushel for cash grain within a period of 15 days. This is very significant in view of the fact that we only produce about 850,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum in the whole country. It is such practices as this which we seek to curb by this bill.

I regard this as a constructive measure of most far-reaching importance. It must be borne in mind that we have safeguarded the hedge and other practices which it is admitted are necessary to provide a liquid market. The six months' hearings before our Committee on Agriculture not only disclosed the necessity for the preservation of the hedge but also thoroughly demonstrated the dire need for the elimination of the injurious and harmful practices which we have sought to eliminate by this legislation. I am proud to have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture which considered this subject and drafted this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to take this opportunity to say a further word about the work we have been trying to do for agriculture. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace summed it all up in his annual report to the President when he said of the work of the Republican Congress affecting agriculture, "Never in the same length of time did Congress ever give more serious attention to farm needs. All of this legislation is of a constructive character, and will be more helpful than is now realized." From many quarters has come criticism of this Congress because we have seemed to single out the farmers as the special object of our consideration. I have no apology to offer for any of my activities in this direction. Agriculture is our great basic industry, and as such should take the high place to which it is entitled. The American farmer should be given the recognition his importance justifies. Farmers have always been the great stabilizing force in Government. Droughts and crop failures may come; prices may fall and leave him nothing for his endless days of toil; pests and disease may ravish his crops and stock; others who live by their wits may profit by his labor and gloat over his loss, but he never strikes nor seeks by word or deed to foment a revolution. He is always true, as dependable and fixed as the North Star. If some of these radicals who are trying to tie up the country to-day because they want to work four hours and get paid for eight would, for just one year, put in as many hours of honest toil as does the American farmer, this country would be well on the road to recovery from its recent debauch.

Mr. Speaker, why should we not give serious consideration to the farmer? He buys 40 per cent of all the manufactured products of the country. He is the greatest single-class purchaser of textile goods. He is the greatest buyer of leather goods in America. The American farmer is second only to the railroads as a consumer of steel and iron products, being the ultimate consumer of 30 per cent of the steel and iron products of the country. The American farmer consumes 60 per cent of the lumber products of the country. He consumes exclusively the output of over 600 factories making farm implements. He is the largest consumer of motor vehicles—he buys 30 per cent of the annual output of motor vehicles and motor accessories. The American farmer owns 3,000,000 motor vehicles, which is more than are owned by all the rest of the world outside of the United States. In addition to being the Nation's greatest producer, the American farmer is the Nation's greatest consumer. Everything which the farmer produces and sells must be hauled to the markets. Everything which the farmer buys must be hauled to him. Therefore the farmer is the largest shipper of freight in the United States.

The Republican administration found agriculture on the very brink of bankruptcy, due to the unexpected, unwarranted, and uneconomic deflation of agricultural credits during the latter part of the last administration. The short-sighted policy of the Federal Reserve Board, with respect to agriculture in restricting credits at the wrong time, is very largely responsible for the present condition of the American farmer. He had raised a large crop in 1920 at a time when farm labor, farm implements, and other material entering into the production of his crop were at the highest point. Before he could harvest he was given to understand that his loans would be called; that his notes in the banks would not be renewed; that new credit could not be extended. In addition to this was the threat of large imports because of the Underwood tariff law which gave no protection to agriculture.

It was in this weakened condition in which the Republican Party found our farmers when it came into power. The President, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Congress set about at once to solve the problem and bring about permanent relief. The Republican Congress which adjourned March 4, 1921, had passed a farmers' tariff bill, but President Wilson vetoed it. The bill was very promptly reintroduced in the special session called by President Harding April 11, 1921, and became a law May 27, 1921. The principal reason for calling the special session was to pass the emergency tariff law for the protection of our agricultural interests. The stabilizing effect was apparent within 30 days. One shudders to think what condition our farmers would have been in had it not been for the emergency tariff. And yet we have some near statesmen here and elsewhere who still cling to the old doctrine that we should have no tariff on agricultural products. It might prove temporarily helpful to the consumers, but God help the farmer. His buying power cut off by reason of his inability to compete with foreign production, the factories and mills in this country would of necessity close or greatly curtail their operations, and thus send to the bread line millions of American workers. The farmer is seeking no special favors. He is only asking to have agriculture put upon a firm basis in order that he may earn a reasonable return for his labor and investment. He wants some of this lost motion removed that now exists in the handling of his products. There are too many "handlers" between the producer and consumer, too many living off of both who have nothing invested but a desk, rent, and a telephone, too many who demand toll before the great flow of foodstuffs can proceed from the farm to the table.

What else have we done for the farmer? We revived the War Finance Corporation and so amended it as to permit the extension of credits for not to exceed three years to any person, firm, or corporation in the United States dealing in or marketing farm products. This act alone saved thousands of our farmers from ruin.

We passed a law increasing the interest rate of farm-loan bank bonds to 5½ per cent so as to make the bonds more attractive. The increase was made, however, without advancing the rate to the farm borrower.

We passed a law diverting $25,000,000 from the Federal Treasury for additional working capital for the farm-loan banks. We amended the Federal reserve act so as to make provision for placing a "dirt" farmer on the Federal Reserve Board. Had agriculture had a representative on the board in 1920 it is unlikely that the price of farm products would have suffered the collapse that followed the deflation policy of the board. It is the first time agriculture has been given recognition on such a board.

We passed the cooperative marketing bill, which authorizes those engaged in the production of agricultural products and live stock to act together in associations in collectively preparing for the market and in handling and marketing in interstate and foreign commerce all agricultural products and live stock. Recognizing that our present system of distribution is weak as well as expensive, we have, through this bill, paved the way for a comprehensive cooperative marketing program.

We had the courage to tackle and settle the long drawn-out controversy relative to the packers. We passed a sane packer bill, one calculated to prevent abuses long complained of by producers, but which avoids the radical and destructive remedies which were proposed. The act prevents any unfair practices or the giving of any preference to any person or locality. It also prohibits the doing of anything which would tend to control prices or create a monopoly. The magnitude of the task of administering this act is indicated by the fact that under its provisions the Department of Agriculture has supervision over 69 yards, which during the year 1921 handled over 82,000,000 head of live stock. The Secretary of Agriculture states that the department has had the fullest cooperation from the large packing interests and from the owners of the large stockyards. The opposition to the act has come largely from commission merchants, small traders, and marketing agencies. The good influence of this bill is reflected in the present price of live stock.

We passed a bill making $74,000,000 available for road construction work in the several States, with special provision for farm-to-market highways.

One of the most serious problems affecting agriculture is that of freight rates. The farmer is practically the only producer who pays the freight on what he sells as well as upon what he buys. President Harding in his first message to Congress, which he convened in special session, emphasized the fact that American agriculture was being endangered "through the high cost of transportation from the farm to the market." Facts were speedily presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission which resulted in a long series of rate reductions that directly benefited the farming classes. This important problem is still commanding the serious consideration of administrative and legislative leaders in sympathy with the agricultural interests in the hope that further beneficial reduction in freight rates may soon follow.

The Congress has provided liberally for the various activities of the Department of Agriculture and has shown a more sympathetic interest than any Congress since the beginning of the Government.

The country is to be congratulated upon the splendid service being rendered the whole country by Secretary Wallace. He has brought to the department the wisdom of years of experience with farm and live-stock interests. Vast economies have been effected in every department while efficiency has been restored and increased. The business side of farming has been recognized by the Executive as well as the legislative branch of the Government. These accomplishments of a Republican Congress and a Republican administration have served to give agriculture a "new birth" which can not fail to result in great good to all the people. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, while I have my doubts about some of the sections of this bill, as I have explained before, on the whole I am in favor of its passage because I think that the evil sought to be remedied is a very grievous one. That is all I want to say about the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ELLIS].

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I need not say that I am opposed to this bill. When it was rushed through this House some weeks ago I opposed its passage with all the energy and force at my command. My efforts and the efforts of those who cooperated with me were futile then; it is futile to interpose objection now.

By the time the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] has presented his version of the case, in his usual calm and dispassionate way [laughter]—has drawn his word picture of grafters, robbers, and malefactors operating the Chicago Exchange—by that time "conscience has fled to brutish beasts, and men have lost their reason."

Notwithstanding, the bill is vicious—vicious in principle, vicious in substance and in detail. It constitutes an undeserved assault upon private business; works a wholly unwarranted, indiscriminate, bureaucratic interference with legitimate private enterprises that are conducted honestly, by upright business men, upon sound business principles. It is, moreover, a shameful violation of a party pledge, a contemptuous disregard of an administration program. It will not help in the least degree farmers who farm farms, who are the producers of grain. It will restrict their market and work positive injury to them. The hearings establish that beyond doubt and beyond peradventure. The amendments of the bill by the Senate, in which we are asked to concur, will, however, besides increasing its power to do mischief in other ways, render it more helpful to those who would farm farmers. I trust it will be held unconstitutional; unconstitutional not only as to those parts referred to by the gentlemen who have preceded me but unconstitutional wholly and altogether.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on the motion to agree to the Senate amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HILL. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 94, noes 34.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Several gentlemen have left the Hall of the House supposing that there would be no other roll call this afternoon. I do not know what other business there is to be transacted. If the gentleman insists upon his point of no quorum I shall have to make a motion to adjourn. I do not know whether it will carry or not. A number of gentlemen have left under the impression that there would be no other roll call.

Mr. HILL. I renew my point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold that for the purpose of allowing a conference report to be presented?

Mr. HILL. I withhold the point.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withhold my motion.

Subsequently,

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland withdraws the point of no quorum. The ayes have it, and the Senate amendments are agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT—RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the river and harbor bill. I was going to ask immediate consideration, but if that is impossible I will present it for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report for printing under the rule.

THE VERA CRUZ CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report respecting claims of the nationals of Spain, France, Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Italy, Cuba, and the United States, arising out of the occupation by the American forces of Vera Cruz, Mexico, in 1914, with a request that the findings of the Naval Board in the settlement of these claims, as indicated therein, be adopted, and that the Congress authorize the appropriation of the sum necessary to pay the awards rendered by that board, to cover an indemnity to Valentin Perez, and to compensate the claimants for the value of liquors destroyed under military orders, and also the sum approved by the Secretary of War as an adequate payment in satisfaction of the claims of the Vera Cruz Terminal Co. (Ltd.).

I recommend that, in order to effect a settlement of these claims in accordance with the recommendation of the Acting Secretary of State, the Congress, as an act of grace, and without reference to the legal liability of the United States in the premises, authorize an appropriation in the sum of $45,518.59.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 14, 1922.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois). The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was unable to vote for the recent fact-finding commission bill, passed by the House a few days ago, and I especially regret that I can not vote for the pending bill. The fact-finding bill and this bill are fitting companions. Called hastily to this House to meet a great emergency in the scarcity of coal which threatened the country, with pictures of suffering women and children, idle mills, closed shops, and the instrumentalties of commerce at a standstill, we were asked to vote for the fact-finding commission bill as the first remedy for this situation.

To avoid freezing we need coal. That bill does not contain a paragraph under which the suffering people of the country can get a pound of coal, but it provides for nine commissioners who are to make a "sweeping" investigation of all questions concerning the production of coal, wages, and so forth, and make their first report on the 1st of January, 1923, by which time the large majority of the suffering people of the country will be frozen to death, if conditions are unchanged. Under that bill the citizen of Staunton, Va., in January next, who sends to Miller's coal yard for coal, or the citizen of Lexington, Va., who sends to Davidson Bros. for coal, or to any other coal dealer in the country, will have the comforting response: "We regret that we can not supply you with coal, for we have none; but we can send you 5, 10, 15, or perhaps 20 volumes of reports of the fact-finding commission that will tell you why the strike occurred and why you can not get coal." What a mockery!

An examination of this bill shows in its last analysis no relief to the people; as it came into the House it carried an appropriation of $500,000, to be drawn from the tax-ridden people of this country, for the purpose of giving nine men, to be appointed by the President, the opportunity of writing reports on coal conditions and strikes, telling why they had occurred, and why we can get no coal. The people asked for bread and they are given a stone.

The present bill is a fit companion for that. They are twin brothers in the do-less policy of the Republican administration. This bill contains also provisions for fact finding largely duplicated in the former bill. It provides for the appointment of a fuel administrator, who is to ascertain the available supply of coal in the country, whether there is a shortage in any part of the country, the fields of production and where such production may be transported, "the prices normally and usually charged for such coal and other fuel and whether current prices, considering the costs of production and distribution, are just and reasonable," while the Interstate Commerce Commission, to whom the Federal fuel administrator must report these facts, is authorized "to issue such order or orders for priorities in car service, embargoes, and other suitable measures in favor of or against any carrier, person, corporation, etc." This bill also carries an appropriation of $250,000, and in it an emergency is declared to exist.

It is interesting also to find that in four sections of it the expression "to promote the general welfare" is found. "Insatiate Archer! Would not one suffice?"

My first reason for opposing these bills, that are supposed to be for the purpose of relieving the people against the coal strike and its consequent results, is that when the first bill was passed in the House the bituminous coal strike had ended, and it was quite apparent that the anthracite strike was on the speedy road to settlement, and while we are considering this bill the anthracite strike is said to be awaiting only some technical formalities before mining will be resumed in that field.

So why pass bills carrying $750,000 to relieve the people from strikes which are already ended? Are taxes so low and money so plentiful as to be wasted in these measures for no practical benefit to the people? Why lock the stable doors after the horses are gone?

But the real objection to this bill is that it gets you nowhere, and gets you no coal, and creates no powers to execute its provisions which we do not already fully possess. Why a fuel administrator with a great salary, with all the machinery which he will call into being, when the Interstate Commerce Commission has that machinery already organized and every power necessary to execute the provisions of this bill? My able colleague, Mr. MOORE of Virginia, has so aptly shown this that I quote from his speech just made on this bill:

> This measure creates a fuel distributor and provides that he shall find the facts in reference to the production of coal, the normal price of coal, the current price of coal, and the localities where and the persons by whom coal is needed. I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission—I am talking about the matter of power and not the matter of penalties—under the present law, with such unlimited discretion, can now do all that it will be able to do after we have passed this bill. * * * I venture to state that, in my humble judgment, there is not the slighest excuse for building up this new agency when we can do everything that is sought to be done, and I think more effectively, by trusting and relying upon an agency we already have.

If we have an agency already in existence to do the work, why spend $250,000 to create a new one which can not do as quickly and as efficiently what the present constituted agency can do? It simply means more offices that are not needed except to build up the waning fortunes of a derelict party that has been faithless in their obligations to the people.

But the outstanding objection to the bill is the claim by Congress of the power to fix the price of coal. The fuel administrator, as we have seen, is directed to ascertain whether the price of coal at the mines is "just and reasonable," and the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to grant priorities in shipments and to declare embargoes, the object being, as declared, to prevent extortion. This means that the fuel administrator can declare what the price of coal shall be at the mines in order to enable it to be carried in interstate commerce. This is a power the Federal Government has never claimed and does not possess. If the Government of the United States can fix the price of coal, it can fix the price of wheat, and can tell the farmer to go on and sow and reap, because the land is his, but when he comes to sell the product of his farm he must be content to surrender his right to sell at any price "except as determined by a wheat distributer of the United States Government." Exactly the same principle applies as to tobacco, cattle, sheep, hogs—indeed everything.

Gentlemen seem to think we are still in a state of war, when the Government can fix prices. Thanks to American valor we are at peace with the whole world, and we want and demand peace legislation and not the extravagances of war legislation.

The argument is this: Congress has the exclusive power to regulate interstate commerce. Practically all coal moves in interstate commerce. Therefore Congress can exclude from interstate commerce all coal which is not sold at a price deemed "just and reasonable" by the coal distributor, and as coal can not be sold if transportation is denied it, and the fuel distributor can fix the price as the condition upon which it can be moved, then by this bill Congress seeks to fix the price of coal. But Congress has no power under the Constitution to fix the price of coal or of any article, except under the stress of war, and I am not aware that it has ever attempted it before in times of peace.

Under what provision of the Constitution can this extraordinary power be claimed? No one has suggested such a power in Congress in this discussion. Under the antitrust act Congress has power to prevent combinations from monopolizing trade and by the organization of trusts to suppress competition and enhance the price of an article to the public, but it has never before entered the field of fixing the price of an article.

This bill simply follows a custom, which in recent years has steadily grown in the country, of coming to Congress for relief whether Congress has the power or not. If the fixing of the price of coal is demanded and is necessary to prevent extortion, this can be done, but it can be done only by the States. I am not enamored of the principle upon which this has been recognized as a power in the States, but I merely state it as a fact that at common law the States have a right to fix the price of certain articles, and in England and in America it has been exercised in a few particulars. I need not discuss the development of this principle through our constitutional decisions. Suffice it to say that the courts have held that where an article is affected with a public use or a public interest, there the State has the power to control it and fix the price. The well-known case of Munn v. Illinois stands out preeminently as settling this doctrine. The State of Illinois in this case passed a law to regulate the prices to be charged for wheat-elevator services in that State. The law was contested as being unconstitutional. The Supreme Court held it to be a valid exercise of power by the State.

The doctrine of the principal case was reexamined and affirmed in Budd v. New York (1892, 143 U. S. 517), and was given an even wider application in Brass v. North Dakota (1894, 153 U. S. 391). As to what businesses besides those mentioned in the principal case are affected with a public interest see Boone County v. Patterson (1878, 98 U. S. 403) (log driving); Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler (1884, 110 U. S. 347) (waterworks); Express cases (1886, 117 U. S. 1) (express companies); Sands v. Manistee River Improvement Co. (1911, 252 Ill. 398) (life insurance companies).

The whole law governing business affected with a public interest is fully and admirably treated in Wyman, Public Service Corporations. See also an able article by C. K. Burdick on "The Origin of the Peculiar Duties of Public Service Corporations," in Columbia Law Review, xi, 515, 616, 743.

We are not concerned with the question of whether these cases have extended the doctrine too far or not, though frankly I am compelled to say that it seems to me the courts have approached the danger line, if they have not already passed it. But these cases show beyond question that the doctrine which Congress is asserting in this bill to fix the price of coal is one which the Supreme Court has recognized as belonging to the States, and very properly so. The States can do anything not denied to them by the Constitution of the United States. The Congress can do nothing except what is granted to it; and therefore, if to prevent extortion to the people the price of coal must be regulated, why come to Congress to secure what is denied to Congress to grant, and why not go to the States, in whom the power to grant relief is recognized by the Supreme Court? Besides the question of power residing in the States to do this, a great practical advantage is seen in it. The cost of coal in its production varies in each State. Had Congress the power to fix the price of coal the price would have to be uniform. A "just and reasonable" price in one State might be an unjust and unreasonable price in another. This obligation, therefore, rests with the States, and the responsibility upon the coal-bearing States of relieving the people of the country of threatened extortion resides nowhere else. But to this view it is answered that the States will not act; that they would hesitate to do this thing; that they lack initiative; that they are weak and vacillating and fear to take such a step. Much of this may be admitted. The tremendous trend in the last 25 years from the States to Washington to cure all evils has caused an anemic condition in the States; they hesitate to do what is their peculiar work on the plea that it can be done so much more effectively and expeditiously in Washington. We have forgotten that it is not a question of preference but of power, and the Constitution fixes the limits of State and National power. Let it be recognized once for all that the powers possessed by the States are to be restored to them in their ancient vigor, and that they are not to be emasculated by withdrawing those powers from them and taking them to Washington.

The laboring man from whom a gill of blood is extracted every day for a week is weakened and his energy depleted by such a process. Stop the process and let the life-giving fluid remain and the weakened body will be restored to its former strength. For years this process has been going on. The life blood of the States has been taken from them and transfused into the national power at Washington until they have been weakened in their morale, while their powers have slipped from them. Let these powers be restored and the ancient vigor of the States will be restored and the National Government strengthened in the diminution of its bureaucratic tendencies.

But more than that! What is really the object and scheme of this bill? Its friends can not deny, indeed some of them have admitted it in this discussion, that its object is to fix the price of coal at the mines and elsewhere, which Congress has no power to do, by the use of the commerce power. It is an attempt to do an unconstitutional thing which belongs only to the States by the use of a constitutional means—the commerce power. It is another attempt to do by indirection what can not be done directly, and it is in direct opposition to the child-labor decisions recently handed down by Justice Day and Chief Justice Taft. In this discussion gentlemen have, with great alacrity, been quoting some recent decisions of the Supreme Court, which I will notice hereafter, but the absence of the child-labor decisions, which control this case, has been singularly conspicuous. The first child-labor decision was under a law which attempted to exclude from interstate commerce any package of goods made in a factory in which a child under 14 years of age had worked. The practical unlimited power of Congress over commerce was recognized in that decision. The right to control such labor was equally recognized as a State function that Congress had no power to regulate. The real object of the law, the court found, was not to regulate commerce, but to regulate child labor; to use a constitutional agency to accomplish an unconstitutional object, and with an emphasis and power worthy of the best days of that high tribunal they declared that a constitutional agency could not be used by indirection to accomplish an unconstitutional object. Justice Day in that case uses this striking language:

> The far-reaching result of upholding the act can not be more plainly indicated than by pointing out that if Congress can thus regulate matters intrusted to local authority by prohibition of the movement of commodities in interstate commerce all freedom of commerce will be at an end and the power of the States over local matters may be eliminated, and thus our system of government be practically destroyed.

Chief Justice Taft in Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co., commenting on the Dagenhart case, uses this emphatic language:

> Yet Congress threatened to stop interstate commerce in ordinary and necessary commodities, unobjectionable as subjects of transportation, and to deny the same to the people of a State in order to coerce them into compliance with Congress's regulation of State concerns, the court said this was not in fact regulation of interstate commerce, but rather that of State concerns and was invalid.

The analogy here is complete. The right to fix the price of coal is a State concern (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, and cases cited above) and properly so, for the cost of production of coal varies in each State; and Congress by this bill, in attempting to usurp that power of the State to regulate the price of coal, does so by invoking the commerce power. It uses a constitutional agency—the commerce power—to accomplish an unconstitutional object. The discussion of this bill discloses the production of no case that claims the power in Congress to fix the price of coal; but the discussion does disclose a confusion of thought in attempting to apply the principle of certain cases extending the power of Congress as to rate fixing in the instrumentalities of commerce, to the right to fix the price of an article before it becomes an article of commerce.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois relies upon a quotation from Chief Justice Taft's opinion in the stockyard case, wherein he said:

> Another evil which it was sought to provide against by this act was exorbitant charges. * * * If they be exorbitant or unreasonable, they are an undue burden on the commerce which the stockyards are intended to facilitate as an instrumentality of commerce.

The court regards the stockyards as a link in the transportation of commerce, and as the power to regulate rates of carriers is recognized the power necessarily attached to the stockyards one of the links in that transportation. In all of the cases referred to in the discussion, none touch the right of Congress to interfere with the article before it becomes an article of commerce or after commerce has ended.

The case of Block v. Hirsh (256 U. S. 155) in no wise affects this question. That was a municipal law enacted by Congress for the District of Columbia, which it had a right to do, just as the State of New York had the right to enact such a law. It is founded on the doctrine set forth in Munn against Illinois, that during the war, when the city of Washington was crowded with employees of the Government, who were unable to get quarters, that all rooms, houses, and shelter were affected with a public use. The war created the emergency, and the emergency affected apartments, rooms, and houses with a public use; but there was no emergency in that case that gave to Congress the power to pass that law which it would not have had without it. If an emergency can create a power when none existed and Congress can, in the caption of a bill, "declare a national emergency to exist," of course the power of Congress is supreme and unlimited.

The only other case cited in this discussion bearing upon the doctrine that an emergency may create power where none exists, is the Legal Tender case (110 U. S. 450), cited by Mr. GRAHAM, of Illinois. It will be seen by an examination of that case that the court rested its decision on the power to borrow money, to issue circulating notes, to coin money, and applying to these powers the coefficient clause, giving the power to Congress "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers"; and after a full discussion of the grounds upon which the court rested its decision, Justice Gray, delivering the opinion of the court, adds:

Such being our conclusion in matter of law, the question whether, at any particular time, in war or in peace, the "exigency" is such, by reason of unusual and pressing demands on the resources of the Government, or the inadequacy of the supply of gold and silver coin to furnish the currency needed for the Government and for the people, that it is, as a matter of fact, wise and expedient to resort to this means, is a political question, to be determined by Congress when the question of exigency arises, and not a judicial question to be afterwards passed upon by the courts.

No question of a new congressional power due to an exigency arises here, but merely the assertion of the plain and simple principle that when Congress deems it proper to legislate under acknowledged powers their discretion can not be questioned. There is not a trace of attempted assertion of unauthorized powers because of an exigency in this case.

On the other hand, the doctrine of supposed exigency has been stoutly denied. Chief Justice White in delivering the opinion of the court in Wilson v. New (243 U. S. 348), says:

Nor is it an answer to this view to suggest that the situation was one of emergency, and that emergency can not be made the source of power. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2.) The proposition begs the question, since although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless emergency may afford a reason for the exertion of a living power already enjoyed.

In the same case Justice Day in a dissenting opinion, page 370, said:

If I am right in the conclusion that this legislation amounted to a deprivation of property without due process of law, no emergency and no consequence, whatever their character, could justify the violation of constitutional rights. The argument of justification by emergency was made and answered in this court in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall. 2), decided more than 50 years ago.

Justice Pitney in the same case in a dissenting opinion, page 376, uses this language:

The suggestion that it (the law) was passed to prevent a threatened strike, and in this sense to remove an obstruction from the path of commerce, while true in fact is immaterial in law. It amounts to no more than saying that it was enacted to take care of an emergency. But an emergency can neither create a power nor excuse a defiance of the limitations upon the powers of the Government. (Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 121.)

The doctrine of emergency, to which reference has been made in the Wilson against New case, is from the opinion of Justice Davis in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall. 120), where discussing the principles of the Constitution and the men who made it, said:

Those great and good men foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish ends deemed just and proper; and that the principles of constitutional liberty would be in peril unless established by irrepealable law. The history of the world had taught them what was done in the past might be attempted in the future. The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism, but the theory of necessity on which it is based is false, for the Government within the Constitution has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence, as has been happily proved by the result of the great effort to throw off its just authority.

For these reasons I feel compelled to vote against this bill, as I did against the fact finding commission bill.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Sixty-seventh Congress. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, it is customary for all parties and all candidates to proclaim most emphatically before election that they stand for economy. They are generally honest in their intentions and sincere in the expectation that they can accomplish such a result.

A Republican's opponent, however, can hardly expect that a Democratic minority, even if he is a member of it, can dictate the financial policy of the Government. His claim must therefore be that by the election of a Democratic majority—of course including himself—the desired economies will be effected.

ECONOMY RECORDS COMPARED.

It is fair to test such a Democratic promise by the past performance of the Democratic Party, and it is fair to compare that performance with the past performance of the Republican Party, which is now in power and which on the basis of its record asks and expects the indorsement of the American people. In governmental economy, as in other governmental matters, it is results that count, and the party which promises is entitled to have, and must submit to have, its promises judged by its own performance.

The practically uniform testimony of the actual figures is that the Democratic Party has always been the party of extravagant and wasteful government, that the Republican Party has always been the party of economical, prudent, and efficient government, and that the services of the Republican Party have invariably been necessary to pull the country out of the morass of debt and financial depression in which it has been left by Democrats.

PROGRESS OF THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The fiscal year ending July 1, 1898, a year and four months after the close of President Cleveland's second term, was the last year until the Wilson administration for which the appropriations were made by a Democratic Congress.

The total national debt on July 1, 1898, was $1,027,085,492, or $14.08 per capita of population. This sum was gradually and almost steadily reduced in the 16 following years of Republican fiscal management, the per capita debt showing a decline in 1902, four years later, to $12.24, in 1906 to $11.25, in 1912 (the year of President Wilson's first election) to $10.77, and in 1914 (the last year for which appropriations had been made by a Republican Congress, then out of office for 15 months) to $10.41.

The effect of the change of control to the Democrats was immediately shown by a jump of the national debt in the very next year to $10.87 per capita, and on July 1, 1917, the last year preceding the war, the per capita debt of the United States was $18.44, more than it had ever been since the period immediately following the Civil War, and nearly twice as much, both in gross and in proportion to the population, as it had been in the last preceding year of Republican financing, the total amount of the national debt on July 1, 1917, being $1,908,635,223, while in 1914 it had been only $1,027,257,009.

I direct particular attention to the 1917 figure of almost two billions, because 1917 was the last year not affected by the World War, the appropriations for that year having all been made and the expenditures for that year having been practically all incurred prior to April 6, the date of our declaration of war. It is fair, therefore, to compare our situation on July 1, 1917, with our situation at the close of previous fiscal years. In July, 1917, this country had been for almost three years the purchasing market for practically the whole world. On account of the troubles of European countries the United States was practically the only source of supplies of manufactured articles and furnished a very large part of the foodstuffs and raw materials consumed by the belligerents. The fact that at such a time, when American financing should have been easy, it was necessary for the Democratic administration to virtually double the national debt is one among the many proofs of miserable management, but it was temporarily obscured in the public eye by America's entrance into the war. With reasonably competent fiscal management there would have been no excuse for such an enormous increase of our public debt at such a time.

RESPONSIBILITY OF WAR DEBTS.

It is frequently asserted that the Democratic Party can not be blamed for the expenses of the war, which increased our obligations from less than two billions in 1917 to almost twenty-six billions in 1919. Let me ask, who else but the party then in power can be blamed for the expenditure of $1,051,000,000 for airplanes without getting a single American combat plane on the fighting front? Who else can be blamed for the building of 40 miles of concrete road at a Southern cantonment at a cost of $150,000 a mile? Who else was responsible for spending $3,900,000,000 for 2,300 ships (30 of them cost us twenty-seven millions), only 500 of which are good enough to be operated in time of peace? We were glad indeed to get a chance to sell 205 of those ships for less than half of what one of them had cost. Who but the party then in control was responsible for the war contracts on the cost-plus basis, by which the contractor was paid to increase his costs, so that thereby his compensation would be increased? Two hundred and seventy-six cases of prosecutions for war frauds have already been started by the Attorney General. Those 276 cases involve graft of $192,000,000, and they are just the beginnings of the uncovering.

Yes, friend Democrat, let each party be judged on its own record.

REDUCTION OF WAR DEBTS.

I cite the above facts as having a legitimate bearing on Democratic protestations of economy. But the problem which was left for us was not how the debts were incurred. The answer to that problem is well known, though Democratic candidates and speakers persistently ignore it.

Our problem was what to do with the debt.

The Democratic policy has habitually been to cancel a debt by borrowing more money. The Republican principle has been that the only way to cancel a debt is to pay it, and that is the job to which we applied ourselves. It will be a mighty long job. The present generation will be in their graves for many years before it is completed. But we have made a splendid start. Let the figures speak:

National debt, June, 1919	$25,916,874,096
National debt, June, 1920	24,062,500,285
Decrease, first Republican year		$1,854,373,811
National debt, June, 1921	23,977,450,552
Decrease, second Republican year		85,049,733
National debt, June, 1922	22,963,381,708
Decrease, third Republican year		1,014,068,844
Total decrease of national debt in three years of Republican management		2,953,492,388

This enormous reduction of nearly $3,000,000,000 of the national debt in three years, an average annual reduction in a sum equal to our entire national debt prior to 1917, means that your two Republican Congresses have reduced the national debt at the rate of more than $2,500,000 a day during the entire time that the Republicans have had control of the country's finances. (Counting the three years from July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1922, the rate is $2,697,253 per day.)

INTEREST THAT INTERESTS.

The annual interest charge on the national debt was approximately $23,000,000 before 1917. It rose to more than $1,000,000,000 in 1919. This means that whereas in 1916 this interest was only 81 cents per year for each person in our population, in 1919 it had become more than eleven times that, or $9.86 for every man, woman, and child in the United States—just for interest alone, mind you.

The figures above cited on Republican economy show that we have reduced the principal of the national debt by an amount more than equal to the interest upon it for every day we have been in office. There never was another Congress which equaled such a record, and there was never a Democratic Congress which came within 40,000 miles of it.

DEMOCRATIC VERSUS REPUBLICAN APPROPRIATIONS.

But still, our Democratic candidate will say, "Oh, well, if we Democrats had been in we would have economized just as much."

The proof, please, dear friend. Let us waive the fact that in this $9.86 of interest charges which you left upon every one of us when you went out of office at least $6.50 was occasioned not by the war but by your extravagance. Leave that performance as of a class by itself, which it certainly is. Did you economize in peace time when you had a chance to do so, unharrassed by the perils of war?

You did not. I point to the virtual doubling of the national debt during the last year you were in power before the war.

Did you even try to economize after the war, when you still had a Democratic President and Democratic heads of all the executive departments?

You did not. Let the figures speak again. You did not have time, somehow, in the spring of 1919 to pass eight of the supply bills for the necessary appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1920. You left that job for us to do. Your pending bills called for appropriations of $3,767,975,974. We passed the bills, but cut them almost a billion dollars; that is, to $2,828,283,432. That billion-dollar saving was made in the first three months of a Republican Congress after you had fiddled for a year in the effort to saddle the larger amount upon the country. It would have been a much greater cut if we had had a chance at all of the 1920 appropriation bills. As we did not have that chance, the total for 1920 was $6,500,000,000.

You still had the Democratic President and the Democratic departments. This is what these "economists" asked for, and this is what we allowed them in the next two years:

	Estimates (amounts asked for by Democratic departments).	Appropriations (amounts allowed by Republican Congress).
1921	$6,255,000,000	$4,780,829,510

The saving through reduction of estimates by these two Republican Congresses was almost $3,000,000,000.

But this was not all that we did to Democratic frenzied finance. In the appropriation bills of 1920, 1921, and 1922 we repealed former regular appropriations aggregating $1,140,000,000, a total saving by cutting Democratic estimates and appropriations, aggregating considerably in excess of $4,000,000,000 in three years. Without these cuts, this difference would be reflected to-day in taxation and in the national debt.

REDUCTION AND WISE EXPENDITURES COMBINED.

Now, in our reduction of appropriations, did we give the people a less efficient Government? Did we starve necessary governmental activities? Come, figures, speak again.

We have appropriated nearly ten millions additional for the Veterans' Bureau, and with it $30,600,000 for new hospital construction. We made the Veterans' Bureau vastly more efficient by combining under one administration all the relief activities of the Government for soldiers of the World War. It is not perfect yet, perhaps, but we are willing to leave to the judgment of any candid veteran the question of its relative efficiency now and under the Democratic management which we inherited in 1919. Does any veteran want to go back to that management with its carloads of unopened mail and its hopeless confusion in the performance of its obvious duty to our sick and disabled soldiers?

We found 691,116 Federal employees. By December 31, 1921, we had cut off 122,726 of this number, and we are still on the job, paring where it can be done without in the least injuring the efficiency of any Government department.

We started off the splendid new policy of protection of maternity and infancy with an appropriation of one and a quarter millions.

We appropriated fifty millions for Federal aid in the construction of a national system of highways, a sum vastly in excess of the amount applied to this purpose by any preceding administration.

We have enabled the War Finance Corporation to make actual loans to farmers and live-stock growers in an aggregate of more than $309,000,000, and we have made available the sum of $50,000,000 to the Farm Loan Board, this being exactly twice the fund formerly at its disposal.

REPUBLICAN TAX REDUCTION.

Did these new and increased appropriations mean increased taxation? Obviously not, since both our national debt and our total expenditures have been decreased under Republican administration. As a matter of fact, these two Republican Congresses have greatly reduced taxation, repealing many of the most burdensome and obnoxious provisions of the Democratic revenue law; for example, the tax on excess profits, which had the effect of practically barring capital from productive industry, and the so-called "nuisance taxes," such as those on soft drinks, clothing, sporting goods, and so forth. Among other taxes we have abolished those on freight, express, and parcel-post charges, amounting to about $365,000,000 per year; on railway and Pullman fares, amounting to $91,000,000 a year; and on life, accident, health, fire, and other insurance, amounting to $20,000,000 more.

We have increased the exemptions from the income tax for people of moderate means. The head of a family with an income of $5,000 a year or less gets an additional exemption of $500, and the exemption for dependents is increased from $200 to $400 for each child or other dependent. More than 90 per cent of the people making income-tax returns have an income not exceeding $5,000, and there is a saving in taxation to this great body of people of approximately $100,000,000 annually.

FOREIGN DEBT.

This Nation loaned to foreign countries about $11,000,000,000 during the war. Much of this was loaned without any satisfactory evidence of the debt or any definite agreement concerning its repayment. The debt commission created by the present Congress is engaged in the stupendous task of refunding these loans. They will be put in business shape. Your Republican Congress has no intention whatsoever of canceling these debts.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS.

Personally, I have never been able to convince myself that war can be avoided even by complete disarmament. Men and nations who want to fight will always find the means of doing so. The real cure for war must, in my judgment, be worked out by gradually inculcating in the minds of the people of the world a spirit of mutual good will and tolerance and a sense of their moral, intellectual, and economic dependence upon each other.

Nevertheless, enormous armaments are a terrible burden upon peaceful industry. The International Conference on the Limitation of Armament effected an agreement between the United States, England, and Japan, and one which we hope will be ultimately joined by France, which enabled us to greatly reduce the burden of naval expenditure and still be on an equality of preparedness in this respect with the other great powers.

More important still, the frank and friendly interchange of views at this epoch-making event constituted a long, long step forward into the era of international good will, which is the only real safeguard against war.

THE BUDGET SYSTEM.

One of the principal means by which the present Congress was able to accomplish the economies which I have detailed was by the adoption of the Budget system, which was one of its first acts.

This reform had been promised in the political platforms of both parties ever since the campaign in which Mr. Wilson was first elected. The Democrats, however, with eight years in which to do the job, accomplished nothing toward it. The first Republican Congress thereafter, the Sixty-sixth, passed a budget bill, which was vetoed by the Democratic President. The next succeeding Congress, the present Sixty-seventh, immediately passed the bill again, and this time it was signed by a Republican President and is now functioning splendidly as the law of the land. Under the workings of this system, aided by a Congress which is fully determined on economy in the use of the people's money, it costs a billion dollars less to run the Government than it did two years ago.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

It would be impossible, within the limits of a paper of readable length, to detail all the achievements of the present Republican Congress. I desire, however, to mention one nonfiscal achievement which is of great importance, in which I take considerable pride, as I had the privilege through one of my committee assignments of being largely instrumental in its accomplishment.

Prior to the war we were getting about a million immigrants a year. In 1908 immigration reached its high-water mark of some thirteen hundred thousand, or more than a hundred thousand a month. While some of these were desirable people a great many were highly undesirable, and as a general rule, subject, of course, to some notable exceptions, they represented a class of people far inferior to those whom we formerly got from Europe. The country was confronted with the growth in its body politic of alien communities which were swelling like cancerous growths. In the West, and particularly in Colorado, we have had little of this trouble, but in some parts of the East the race is almost completely changed from what it was half a century ago.

We would undoubtedly have received more than 2,000,000 immigrants a year with the reopening of transportation after the war if it had not been for the action of the present and preceding Congresses. The Sixty-sixth Congress passed an act which, admittedly not perfect as a permanent plan, cut down the maximum permissible number of aliens to 355,000 per year. In its actual working this law cut arrivals to less than 300,000. The present Congress has continued this law, with some improvements, for two years from last June.

SEPARATE CITIZENSHIP OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Closely related to the immigration problem, and handled by the same congressional committee, was the matter of woman's citizenship. On the one hand, as a result of the law making a married woman's nationality the same as her husband's, many foreign women who are totally unqualified to exercise the elective franchise became citizens immediately upon the naturalization of their husbands. On the other hand, American women lost their nationality by marriage to aliens, even though they continued to reside in the United States. The present Congress has corrected these injustices by an act giving to woman's citizenship the same dignity and responsibility as that which attaches to the citizenship of the man.

AN INDIVIDUAL RECORD.

Mr. Benjamin C. Hilliard, my Democratic opponent in the present campaign, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during his last term in Congress a long article vigorously attacking me. That matter was inserted in the RECORD under the unanimous-consent leave of the House, just as this matter is so inserted. It was, however, circulated throughout Denver as a "Speech of Hon. B. C. Hilliard," and parts of it were published as newspaper advertisements under a label indicating that they were extracts from "a speech by Hon. B. C. Hilliard in the House of Representatives."

The article you are now reading makes no pretense of having been delivered upon the floor. I have made it my uniform practice to designate as "speeches" only such remarks of mine as were so delivered. This is a letter to my folks at home, and of course it is printed at my own expense.

Individuals, like parties, must be judged by what they have done and how they have acted. When a Congressman seeks reelection, either to succeed himself or after a period of absence, he invites an audit of his stewardship. My opponent has a right—indeed, in a sense, it is his duty—to critically examine my record and point out what he may consider its flaws. I court such examination. I am proud of my part in the work of two Congresses which have taken hold of the broken-down business of the country and started it on the long road back to prosperity and solvency. I am proud of the achievements of the party which has reduced general living expenses at the same time that it has provided for the farmer an increased price and a better market for his product, the party which has reduced taxes while increasing the efficiency of Government, which has reduced unemployment to a negligible minimum, which has restored Liberty bonds to par, and which has reduced the national debt at the rate of two and a half million dollars a day.

By the same token, my opponent must be judged by the record which he made while a member of the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Congresses. I present that record herewith. I do so, admittedly, as an advocate in my own behalf. I admit also that I write not without feeling, because the one big subject that was dealt with during my predecessor's term of office is one which stirred me to the very soul. Nevertheless, I shall endeavor to present the record fairly, and I know I shall present it without malice, gladly conceding the sincerity and the high personal and professional character of my opponent.

I submit, however, that more is required of a Congressman than that he be sincere. That quality indeed he must have, but he must also be right, at least part of the time. According to my standards, Mr. Hilliard was wrong all of the time on this one big issue.

SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—THE M'LEMORE RESOLUTION.

Two years before the United States entered the World War all America was roused to fever heat by the insolent pretense of the Imperial German Government that American citizens did not have the right to travel where they pleased upon their lawful business. On May 7, 1915, the Lusitania, carrying many American passengers, including a number of women and children, had been torpedoed. The Kaiser's apologists excused this crime by the assertion that the vessel, a passenger ship, carried several guns for such protection as they might afford against the unseen man-made sharks of the sea. Other similar sinkings of defenseless vessels followed.

Representative McLemore, accepting this excuse as valid, outraged the dignity of the American people by offering the following pusillanimous resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Sixty-fourth Congress of the United States do, and it hereby solemnly does, request the President to warn all American citizens, within the borders of the United States or its possessions or elsewhere, to refrain from traveling on any or all ships of any or all of the powers now or in future at war, which ship or ships shall mount guns, whether such ship shall be frankly avowed a part of the naval forces of the power whose flag it flies or shall be called a merchant ship, and whether such gun or other armament be called "offensive" or "defensive," and in case American citizens do travel on such armed belligerent ships. that they do so at their own risk.

A motion was made to table, that is, to kill, the foregoing resolution. The question first arose on a motion for the previous question, that is to say on a motion to shut off debate and to vote immediately on the proposition to table the McLemore resolution.

Mr. Hilliard was absent and was recorded as being against the motion for the previous question and as being paired with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, who was recorded as being for the motion. (Mr. TAYLOR was present but not voting on account of this pair.)

The question again arose on the adoption of a special rule to consider the motion to table the McLemore resolution. On this Mr. Hilliard was paired with Mr. TAYLOR as before.

The motion to table the McLemore resolution was then put to vote, with the result that it was tabled by a decisive majority, Mr. Hilliard being paired, as before, against the motion, that is to say "in favor" of the McLemore resolution itself.

In other words, he was recorded three times as being in favor of the McLemore resolution. (For record of votes, see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 64th Cong., March 7, 1916, pp. 3699, 3720.)

ARMING OF MERCHANT SHIPS.

Mr. Hilliard voted in favor of this resolution, Mr. Keating of the third Colorado district voted against it. This is the only instance of a difference between the votes of these two Members on the war measures, and the only instance of either of them being even partially in favor of any of the measures, except appropriations, deemed necessary by President Wilson and by the overwhelming sentiment of the country, in order to win the war. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 64th Cong., 2d sess., March 1, 1917, p. 4692.)

Both of these Members, however, voted to handicap the nations which became our allies a month later, by supporting the following amendment, proposed in a motion to "recommit" this resolution, viz:

Provided, That no ship of American registry, armed in the manner aforesaid, shall carry cargo consisting in whole or in part of arms or ammunition consigned to a belligerent country or to a citizen thereof.

REVENUE FOR EXPENSES INCURRED BY MEXICAN SITUATION.

It may be noted that even as to revenue measures the record of Messrs. Keating and Hilliard was not entirely clear, for on December 16, 1915, they had both voted against a resolution the passage of which was particularly desired by the President, namely, the measure to extend to December 31, 1916, the provisions of the revenue act of 1914 (stamp tax) to raise revenue needed on account of the Mexican war situation and to meet deficiency of revenue occasioned by the lack of imports from Europe during the war.

SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—WAR WITH GERMANY.

The vote on this resolution was—ayes 373, nays 50. Mr. Hilliard and Mr. Keating were two of the 50. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 65th Cong., April 5, 1917, p. 412.)

ESPIONAGE ACT.

This bill, regarded by President Wilson as one of the most essential measures for the protection of the United States during the war, was entitled:

A bill to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. Hilliard and Mr. Keating both voted against this bill. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 65th Cong., May 4, 1917, p. 1841.)

Moreover, they both voted to weaken it by supporting, on motion to recommit, the following amendment, namely, to strike this language from the bill:

When the United States is at war, the publishing of any information with respect to the movements of troops, numbers or disposition of any of the armed forces of the United States in naval or military operations, or with respect to any of the works intended for the fortification or defense of any place, which information is useful to the enemy, is hereby prohibited. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 65th Cong., May 31, 1917, p. 3144.)

Such a vote naturally raises the inquiry whether these gentlemen wanted the publication of information which would be "useful to the enemy."

The President's view of the importance of leaving the foregoing language in the law is shown by the following letter from him to the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. The letter was read during the debate, but it evidently had no effect on the two Colorado Congressmen who, throughout the war, opposed practically all the efforts of the administration to win it:

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

MY DEAR MR. WEBB: I have been very much surprised to find several of the public prints stating that the administration had abandoned the position which it so distinctly took and still holds, that authority to exercise censorship over the press to the extent that censorship is embodied in the recent action of the House of Representatives is absolutely necessary to the public welfare and safety. It of course has not been abandoned, because the reasons still exist why such authority is necessary for the protection of the Nation.

I have every confidence that the great majority of the newspapers of the country will observe a patriotic reticence about anything whose publication could be of injury, but in every country there are some persons in a position to do mischief in this field who can not be relied upon, and whose interests or desires will tend to action on their part highly dangerous to the nation in the midst of war. I want to say again that it seems to me imperative that powers of this sort should be granted.

CONSCRIPTION.

Both Mr. Hilliard and Mr. Keating voted against the Kahn amendments to the Army bill, these amendments constituting the selective service act (draft act).

Mr. Hilliard in opposing the draft made a speech in which he said:

When I cast my vote against declaring war I was never so in accord with the common man and so in harmony with God. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 65th Cong., pt. 2, Apr. 28, 1917, p. 1544.)

It will be remembered that the Kaiser also claimed to be "in harmony with God."

In an "extension of remarks" or written speech, Mr. Hilliard, discussing the same subject, used the following language:

I was not in favor of sending American soldiers across the seas to wage battle, unless on the inspiration born of their own ideals they freely offered to go.

SENDING TROOPS ABROAD.

Carrying out the policy expressed in the last-quoted speech, Mr. Hilliard, on June 28, 1917, introduced a very remarkable resolution (H. Con. Res. No. 15, 65th Cong., 1st sess.) in which, after a lengthy preamble, it was provided:

Resolved, etc., That to the extent hereinafter indicated the Congress has elected, and hereby elects, to exercise its constitutional power to make rules for the government and regulation of the military or land forces of the Nation, and promulgates, declares, and publishes the following rules, to be immediately effective:

Rule 1. That the land forces or Army of the Republic, in whatever manner raised or recruited, shall be employed only to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, and other use is declared to be unconstitutional. Under no circumstances shall it be legal to order soldiers to engage in battle in foreign countries.

Rule 2. That in the proper exercise of their rights as American freemen, and as proclaimed in Rule 1, soldiers may legally and honorably refuse to go upon any ship or vessel bound or ordered to a foreign shore.

Rule 3. The Secretary of War shall give immediate public notice of these rules and cause same to be posted conspicuously wherever soldiers are quartered.

For nearly three years prior to the introduction of the foregoing resolution Belgium had been a broken and ruined country, her churches, universities, and industries destroyed, her people groaning under the tribute exacted by a ruthless conqueror, and many of her young men and women carried away to involuntary servitude. In northern France orchards had been cut down and the very soil had been destroyed. With such an example before his eyes it would seem incredible if it had not actually happened that an American Congressman would court such a fate for his own country by solemnly contending that the war should be brought onto its own soil before a blow should be struck in its defense. Even if, notwithstanding such Congressmen, the enemy should be repulsed, how many American cities would be destroyed, how many American noncombatants killed and maimed, before such a costly victory could be obtained?

Benjamin C. Hilliard has been consistently opposed to the national defense. In the congressional campaign of 1916, in his last circular preceding election, he said, "Ben C. Hilliard is a friend of organized labor. His opponent is an officer in the State militia."

Mr. Hilliard's opponent in that campaign was the same as in the present one, the writer of this paper. When that language was written I was absent on the Mexican border with the Colorado National Guard. The statement contains the highly erroneous assumption that a regular part of the State government was hostile to a part of the people of the State. But the statement involves an even more serious reflection on the man who was capable of making it. What will the people of Colorado think of a man who could advance as an argument against his opponent the fact that such opponent was then in the military service of the United States by order of its President?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

SPRINGFIELD (MASS.) ARMORY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, to-day is Friday, Private Calendar day. I wish to ask unanimous consent of the House to take up, out of its order, a private bill which is not a claim but is to the advantage of the Government instead of being an expense. It is just like a bridge bill in my opinion in its importance, and I think is of a class that does not belong on the Private Calendar, but I did not like, in my own case and for my advantage, to break what I think is a mistaken precedent by putting the bill where it could go on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It is a bill that simply transfers to the city certain streets in Springfield which the Government originally took as part of the arsenal property there. They have always been used as public streets, and the United States has had to pay the expense of keeping them in repair. The city of Springfield and the War Department have agreed that they shall be conveyed to the city for public streets, and the city is waiting for this bill to pass before it can improve them. The bill has unanimously passed the Senate and been unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. I ask unanimous consent that it be now considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take up out of order a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 3307) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to convey by quitclaim deed to the city of Springfield, Mass., for public street purposes, and for no other purpose, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all or any part of certain strips or parcels of land within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., now used as streets and known as Byers Street, Pearl Street, Federal Street, Lincoln Street, and Mill Street, the areas to be so conveyed being particularly described as follows:

BYERS STREET.

Parcel numbered one: Beginning at a point in the north line of Frost Street, located 3 feet westerly from a stone bound that marks the present limit of that part of Byers Street that is public; thence north 49° 30′ 30″ west, 851.89 feet to the southerly line of Pearl Street; thence north 42° 13′ 20″ east, about 54 feet to the easterly curb of Byers Street; thence on a curve of 65 feet radius about 32 feet; thence on a curve of 20.14 feet radius, 5.95 feet; thence south 49° 30′ 30″ east, 818.42 feet to that part of Byers Street now public; thence westerly across Byers Street 36 feet to the point of beginning.

Parcel numbered 2: Also a second parcel located adjacent to the parcel above described and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the southerly line of Pearl Street, located north 42° 13′ 20″ east, 241.39 feet from Spring Street; thence north 42° 13′ 20″ east, 9.25 feet; thence south 49° 30′ 30″ east, 558.23 feet; thence south 40° 29′ 30″ west, 9.25 feet; thence north 49° 30′ 30″ west, 558.51 feet to the point of beginning.

It is intended by the description of the two above parcels to describe all the land located between the easterly curb line and the private property on the westerly side of that portion of Byers Street now owned by the United States of America. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Byers Street, bk. 276, pp. 45, 46, Dec., 1921."

PEARL STREET.

Beginning at a point in the northerly line of Pearl Street, located 243.82 feet easterly from Spring Street; said point being at the easterly end of that part of Pearl Street now public; thence north 41° 11′ east, 814.93 feet; thence north 59° 25″ east, 1,293.46 feet to Federal Street; thence by Federal Street 48.78 feet to the southerly curb line of Pearl Street; thence on the southerly curb line of Pearl Street by a curve of 50 feet radius, 32.6 feet; thence south 59° 25″ west, 1,235.46 feet; thence on a curve of 127.54 feet radius, 39.69 feet; thence south 41° 11′ west, 706.84 feet; thence on a curve of 20 feet radius, 13.24 feet; thence on a curve of 65 feet radius, about 11 feet; thence south 42° 13′ 20″ west, about 63 feet to the part of Pearl Street now public; thence across Pearl Street, 48.5 feet to the point of beginning; intending to describe all of the land between the southerly curb line and the private property on the northerly side of Pearl Street between that part of Pearl Street now public and Federal Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Pearl Street, bk. 276, pp. 45 and 46, Dec., 1921."

FEDERAL STREET.

Beginning at a point in the easterly line of Federal Street, located 570.96 feet southerly from Worthington Street, said point being at the southerly end of that part of Federal Street which is public; thence south 29 degrees 5 minutes 15 seconds east, 215.33 feet to the westerly line of Armory Street extended; thence north 9 degrees 53 minutes east, 16.54 feet; thence south 29 degrees 5 minutes 15 seconds east, 154.67 feet to the line of the southerly curb of Lincoln Street extended; thence westerly by the line of the southerly curb of Lincoln Street extended, 15 feet; thence north 71 degrees 34 minutes 45 seconds west, 58.38 feet to the westerly curb line of Federal Street; thence north 29 degrees 5 minutes 15 seconds west, by the westerly curb line of Federal Street; 345.76 feet to that part of Federal Street now public; thence across Federal Street by the line of the southerly end of that part of Federal Street now public, 54.82 feet to the point of beginning; intending to describe all of the land located between the westerly curb line and the private property on the easterly side of Federal Street from the present end of that part of Federal Street that is public near Pearl Street to lines near the trolley track at Lincoln Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Federal Street, Pearl to Lincoln Street, bk. 276, pp. 47, 48, Dec., 1921."

LINCOLN STREET.

Beginning at the intersection of the easterly line of Federal Street and the northerly line of Lincoln Street; thence north 64 degrees 50 minutes 45 seconds east, 864.58 feet to the intersection of the northerly line of Lincoln Street with the easterly line of Magazine Street; thence 34.38 feet across Lincoln Street on the easterly line of Magazine Street to the southerly curb line of Lincoln Street extended; thence south 64 degrees 50 minutes 45 seconds west, 867.29 feet by the line of the southerly curb of Lincoln Street to the easterly line of Federal Street; thence northerly by the easterly line of Federal Street 34.08 feet to the point of beginning; intending to describe all of the land between the southerly curb line and the private property on the northerly side of Lincoln Street between Federal Street and the easterly line of Magazine Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Springfield, Mass. Department of streets and engineering, Lincoln Street, bk. 276, pp. 48–50, Dec., 1921."

MILL STREET.

Beginning at the intersection of the easterly line of Dickinson Street and the southerly line of Mill Street; thence 34.31 feet to the fence on the northerly side of Mill Street; then by said fence about 575 feet to Hancock Street; thence across Hancock Street about 51 feet to the intersection of the easterly line of Hancock Street and the northerly line of Mill Street; thence on a curve of 295.24 feet; 109.17 feet; thence on a curve of 442.24 feet radius, 77.2 feet to the intersection of the westerly line of Chester Street and the northerly line of Mill Street; thence north 85 degrees 47 minutes 20 seconds east, 53.34 feet to the intersection of the easterly line of Chester Street and the northerly line of Mill Street; thence north 85 degrees 47 minutes 20 seconds east, 48 feet; thence on a curve of 144.24 feet radius, 75.88 feet; thence on a curve of 848 feet radius, 334.02 feet; thence on a curve of 1,068.89 feet radius; 377.75 feet; thence north 12 degrees 49 minutes 55 seconds east, 161.12 feet to the southerly line of Central Street; thence north 76 degrees 35 minutes 5 seconds west by the southerly line of Central Street, 46.14 feet; thence north 20 degrees 40 minutes 5 seconds east, 234.7 feet; thence north 48 degrees 51 minutes 35 seconds east, 56.49 feet; thence south 27 degrees 35 minutes 20 seconds east, 59.17 feet to the line of the southerly curb of Mill Street; thence on a curve of 49.86 feet radius, 43.14 feet; thence south 12 degrees 49 minutes 55 seconds west, 145.42 feet to the easterly line of the proposed Central Street extension; thence still south 12 degrees 49 minutes 55 seconds west, 50.73 feet to the westerly line of the proposed Central Street extension; thence still south 12 degrees 49 minutes 55 seconds west, 160.71 feet; thence on a curve of 1,108.89 feet radius, 391.89 feet; thence on a curve of 888 feet radius, 349.77 feet; thence on a curve of 184.24 feet radius, 96.92 feet; thence south 85 degrees 47 minutes 20 seconds west, 382.32 feet; thence south 42 degrees 13 minutes 50 seconds west, 491.92 feet to the point of beginning at Dickinson Street; intending to describe all of the land in Mill Street from Dickinson Street to a point north of the northerly side of Mill River and from that point all of the land located between the private property on the northerly side and the edge of the sidewalk on the southerly side of Mill Street. Said property being shown on blue print "Department of Streets and Engineering, Springfield, Mass. Plan showing proposed layout of Mill Street from Orange Street to water shops; also proposed extension of Central Street from Mill Street to Allen Street. October, 1921."

Provided, That the conveyance herein authorized shall be upon condition that the city of Springfield, Mass., shall improve and maintain each and all of said streets as public streets: Provided further, That there shall be reserved in the conveyance herein authorized the right to construct and maintain over, under, and across said streets, water, gas, and sewer mains, electric light and telephone wires and cables, and any other utility which the operation and use by the Government of said armory may require: And provided further, That the said city of Springfield shall not sell or convey the said described premises, nor devote the same to any other purpose than street purposes; and in the event said premises shall be used for any other purpose or shall not be cared for and maintained as are other public streets of said city, the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, further authorized, in his discretion and under such conditions, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe, to permit the extension of Central Street by said city of Springfield to connect with Allen and Oakland Streets at the junction of the latter streets in said city, and to permit the said city to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mill River Canal at the point where such extension of Central Street crosses said canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GILLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ZAH BARMON.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7425) for the relief of Zah Barmon and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Federal expenditures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, two years ago the people authorized and directed the Republican Party to reconstruct our national and international affairs. That was a gigantic task, requiring years of earnest thought and patient toil.

We have endured not only four years of international war but also nearly eight years of Woodrow Wilson. Consequently the Nation and the world were filled with grief and ruin. Firm foundations of business had been destroyed. Well-established lines of commerce on land and sea had been swept away. International exchange and credit had become extremely critical. Nations were struggling on the verge of bankruptcy. Millions of men and women had been forced away from the productive pursuits of peace into the destructive pursuits of war. Life and treasure had been lavishly sacrificed upon the altars of the gods of war. The millions who lived to return to their homes to tell the story found disorganization and ruin on every hand.

The temple of prosperity was destroyed almost in a night's time, but years of earnest thought and patient toil will be required to replace it.

The Wilson administration squandered over $7,000,000,000 of public funds after we entered the war in 1917. If we had that money now, we could, according to the Republican standard fixed by the appropriations for 1923—its first opportunity—pay the total expenses of the Federal Government for nearly two years without levying a single dollar of Federal taxes. Aside from the fixed charges created by war we could pay the ordinary expenses for four years without levying a single dollar of Federal taxes for that purpose. Let my Democratic opponent, Mr. Shallenberger, explain this profligate waste of public money during the war.

This gigantic task of reconstruction involves the cleaning up of the miserable mess bequeathed by him and his party to the country. But they frequently ask, Why have the Republicans not cleaned out all the dirt before this time? They then turn to the public and say, "Put us in again." Do they desire to shovel in some more dirt before the Republicans have time to clean up thoroughly? It has been impossible for even the Republicans to clean up in 18 months all the dirt that was made by the Wilson administration during 8 years.

In this work of reconstruction, we first turned our attention necessarily to the National Treasury, the financial heart of the Nation. We found it struggling under tremendous expenses which could be met only by heavy taxes upon the people.

Note that the total disbursements, including the Postal Service, were for the year—

1918	14,095,000,000
1919	19,302,000,000

The total appropriations for the fiscal year 1923 aggregate $3,747,000,000. Of this amount, $2,014,000,000 will be required to cover permanent expenditures created by war, such as interest on the public debt, pensions, hospitalization, vocational education, and so forth.

Thus the ordinary expenditures for 1923 will be $1,733,000,000. The annual pre-war expenditures for 1916 amounted to $1,030,000,000, showing that those for 1923 will exceed those for 1916 by $703,000,000; this amount includes the increased cost of the Army, the Navy, and all other branches of the Government and all delinquent war claims. Thus it is evident that we could pay the ordinary expenses of the Government four years, according to the Republican standard for 1923, if we had the $7,000,000,000 and more that was worse than squandered by the Wilson administration after we entered the war.

TAX REDUCTION.

The Republicans have not only reduced expenditures as thus indicated but they have also reduced taxation $800,000,000 a year by the internal revenue act of November 23, 1921.

RAILROADS.

The railroad question also demanded immediate attention. We found the roads under the control of the Government and their net rates guaranteed out of the National Treasury according to laws passed in 1916 and 1918. The Federal control act of March 21, 1918, which my opponent, Mr. Shallenberger, helped to enact, guaranteed a net return of 11.27 per cent to all roads and a net return of 22 per cent to the Burlington. According to the terms of that act that guaranty was to extend 21 months beyond the date of the issuance of a proclamation of peace with the Central Powers. That proclamation was issued July 2, 1921. Thus the McAdoo-Shallenberger guaranty carried in the Federal control act would have been extended to April 2, 1923.

In the work of reconstruction, however, I voted to repeal that act so that Federal control ceased on March 1, 1920, and the McAdoo-Shallenberger guaranteed rates ceased on September 1, 1920, instead of April 2, 1923.

All guarantees mentioned in the transportation act of 1920, sometimes called the Esch-Cummins Act, are reproductions of like provisions of the Federal control act, and were thus allowed to continue for a period of six months to avoid a financial collapse and general strikes throughout the country.

The McAdoo-Shallenberger guaranties have cost the National Treasury over $2,000,000,000 already, and if the law had run its course to April 2, 1923, they would have created additional liabilities approximating $1,937,500,000.

Mr. Shallenberger voted to establish those guaranties, but I voted to repeal them. Their repeal released our National Treasury from a financial burden aggregating nearly $1,000,000,000 annually.

Our opponents advocate a League of Nations which would increase our expenditures millions of dollars annually and at the same time, impair the sovereignty and independence of our Nation. On the other hand, we have favored and secured a conference for the limitation of armaments, resulting in a policy which enables us to reduce our Army and Navy expenditures at least $200,000,000 a year.

Having secured a 10-year holiday with respect to naval construction, we will be able within that period of time to realize a total reduction of national expenditures of $2,000,000,000. These facts disclose actual accomplishments in the line of practical retrenchment.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on light wines and beer.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on light wines and beer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of light wines and beers.

If reelected to Congress on November 7—and I am very confident that I shall be—I shall advocate a modification of the Volstead Act that will permit light wines and beers within the limitations prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States defining the extent of the jurisdiction of Congress to regulate the alcoholic content of beverages.

I voted against prohibition in the Sixty-fifth Congress. I voted against reporting out the eighteenth amendment because I did not believe it either right or expedient to take the police power from the States, where it had rested for more than 100 years, and place it with the Nation. I resisted with all my might the attempt to bring about a constitutional innovation of this kind.

I voted against the eighteenth amendment and prohibition because I did not feel that it was right that outlying, sparsely settled States should determine the drinking habits of the people of my State. Under the present method of amending the Federal Constitution each State has one vote through its legislature in the matter of ratifying an amendment that has been proposed by Congress. This method is archaic and undemocratic and tends to subvert rather than to promote the will of the people in the matter of amending the national fundamental law. Chief Justice Marshall, in the last decision he ever rendered involving a constitutional question, severely criticized this method of amendment, and many able and distinguished American jurists have confirmed his opinion and justified his criticism.

Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to group as many as 20 States of this Union whose aggregate population is less than that of the population of New York. These 20 States have 20 votes as against New York's 1 vote in the matter of amending the Federal Constitution. Is it democratic, is it just that an actual minority may exercise a controlling influence over an actual majority in the ratio of 20 to 1? I think not.

I have a resolution pending before the Judiciary Committee providing for a different and more democratic method of amending the Constitution. This resolution has received the approval of many great American judges and lawyers as well as of professors of political economy in several great American universities. It provides simply for a reference by Congress of the question of a proposed amendment to the people of the United States at a biennial election. State constitutions are amended by reference to the people of the State. Why not amend the Federal Constitution by reference to the people of the United States? The principle is exactly the same. If it is just in one case, it is just in the other.

Again, I voted against prohibition because the overwhelming sentiment of the people of my district was against it, and I felt that it was nothing but right and proper that I should pay respectful attention to the wishes of the people who had sent me to Congress.

I voted as I did, among other reasons, because my prophetic vision foresaw the bootlegging operations of this day and the contempt for law and order that would result from the adoption of this amendment. I also foresaw the Volstead Act, against which my better judgment rebelled from the very beginning.

I believe that the saloon is gone forever, and I shall shed no tears because of this fact, but I am convinced that light wines and beers may be had without any violation of law, and that these slightly exhilarating beverages would greatly lessen and cool what Shakespeare is pleased to call "life's fitful fever."

It is a well-known fact, Mr. Speaker, that an abundance of liquor may be had almost anywhere in the United States, either in town or country, under bootlegging operations, by the wealthy who can afford to pay the price, but our laborers and workmen, who create the wealth of the country in the sweat of the brow and who return to their homes at nightfall tired and exhausted with the toil of the day, are denied even a single glass of refreshing beer because the law forbids the brewing of a drink that is reasonable in price and not an insult to the taste.

This inevitable discrimination in the operation and effect of the Volstead Act has a direct tendency to embitter the minds of the masses of the people, to fill their hearts with rebellion against the law, and to drive them to lawlessness and anarchy as a refuge.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in an age of extreme lawlessness. Very few people seem to respect the law or obey it. For decades past we have had lynchings and burnings of human beings at the stake. Mob violence has been for many years our national disgrace and shame.

Until very recent years the mob did its murderous work and then dispersed. But now comes the Ku-Klux Klan in permanent organization form with ritual, mask, and gown and does its infamous and destructive work in mob action under cover of night.

More covert, insidious, and widespread, though less frightful and bloody in outward form than the actions of the mob or the Ku-Klux Klan, is the crime of bootlegging that is fast branding us as a nation of criminals and hypocrites. The law-abiding, liberty-loving people of our country are beginning to view the situation with terror and awful foreboding. Anti-prohibition may be bad and prohibition worse, but disregard and contempt for law are worse than either. A dead law upon the statute books is a stench in the nostrils of all good citizens.

I am not prepared to say, Mr. Speaker, that the enormous increase in crime of the last two years has been due to prohibition, but it is passing strange that the increase began with the passage of the Volstead Act and has now reached alarming proportions with an ever-increasing volume of criminal activity.

I believe that the question of the relationship between prohibition violation and other forms of crime presents an interesting problem of philosophy or psychology. There is a legal maxim in Latin phrase that runs as follows: Falsus in uno falsus in omnibus. The interpretation of this phrase in its relation to the question of veracity or perjury in matters of testimony in cases at law, is that a witness who is believed to be a liar in one case may be judged to be a liar in all cases.

A slightly different application of this Latin maxim to questions of morals and of crime will justify the conclusion that a man who consents to commit crime in one case finds it easy to advance a step further and commit crime in other cases. In other words, when moral character is once broken in its firm resolves, it is easy to shatter it by successive inducements of a criminal nature.

An application of these elemental principles and tests to the frightful volume of crime that curses our country to-day will show an immediate connection between bootlegging and other forms of criminal activity. The explanation is simply this: The people believed, if it be true that an actual majority of the people willed it, that the adoption of the eighteenth amendment meant the abolishment of intoxicating liquors; that is, the doing away with the saloon and its evil effects. They did not believe that it meant the abolition of nonintoxicating beverages like light wines and beers. And when the unreasonable fanatical Volstead Act, with its false and unscientific proportion of one-half of 1 per cent, was presented to them they felt that they had been deceived and began at once to defy and violate the law. They felt that their personal liberties as American citizens had been invaded, and they refused and still continue to refuse to submit. And having begun a course of lawbreaking in the matter of prohibition violation they found it easy on principles just mentioned to commit crimes along other lines. I firmly believe that this accounts in a large measure for the appalling state of criminal activity in the United States to-day.

Of course, these remarks and observations do not apply to the average citizen, who does not violate the Volstead Act or any other law. They do not even apply to the violator of the Volstead Act, whose character and mind are strong enough to enable him to distinguish between an act that he believes to be foolish and other laws that he feels that he is morally bound to obey. They apply merely to that class of citizens who feel that their liberties have been taken away from them and that are not strong enough to curb criminal propensity.

But, you may ask, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, whether it is really a fact that crime is on the increase. It is hardly necessary to discuss the matter with you. All of you read the daily papers and can judge for yourselves. I could fill the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD every day several times over with sensational reports of the violation of the Volstead Act in every State of the Union. I am going to cite at this point and insert in the RECORD a few illustrations taken from different sections of the country and in very recent months.

"EVERYBODY'S DOING IT" IS BOOTLEGGER'S PLEA.

"I didn't know it was against the law to sell alcohol; everybody's doing it," pleaded Rocco Cotrono yesterday morning before County Judge William F. Bleakley in Mount Vernon after admitting the sale of 80 gallons of grain alcohol and possession of a loaded revolver.

Asked if the vanishing of the saloon had not given him a slight inkling about prohibition, Cotrono, who lives in Mamaroneck, said:

"I knew there was no more saloons, but I saw a whole lot of drunks every day."

Cotrono "learned" of prohibition when he was fined $300, which he could not pay.

And this from a recent issue of the New York Times:

REPORT JOHNSTOWN ON "ONE GRAND DRUNK"—POLICE FIGURES SHOW THE ARRESTS FOR INTOXICATION ARE DOUBLE THOSE OF PREPROHIBITION DAYS.

(Special to the New York Times.)

JOHNSTOWN, PA.—Figures compiled by the local police department tend to prove that Johnstown is on one grand drunk, as is claimed by Mayor Joseph Cauffiel and others. These figures show that drunkenness is more prevalent in the city now than in the days before prohibition. August, 1918, had 36 arrests for drunkenness and associated charges, while August of this year had double that figure.

Police officials say that 90 per cent of those arrested now are of the crazy variety, not the peaceful old soaks of former years. This they blame on the poison sold over the bars. Anonymous letters swamp Mayor Cauffiel's office calling upon him to investigate and close the "blind tigers," but the mayor says he is through closing the saloons. "Let the Federal agents do it," he says. "They know that poison wood alcohol and ether is being sold over the bars in Johnstown. Let them stop it."

Another issue of the New York Times of a recent date had an article concerning bootlegging operations down at Knoxville, Tenn. The article was as follows:

PREACHER ON DRY CRUSADE—KNOXVILLE PASTOR CHASES BOOTLEGGERS BETWEEN SERMONS.

The closing of every bootlegging place in a city that for many years has been fed by uninterrupted streams of "mountain dew" from one of the biggest moonshining regions of the country is the task undertaken by Rev. C. W. Gant, of Knoxville, Tenn. His efforts are backed by a .38 caliber automatic, a deputy sheriff's commission, and the Knoxville Law Enforcement League. * * *

Knoxville is in the heart of the Tennessee Mountains. On the east are the blue ranges of the Great Smokies, with innumerable ridges, affording protection to the distilling industry, right up to the city's door. On the west are the foothills of the Cumberland Plateau. Truly it is an ideal spot for moonshiners, and they have filled most convenient hollows with copper outfits. The city is the market for all of this, and an underground distribution system, with wholesalers and retailers, has grown up. Liquor recently could be bought on almost any corner at a top price of $2 a pint. The police force seemingly was inadequate, and this gave birth to the Knoxville Law Enforcement League, an organization including about all the preachers in town. Hence the selection of Doctor Gant, at that time pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the little town of Windsor, Ill.

* * * Evidence had been compiled in 31 cases and steps had been taken to institute action in a Federal court. But here Doctor Gant struck a snag. The district attorney was so busy that he did not have time to look into the cases. Only 60 days is allowed by law for the institution of such proceedings, and the time slipped by with the prosecutor still engrossed in other things. Doctor Gant's own work and the work of his detectives had gone for nothing, and he must accumulate new evidence.

In this report from Knoxville, Tenn., published in the New York Times of September 3, we see both Federal and State machinery helpless to destroy or to curb bootlegging. The humiliating spectacle is presented of a minister of the Gospel being compelled to leave his pulpit to chase bootleggers while Government agents look complacently on.

I have already referred, Mr. Speaker, to the constant increase in crime since the Volstead Act went into effect, and I wish now to give two illustrative tables from different sections of the country to show this. The first is a brief compilation of crime statistics taken from the Daily Commercial News, of San Francisco, of date July 19, 1922, and is as follows:

Arrests in San Francisco.

Year ending June 30—	For drunkenness.	For other crimes.	Total.
1920	1,822	24,851	26,673
1922	7,262	32,619	39,881

This table is most impressive, for it shows that the increase in crime in San Francisco since the Volstead Act went into effect has been enormously in advance of and out of all proportion to the increase in population.

I have given extracts from newspapers showing crime conditions in my own State of New York, in the State of Pennsylvania, in the State of Tennessee, in the State of California, and I come now to furnish statistics showing crime conditions in the District of Columbia, the seat of the National Government, in the very shadow of the Dome of the Capitol where we report out eighteenth amendments and pass Volstead Acts. And this is by far the most impressive of all, for the District of Columbia is a kind of Federal province which has been created and is now governed by Federal law. It seems that if a Federal statute could be enforced anywhere, it should be at the seat of government and under the very noses of Congressmen and Senators.

But what is the true situation at the Nation's Capital? How successful have Federal agents been in enforcing the Volstead Act? Let recent official figures speak and then let us ponder and reflect. As late as this month the Washington Evening Star printed the following article:

SEVERE PENALTIES TO BACK DRY LAW—ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS ASSERT MILD SENTENCES AND FINES ARE INEFFECTIVE—POLICE CHIEF'S REPORT—EXPLAINS DIFFERENCE IN ARRESTS MADE UNDER SHEPPARD ACT AND THE VOLSTEAD LAW.

More drastic punishment may be provided for persons who persist in violating the laws intended to make the eighteenth amendment effective. Dry advocates feel that the increased number of violations detected in this city the past fiscal year probably is applicable to many other sections. Some of them feel that conditions elsewhere probably are much worse than they are in this city, realizing that closer police cooperation between the city police and the Federal prohibition forces exists here than in most other cities.

Imposition of fines and infliction of mild prison sentences, it is pointed out, has not accomplished what members of the dry forces anticipated would be accomplished, and some of them express themselves as favoring a penitentiary term for offenders. It is said that a bill carrying such a provision may be framed in the near future and presented to Congress, as well as one for speedy trials of dry-law offenders.

POLICE CHIEF'S REPORT.

In his annual report to the District Commissioners, Maj. Daniel Sullivan, superintendent of police, explained that liquor arrests are made under two heads. Under one head, he explained, arrests for intoxication, drinking in public, and driving while under the influence of liquor are made under the provisions of the Sheppard law, while offenses under the Volstead Act include manufacture, possession, transportation, and sale of intoxicants.

SHEPPARD LAW VIOLATIONS.

The report contains a comparative statement of arrests for violations of the two laws during the fiscal years 1921 and 1922, as follows:

Arrests under the Sheppard law.

Drinking in public places (sec. 11)	99	149
Intoxication	5,415	6,375
Operating of vehicle while drunk	160	205

Under the Volstead Act arrests were made as follows:

Arrests under Volstead law.

Furnishing liquor	0	2
Manufacturing	79	83
Illegal possession of liquor	320	921
Selling liquor	371	767
Transporting liquor	654	648
Carrying on person for the purpose of sale	5	2
Possession of property designed for the manufacture of liquor	6	20

Seizures as a result of enforcement of antiliquor laws during the past fiscal year included 68,464 quarts of various kinds of liquor, 11,352 bottles of beer and extracts, 45 automobiles, 4 wagons, 4 bicycles, and 1 boat.

I am almost ashamed to submit these facts to you, my colleagues, to be printed in our RECORD. It is to be hoped that our connection with this lamentable result was only political and not personal, was a blunder of statesmanship and not a contribution of bad citizenship.

The suggestion "that conditions elsewhere probably are much worse than they are in this city" affords little consolation, for they are certainly bad enough here, and are a sad commentary upon the efforts of Congressmen and Senators to pass people into heaven by legislative enactment.

The appalling results of three years of prohibition enforcement have been to increase rather than to diminish drunkenness, to augment rather than to lower the general crime rate, to lose many millions of revenue annually to the Government, to burden the people with additional taxes in the appropriation of many millions of dollars in the attempt to enforce an unenforceable law, and to create a spirit of lawlessness and contempt for organized government that constitute at once the shame and the degradation of the Republic.

What is the remedy, you ask? Restore to the people their personal liberties within the law. Give them light wines and beers that the eighteenth amendment does not prohibit. Modify the Volstead Act in conformity with reason and common sense, and let the laws of physics and chemistry and the experience of the human race, rather than the whims of fanaticism, be the standard of alcoholic content in the manufacture of beverages.

It is urged that the plea for light wines and beers is but the opening of an argument for the restoration of the saloon and bad liquor. Only designing men will make this contention, and only the ignorant and unsophisticated will be influenced by it. The eighteenth amendment prohibits "the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors," and the Supreme Court of the United States stands guardian over the rights of the people in the matter of its enforcement. Until the eighteenth amendment is revoked there can be no manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors, and Congress is powerless to pass any laws violating this amendment as long as the Supreme Court functions and does its duty.

We could pass a law, of course, permitting intoxicating beverages, but the Supreme Court would set it aside. It does not require a lawyer to know this. Every intelligent citizen knows it, and this cry about the bringing back of the saloon by Congress is a false and foolish cry, and is intended by the designing to deceive the ignorant and unthinking.

The Supreme Court has declared that it is within the jurisdiction of Congress to determine the alcoholic content of beverages, but this same court has warned Congress that it must not in the exercise of its jurisdiction pass any law that permits the manufacture, sale, or transportation of a liquor that intoxicates. In other words, the Congress may name any alcoholic content that stops short of intoxication, and my solution of the vexed problem of prohibition is to permit light wines and beers that contain a greater alcoholic content than one-half of 1 per cent, but not so great as to cause intoxication and bring down upon us the censure of the Supreme Court and the nullification of our law.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I favor light wines and beers, and shall advocate such a modification of the Volstead Act that will permit the manufacture, sale, transportation, and use of these nonintoxicating beverages which do not violate the law and that the tastes, habits, and necessities of the people require and demand.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, it is going to be difficult to get the river and harbor bill passed before adjournment. In view of that fact I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very sorry, but I shall have to object to that. It is getting late and there is probably no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, September 16, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

686. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a communication from the President of the United States transmitting a deficiency estimate for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for refunding taxes illegally collected, including the payment of claims accruing prior to July 1, 1920, $42,430,000 (H. Doc. No. 390), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, September 16, 1922.

Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our eyes unto the hills from whence cometh our help. Our help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth. In the noise of war and rumors of war our hearts this morning go out in sympathy and prayer for the multitude of the distressed, the impoverished, the bleeding, and the dying. Rebuke the mad ambition and cruel selfishness of men and nations. Give us peace in our time, O God, and cause war to cease unto the ends of the earth.

Accept our thanksgiving for the repose and protection of the night, for the sweetness and beauty of the morning. May we return to our work in the comfort of Thy protection and in the enrichment of Thy grace. The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up His countenance upon us and give us peace. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Moses	Simmons
Ball	Glass	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Gooding	New	Stanfield
Broussard	Hale	Nicholson	Sterling
Cameron	Harreld	Norbeck	Sutherland
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Trammell
Colt	Heflin	Phipps	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kellogg	Rawson	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	King	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	McCormick	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	McCumber	Shields	Williams
Fletcher	McNary	Shortridge	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

JUDGMENTS BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 256).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and requiring an appropriation for their payment—under the Treasury Department, $1,410.23; under the War Department, $619.41; under the Navy Department, $119,226.71; under the Post Office Department, $16,584.82; and under the United States Shipping Board, $146,193.54; in total amount, $284,034.71; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM AGAINST THE CHOCTAW NATION (S. DOC. NO. 257).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, for such action as may be deemed proper, a judgment of the Court of Claims entered on June 12, 1922, in the case of Wirt K. Winton, administrator of Charles T. Winton, deceased, et al. v. Jack Amos et al., in favor of Robert L. Owen and associates for $175,000, under the provisions of the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat., pp. 137 and 140), together with a letter from the Assistant Attorney General, dated June 23, 1922, explaining the status of the tribal funds of the Choctaw Nation, from which funds such judgment is payable, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM AGAINST THE WAR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 255).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a judgment (under the War Department, $9,786.96) rendered against the Government by the United States District Court for the District of Maryland, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. 505), as amended by section 297 of the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. 1168), and requiring an appropriation for its payment, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS IN ADMIRALTY CASES (S. DOC. NO. 258).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, records of judgments rendered against the Government by the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, sitting in admiralty, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Wilhelm Alexanderson," approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat., pt. 2, p. 1553), and requiring an appropriation for its payment (under the Navy Department, $2,787.65); and by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting in admiralty, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act for the relief of New England Coal & Coke Co.," approved April 26, 1916 (39 Stat., pt. 2, p. 1261), requiring an appropriation for its payment (under the Navy Department, $7,402.45), etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 259).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting estimates of appropriations required by the Indian Service, Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1923, for rebuilding the boys' dormitory at the Rapid City Indian School, South Dakota, and the school building at the Tomah Indian School, Wisconsin, both of which were recently destroyed by fire, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPRESSION OF MOB VIOLENCE.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 822, the bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the motion is not in order at this time. The first order of business is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—COMPENSATION OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia rises to a question of personal privilege, and will proceed.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. In this morning's issue of the Washington Post, under the general headline of the soldiers' bonus, appear the words, "WATSON (Georgia) switches to support of measure he rapped." In the body of the article is a subhead line, "WATSON of Georgia changes view." These sentences follow the subhead line:

> The supporters of the bonus bill have gained one vote on the showing of this roll call, Senator WATSON, of Georgia, who made a speech against the bill and opposed it when it was before the Senate, switching his position and now voting for it. He made no explanation excepting that there were some features of the bill he did not like, but decided to vote for it anyway. His change of position had been discounted in the calculations of the required strength to sustain the anticipated veto.

Mr. President, I think I am strictly within the bounds of accuracy when I say that no Senator on this floor has made more speeches for a soldiers' bonus than have been made by the junior Senator from Georgia. Again and again I have addressed the Senate on the subject. In fact, I had a set debate with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on the subject as to whether George Washington himself was not a pioneer bonus advocate. On the very day in July, 1921, when the bonus bill was withdrawn I was one of those who protested. On yesterday when I voted, although the RECORD, I regret to say, fails to show it, I stated briefly that I hoped I would have permission to say that while the bill was not all that I wanted for the soldier, I would vote for it nevertheless. Those words should have been in the RECORD. They are not there.

Mr. President, when I voted against the soldiers' bonus bill there had already been voted out a sales tax plan proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], he himself being one of the very few who supported the plan. There still was left in the bill the McNary reclamation project amendment which, according to estimates made by those who are supposed to be capable of making estimates, would have taken from the Treasury over $300,000,000 of public money and which would have afforded the soldiers farms in the West or in the South some time within the next 5 or 10 years. I voted against the bill because it had that clause in it.

I also criticized freely the fact that the soldiers were not given a bonus in direct cash by a reissuance of more than two thousand million dollars which the Federal Reserve Board had illegally and criminally and ruinously retired from circulation and destroyed. I advocated that plan and would have voted for it. I would also have voted for the plan of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to pay the ex-service men out of the interest which, if foreign nations do not voluntarily pay, I for one am in favor of compelling them to pay if it has to be done with guns.

The bill as it pended before the Senate on yesterday was the original McCumber bill which gives the soldier a certificate of indebtedness which he can use as collateral in the borrowing of money at 4½ per cent. I myself paid 12 per cent for all the money that I ever borrowed in getting my start in life as a poor boy. Therefore I thought that half a loaf was better than no bread. I was assured by leaders on both sides, in whose judgment and integrity I had the utmost confidence, that it was the only kind of bill that could pass this Congress. I, therefore, voted for it.

I do not charge the Washington Post with willful misrepresentation. I hope it did not intend willfully to misrepresent my position, but I also hope that having made this plain and simple statement it will do me the justice to correct what it said.

Rising to a question of privilege, Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Senate as follows:

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Washington Post of this morning contains an article by Mr. Albert W. Fox touching upon the proceedings of the Senate of yesterday. The concluding part of that article reads:

* * * Much of the afternoon was consumed by Senator HEFLIN, who repeated with variations the speech he has been making almost daily for weeks in pursuance of his single-handed campaign against the deflation, Wall Street, conspiracies of the press to deny him adequate publicity, etc.

The Senator from Alabama for the last few days has been calling attention to the fact that the newspaper men in the press gallery leave their seats and "scurry away" as soon as he starts to speak.

Mr. President, I have never said that the newspaper men of the press gallery "scurry away" when I speak on deflation. I have said that certain newspaper men do that, and they do. They represent the part of the press that does not want the public to know the charges, the facts and figures regarding the millions made by certain Wall Street speculators and financiers under the deflation conducted by Governor Harding. They know what is wanted and expected of them. It may be that the owners of the papers they represent have told them to keep everything about deflation out of their papers.

It is good, however, to have a confession from some of these boys to the effect that I have been calling attention to a fact.

Speaking of the departure of certain newspaper men when deflation is mentioned this article says:

He believes the influence of Wall Street accounts for this and also accounts for the fact that his speeches are not given publicity.

There is another confession that it is a fact that the things which I have said and proven in this Chamber have not been given publicity but suppressed and kept from reaching the people through certain newspapers. I read:

So far as can be ascertained there is no disposition to minimize the importance of the Senator's speeches, but the news value of them in this case has admittedly been dulled by the fact that the Senator from Alabama has said virtually the same thing over and over again for months.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Alabama has repeated these things for months he never has once gotten them into the newspapers in question. I have charged and proven that the deflation conducted by Governor Harding was drastic, destructive, and that it robbed millions of people for the enrichment of a favored few. I have shown that usurious interest rates were charged to the people of the South and West and nowhere else, but these papers never carried a line of it to the country. Is not the wholesale robbery of the people of a nation an interesting news item? Is not hurtful discrimination against sixty-odd millions of people in favor of Wall Street and Chicago interesting news? Is not any discussion of a policy of contraction and deflation which took out of the business of the Nation in a few months' time $2,005,000,000, leaving in its wake business ruin and financial disaster, interesting news? Here is a brilliant writer who confesses that they have not given publicity to my speeches on deflation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know if the Senator from Alabama is speaking upon a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator to be addressing himself to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CURTIS. I make the point of order that debate is out of order unless the Senator from Alabama is addressing himself to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. There has been no business transacted since a quorum was developed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under a former ruling the point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains it. The presentation of petitions and memorials is now in order.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. The Senator from Kansas had just as well withdraw his point of order, because he is not going to proceed with any business at all until I am through. I propose that the country shall be informed, at least through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as to what is going on here, and I propose to be heard upon this newspaper attack and misrepresentation of my position.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I decline to yield at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am very fond of my good friend from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. He has worked hard and he is nearly worn out. He is one of the few Republican Senators who stay here constantly. He needs a vacation, as some others of us do. I know how anxious the Senator is to go along with some other matters, but I wish him to possess his soul in patience while I operate a little while this morning. [Laughter.]

I again read from the article in the Washington Post for the purpose of making another comment:

So far as can be ascertained, there is no disposition to minimize the importance of the Senator's speeches, but the news value of them in this case has admittedly been dulled by the fact that the Senator from Alabama has said virtually the same thing over and over again for months.

Well, Mr. President, you have doubtless heard the story about the old negro who said his wife was the most extravagant woman in the world; that it was "money at breakfast, money at lunch, money at dinner, money all the time." He was asked, "Rastus, what in the name of the Lord does she do with it all?" He replied, "I dunno, sir; I ain't never giv her none yet."

Here this brilliant writer of the press gallery says that this news is being dulled. He says that it is deflation to-day, deflation to-morrow, and deflation next day. Well, Mr. President, certain newspapers, like old Rastus, have not given any of it any publicity yet. That is what I am complaining about. The public, as a matter of right, is entitled to have this news, but it is not getting it. The question arises, Shall such newspapers enjoy the privileges of the press gallery of the Senate and deliberately prevent important news from reaching the public?

There is consolation in the fact that the charges that I have made and the convincing and undisputed proof that I have submitted have gone into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am getting letters from every State in the Union. Wherever the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD goes my condemnation of destructive deflation and my demand for honesty and efficiency in the management of the Federal reserve banking system are meeting with hearty approval. This doctrine is spreading through the precincts, it will spread through the counties, and ultimately through the Nation, because this Nation that God preserved to strike the decisive blow in the greatest war of all the world has been preserved for a high and noble purpose, and we intend to see to it by the help of God that the money lords of America and the subsidized press shall not control or destroy it.

The article in the Washington Post also said:

In other words, the campaign he is waging has remained a one-man campaign featured only by reiteration of the charges upon which it is founded.

Is it a one-man campaign? With the exception of about three, every Democrat here agrees with me; and I assert that every Republican Senator from the West will vote, if his name is sent in, against the confirmation of W. P. G. Harding. If there is anyone of them who will not vote against him let him stand up now and say so. Nobody responds. Does that look like I am alone in condemning Governor Harding and the robber deflation policy conducted by him?

It is true that I have, in conjunction with John Skelton Williams, former Comptroller of the Currency, brought to the attention of the Senate and the country the irrefutable facts regarding deflation and the interests that made hundreds of millions out of it, and I have had Senators to come to me from both sides of the Chamber from time to time and tell me that I was right and that they would vote against the confirmation of Governor Harding. Yet in the closing hours of Congress this writer undertakes to create the impression that there is no opposition here to this man W. P. G. Harding. Let his name be sent in and I will disclose a matter that will shake the confidence of every Senator in this body in his integrity.

Then Mr. Fox, brilliant, clever, genial newspaper writer, says:

> Thus, when the familiar phrases are recognized the members of the press gallery withdraw until the speech is concluded, and this seemingly has given Senator HEFLIN the impression there is some conspiracy in Wall Street to deny him the publicity to which Senators are entitled.

Mr. President, I understand just as well why the reporters for certain subsidized sheets leave the press gallery when I go to speak on deflation as I would if W. P. G. Harding and those in Wall Street made doubly rich by him should leave. Mr. President, I appreciate this young man's frankness in confessing that there is an understanding among some of them to withdraw when I begin to speak on Governor Harding and deflation. I said once before that when I commenced to speak on the crime of deflation certain ones of them would get up and leave so that if I ever asked "Why did you not print the story of HEFLIN's charge and the proof that he submitted?" they would be able to say, "Why, I was not in the press gallery at that time and I did not hear it." Oh, Mr. President, there is going to be a reckoning day in this business; it has started now, and it is going through. It is a strange and serious situation, Senators, when a man who stands and fights for what he knows is right, when the facts sustain him in every step that he takes, and when the record which is made up and written so that it can not be changed supports his position, to have smart newspaper men sitting back drawing big salaries misrepresenting him and suppressing what he says. Mr. President, they did that to "Old Hickory" Jackson. The forbears of this same Wall Street gang had him cartooned as a donkey sitting in a fence corner among the broom sedge, but that did not deter or intimidate him in the least. They had tried to get him to condone their crooked conduct, and, failing in that, they tried to discredit and destroy him. But he triumphed, and his unflinching courage and unfaltering allegiance to the principles of right and justice endeared him to all of his patriotic countrymen.

In the battle between the haughty money lords of his day and the demands of legitimate business amongst the masses Old Hickory was on the side of the people. He defied the corrupt money power of his day and compelled the banks to supply the money needed to carry on the business of the people.

This newspaper man, Mr. Fox, said that Senator HEFLIN said the things in that speech he had said many times before. Let us see whether I did or not. Here is what I said, Senators, in this speech to which he refers:

I said that the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, one of the 12 reserve banks, paid more money in yearly salaries to its officials than the Government paid to the President and his Cabinet, the Vice President and all the Senators, to the Speaker of the House and all the Members of the House, to the Federal Trade Commission, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the War Finance Corporation, to all the circuit judges of the United States, to the General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy. I had never said that before. I had never made that charge or submitted the figures before, and I submit that that is a very interesting piece of news to the taxpayers of the United States. It astounded the Senators who heard me and everyone in the galleries and it will astound everybody who has the opportunity of reading it. Think of it, Senators! One banking institution, with the sanction of Governor Harding, took money 90 per cent of which should have gone in a franchise tax to the Government and permitted it to be devoted to the payment of the salaries of 2,500 or 3,000 officials, clerks, and agents, who did less business this year than a big national bank right by it with 200 officials. That is the sort of record this man has; yet they are asking you to call upon the President to reappoint him, and they have a secret canvass going on in the Senate now asking Senators, whispering around, if they will vote for him if his name is sent in. That is what is going on, Senators. Certainly the phrases touching the scandalous amount paid in salaries at the New York Federal Reserve Bank are not familiar to the press gallery.

Mr. President, if the name of W. P. G. Harding is sent in for confirmation, I am confident that he will be rejected, but if he should by any hook or crook be confirmed, I promise now to speak week after week, as long as my term lasts, bringing to the attention of the Senate and the country his part in the terrible crime of 1920. I am going to fight this thing to the end. The "crime of '73" pales into insignificance when compared to the "crime of '20." Such a crime must never occur again, and in order to prevent its recurrence it must be condemned by the American people. The people of my State are with me; 9 out of every 10 are with me in this fight. If Governor Harding and his friends who announce their purpose to oppose me doubt this, they will have the opportunity two years hence to test it out on the hustings and at the polls in Alabama.

A press dispatch from Washington to an Alabama paper some weeks ago said that it was understood that Governor Harding and his friends would see that I had opposition, and it named the man that they would support. None of these things can move me from the righteous stand that I have taken. Let them "pick" their candidate now, and the honest, intelligent, courageous people of Alabama will "pluck" him later on. The people of my State are not for sale. They believe in sustaining the public official who does his duty fearlessly and faithfully. They also believe in exposing and punishing the man who uses his position to serve sinister interests, who shows himself to be unworthy of their confidence, who betrays a public trust.

Mr. President, I said in the speech mentioned in the Washington Post article another thing that I have not said before—that Governor Harding has permitted the officials of 4 banking institutions—4 out of the 12—to set aside $49,000,000 and a little more—nearly $50,000,000—for the erection of 4 bank buildings, and that is nearly five times as much as the average annual expenditure for the past 20 years on all "appropriations made by Congress for all public buildings, post offices, Federal courthouses, and customhouses in all 48 States of the Union." Can any newspaper justify its conduct in failing to give that important news to the public?

Do you know why they do not give it to the public, why they do not want anything to reach the people that would in any way hurt Wall Street's deflation pet, W. P. G. Harding? Those interests are moving heaven and earth to have him reappointed, and suppressing news is a part of their game. Some of these boys have no doubt had their instructions, but, Mr. President, when they undertake to keep from the American people facts that I am giving here in the interest of the whole people they are showing themselves unworthy of the privileges of the Senate's press gallery. I am fighting for a just and righteous cause, and the people whose Government this is are entitled to know what is being said here on their side of this question, and I ought to have the support of every newspaper in the country; but, of course, I know that some of these newspapers are bought out and owned bodily by certain corrupt interests, and those interests I am fighting and those interests are fighting me. That is the truth about it. I welcome their battle, but I want it known who they are when they assail me.

Senators, do you know what would have happened if that $49,000,000 had not been gleefully seized upon and set aside for bank palaces and God knows what else? Why 90 per cent of it, forty-odd million dollars of it, would have gone into the Public Treasury to help pay the public debt and bear the burdens of Government; but they got it. Do you wonder that W. P. G. Harding, who permitted them, aye, told them how to get it, is now able to have them indorse him for reappointment? In the past he was good to them, and with him as governor of the board there is bound to be more pickings. Senators, everyone who hears me believes that there is graft by the millions in this enormous building fund. There is no escape from such a conclusion. Crooked doings, scandal, graft, and yet they have the gall to ask the President to reappoint this man. Four bank buildings, we are told, are to cost $31,000,000 more than the Capitol here in Washington; the Senate and House Office Buildings, made of marble; and the State, War, and Navy Building, all combined. Mr. President, instead of sending to the Senate the name of the man who approved that grafting and scandalous deal he and some others ought to be sent to prison.

I showed, in the speech mentioned by the Washington Post this morning, how the New York Federal Reserve Bank was throwing money away in useless salaries, money that otherwise would go into the Federal Treasury. The creation of easy berths at the expense of the taxpayers of the country, the carrying of over 2,000 unnecessary so-called officials on the pay roll at tremendous salaries, and all this approved by Governor Harding. It could not be done without his approval. Let me repeat, lest some forget, that a national bank in the same city is doing more business than the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and it has only 200 officials. Senators, am I not right in pleading for an honest accounting of money in which the Government is interested? Am I not right in bringing to the attention of the Senate and the country this inexcusable and indefensible performance of Governor Harding and the bank officials of New York? In the face of such staggering facts, is it any wonder that they try to suppress me and even to frighten me with suggestions of opposition? Why do they not answer my arguments? Why do they not disprove my charges? Simply because they know they are true.

Mr. President, there is another point that I made that I want to suggest for the benefit of the brilliant writer who wrote these lines in the Post and said that it was the same old story. I set out in this speech that Governor Harding wrote a letter to the member banks and told them how to evade the franchise tax, how to beat the Government out of millions, and that under his tutelage and the plan that he suggested they did beat the Government out of $180,000,000 that should have and would have gone into the Public Treasury. That is the literal truth, but I never had said that before, but this brilliant newspaper writer says that Senator HEFLIN is repeating the same things. Those are things in which the entire population are interested. Why did not these particular papers carry that to their readers?

Mr. President, that raises the question, "Why do certain of these big bank officials want this man—Governor Harding—reappointed?" Do you not suppose they feel under obligations to him? He was the first man who wrote to them and told them how to beat the Government out of franchise taxes. How did he do it? He said, "Put some money under the head of charge-offs, put some under depreciation, some under value for construction of buildings"; so they adopted eagerly the suggestion of this smooth artist, W. P. G. Harding, and the Government is getting no money at all now from that source. The franchise tax is defeated, going into a fund that is being gobbled up somehow by these officials, and some of these officials are standing on tiptoe asking the President to reappoint this man.

Mr. President, Governor Strong, of New York, was drawing a salary of $30,000, and Governor Harding permitted him to have an increase in salary of $20,000, making it $50,000. Do you not suppose he would bow and smile right pleasantly to Governor Harding? He has put these men under obligations to him, all of them, and now he is drawing on them. What was he doing? Making himself so strong that he could not be turned out or overthrown. That is exactly what he was driving at.

Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia. I will print the most of it in the RECORD. It is against the reappointment of Governor Harding. I ask that it be printed in 8-point type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Public Ledger of Wednesday, September 13, 1922.]

FEDERAL RESERVE HEAD—ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST REAPPOINTMENT OF PRESENT GOVERNOR JUSTIFY PRESIDENT'S DELAY.

(By Edward G. Lowry. Copyright, 1922, by Public Ledger Co.)

"Some of President Harding's critics have not been quite fair to him because of his failure to reappoint W. P. G. Harding governor of the Federal Reserve Board. They have assumed in their criticisms that the President has the choice of naming the Alabama man again or selecting an unworthy political appointee or a 'dirt farmer.' That, of course, is absurd. There are a hundred men in the country every whit as able as W. P. G. Harding who are available for the governorship of the Federal Reserve Board.

"The pressure for Governor Harding's reappointment comes from banking interests on this seaboard, and particularly from New York. It comes from men and from interests who do not know or do not care about the sentiments entertained by the producing sections of the West and Middle West for their candidate. In the largest sense of the word Governor Harding made himself politically unavailable for reappointment before his term of office expired. It is by no means certain that the President will not yet yield to the strong pressure that has been brought upon him to send Governor Harding's name to the Senate; but if he does he will affront not only a large section of the country but a large element of his own party in Congress. Indeed, the President knows that it is doubtful whether Governor Harding could secure the necessary number of votes in the Senate to confirm his nomination.

"The Federal Reserve Board stands at this juncture in need of the wisest and most prudent direction if it is not to lose the authority and prestige which it should enjoy. The board should be to the financial administration of the Federal Government what the Supreme Court is to the administration of justice. Its decisions and its policies should be above criticism and above reproach. Its fairness and freedom from outside influence should be unquestioned. That is what its proponents and friends had in mind when the board was created.

"That is the reputation it enjoyed until its deflation policy in the depression of 1920–21 set the agricultural and producing sections of the country by the ears. Whatever may be said of the wisdom and necessity of deflation following the great expansion caused by the war, the West will tell you with one voice that the method of enforcement of the board's policy was drastic and harsh; that it was not in the interest of the farmers, the live-stock men, the interior merchants, and small country bankers, but of the large groups of financial interests in the East here. That is what a large section of this country believes. It is resentful, and that resentment is voiced and made manifest in Congress. W. P. G. Harding was governor of the board when the deflation was put in effect, and therefore the burden of the resentment is directed against him. He had become a burden to be carried by the administration, and no administration carries burdens that it can drop. That is the cynical way of politics.

"To succeed Mr. Harding the President would like to name an eastern financier or banker with no Wall Street associations or connections, but under the law he is forbidden to appoint more than one member of the board from any Federal reserve district. New York and Boston both have members of the board at the present time. The President's mind at this moment turns strongly to D. R. Crissinger, Comptroller of the Currency. Mr. Crissinger is a Marion, Ohio, man and a lifelong friend of Mr. Harding. Before the President came to Washington he and Crissinger sat together on several boards of directors. From the beginning of this administration Mr. Crissinger has been one of the closest of the "unofficial advisers" of the President. He has been consulted more than is commonly known. He is a lawyer, a banker, and a successful farmer. He is the type of mind that appeals most strongly to the President."

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to comment on one or two statements in this editorial. Here is one of them:

"The board should be to the financial administration of the Federal Government what the Supreme Court is to the administration of justice."

Mr. President, I have charged on this floor that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] went up to this chief judge, Governor Harding, and asked him to assemble his court to hear him—a United States Senator from a sovereign State—to hear him and his constituents present their petition and ask for relief from the deadly drive of deflation; and the judge said he had heard enough, and turned his back upon the man who was pleading to be heard, and this paper says that this board ought to be like a court that would hear and decide. The Senator from North Carolina had to say to him, "You will assemble that board. I will have a hearing." The board did assemble reluctantly. That is the attitude of this man who, this paper says, must be as a judge on the bench to hear and determine causes.

"Its fairness and freedom from outside influence should be unquestioned. That is what its proponents and friends had in mind when the board was created.

"That is the reputation it enjoyed until its deflation policy in the depression of 1920 and 1921"—

Mr. President, I have said that on this floor—that it operated well until 1920, and that that is when the mischief began. I want you to get this:

"To succeed Mr. Harding the President would like to name an eastern financier or banker with no Wall Street associations or connections, but under the law he is forbidden to appoint more than one member of the board from any Federal reserve district. New York and Boston both have members of the board at the present time. The President's mind at this moment turns strongly to D. R. Crissinger, Comptroller of the Currency."

I am now going to give the boys who remain in the press gallery another piece of news that I have not repeated over and over, and I know how the reading public to-morrow will glance down the columns of the papers of the boys who have flown and see not a line about my speech. That piece of news is that during the deflation drive a banking and trust company in New York City was about to break when its president was speculating wildly and borrowing money from other banks, and the Comptroller of the Currency suggested that an investigation be made, but Governor Harding declined to make it. It was refused by this "judge on the Federal reserve supreme court bench"; and this editorial from the Public Ledger says that it should not be moved by outside influences. The governor of the board declined to make the investigation asked for by John Skelton Williams when he pointed out what was going on. How did he act toward the South and West?

A man testified before our committee that he was feeding hogs and sheep for the market, and when deflation came and he could not get money to buy feedstuffs, he killed his sheep, cut them up, and fed the meat to the hogs, and the hogs got some kind of a disease from eating too much of the meat and died. Those were results of some of the "impartial" judgments of the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board. He would not even disturb by an investigation a big bank in New York that was speculating wildly and about to break, but he turned his guns on a little man who could not fight back, a farmer, and at one fell stroke destroyed his business outright. He is but one in hundreds of thousands of instances. Here is another article written by another clever and distinguished newspaper man, Mark Sullivan. He makes some prognostications about this appointment. He says:

"But an impressive group of persons interested takes the view that President Harding must yet reappoint Governor Harding and that if President Harding does so Governor Harding, whatever his personal inclination might be, must hold himself open to accept a reappointment if and when it is tendered to him."

Mr. President, some of these statements are exceedingly amusing. Hold himself open to accept! He would trip over mountain tops and leap from crag to crag and peak to peak in order to get the appointment. Hold himself open to accept the appointment! Why, he has intrigued and trafficked in every way imaginable to get reappointed. He is pulling every wire now that he laid so well while he was governor of the board. All through the time that he maladministered this system he was working to have himself reappointed. When he was permitting scores and scores of useless employees to be placed on the pay rolls of the Federal reserve banks and permitting the bank officials to greatly increase their own salaries and taught them how to keep in their own hands money that belonged to the Government in franchise taxes he was trying to make certain his reappointment.

Mark Sullivan says that he should hold himself open—be ready to accept. Mr. President, they need not have any doubt about that. When Cleveland was President "Bob" Taylor had served out his term as Governor of Tennessee and was just retiring from that office, and somebody suggested to Cleveland that he ought to make him Commissioner of Indian Affairs. So Cleveland wired him, "Will you accept appointment as Commissioner of Indian Affairs?" "Bob" wired back: "Old Rastus came over to see my uncle, and when he got ready to go home my uncle said, 'Rastus, would you take a ham to Aunt Mandy?' Rastus threw his mouth wide open and, showing every tooth in his head, exclaimed with enthusiasm, 'Lawd God, Marse Henry, just try me!'" [Laughter.]

He is not only holding himself in readiness to accept if appointed, but he is doing everything in his power to get reappointed, and Wall Street has become impatient and is now practically demanding that the President reappoint him.

This article further says that those advocating Governor Harding's reappointment insist that the important thing to establish is the freedom of this office from considerations of politics, from considerations of personal relations to the President of the United States, from all other considerations whatever except the principle that the office shall not be subject to change on political or personal grounds; that the office shall have continuity; and that anybody who has filled it reasonably well shall be kept in office.

Mr. President, this is the most important office in this Government outside of the office of President. It is the most dangerous office in the Government when once dragged into politics. It has been dragged into politics by W. P. G. Harding. Nobody ever built up such a system of politics about him as this man has. You can not have a chamber of commerce meeting, or a meeting of a Kiwanis Club, a Rotary Club, a business club, a civic club, any sort of a club, but that he has somebody on the ground to whisper around and ask them to indorse him for reappointment.

I made a mistake here a day or two ago when I said that the 12 Federal reserve banks had increased the salaries and current expenses for 1922 over 1918 by fifteen-odd million dollars. Current expenses are not included. They have increased their salaries since 1918 to the fiscal year ending 1922 $15,000,000. That has already happened.

Why is it, do you suppose, I can not get that to the country except through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and through stories that some of the boys may send to home papers which some of us do not see? I have editorials sent to me pointing out news I gave here that never appeared in any newspaper. They have them headed this way, "Things of importance to the American people said on the floor of the Senate but which were never sent out by the news service at Washington."

Should I not be commended for making a fight for a free press and an honest press for the American people? A few days ago a short notice was sent out about my speech, and I want to show you how it read. Get the main point in it. This appeared in a paper in my State. It might have been a typographical error; I suppose it was. Anyhow, it was against my position, and here is the way it reads. I will read from a note I am writing to the Birmingham News:

"MY DEAR MR. EDITOR: In a press dispatch sent from Washington and appearing in the Birmingham News of September 7 there is an error regarding a statement made by me in the Senate. The article quotes me as saying that 'Governor Harding permitted the officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks to increase their own salaries $15,000 between the end of 1918 and 1920.'"

The statement should read:

"Governor Harding permitted the officials of the 12 Federal reserve banks to increase their own salaries $15,000,000 between 1918 and the end of the fiscal year 1922."

There is a good deal of difference between $15,000 and $15,000,000. That may have been a typographical error, but, anyhow, those who read it would say, "That is not much of an increase for all the officers of all 12 banks for four years." But it is $15,000,000, and when you consider that those banks did less business in 1922 than in 1918, where is the reason for appropriating to private individuals for personal uses this additional $15,000,000? Thirteen million dollars should have gone into the Federal Treasury. If they had not spent it, where would it have gone? Thirteen million dollars of it would have gone into the Public Treasury. That is not only an interesting news item, but it is a very interesting financial item to the taxpayers of the country.

Here is another article I want to comment on before I finish. This is from the Globe and Commercial Advertiser of New York. They seem to like to work on me up there. I have pointed out so much of their devilment that they take a delight in criticizing me. Of course, they hate me just as they hate every man who has ever lived who has stood for the right and could not be either bought or bulldozed into doing the crooked things they wanted done. They want either to control you or to destroy you. This article is in error or I am in error and the people who tell me are in error. It says:

"W. P. G. Harding is continuing to serve pending the appointment of his successor."

That is not correct. He is out, and has been out since the 9th of August. Of course, he is hanging around here, I understand, and pulling every wire he can to get himself reappointed. But here is the significant statement in the article:

"Almost without exception the business and banking interests of the country, led by Secretary Mellon, have urged the reappointment of Governor Harding."

Mr. President, a paper published in Secretary Mellon's own State, the Public Ledger, a Republican paper, says that the men who want this man Harding reappointed are from the East, the Atlantic seaboard, but it goes on to set out that the other part of the country is against his reappointment. But this paper says that Secretary Mellon is demanding that he be reappointed. Secretary Mellon is an immensely wealthy man himself. I do not complain at any man who has made his wealth honestly, but what right has a very wealthy man, himself at the head of the Treasury Department, to name the man who shall sit at the head of the banking system of the country?

Yet this paper virtually said that Secretary Mellon is leading the fight to have this man reappointed.

"President Harding is confronted with the necessity of yielding to their demand for Governor Harding's removal or fixing up a compromise which will nullify the farm interests by giving them a member of their own selection in consideration of his reappointment."

This has reference to the farming interests. Let me serve notice here and now on anyone who represents the farming interests here or misrepresents them, if one of them undertakes to put himself in a combination with this crowd of Wall Street gamblers and robbers to have W. P. G. Harding reappointed I am going to denounce him on this floor. I am going to show that he is not a friend of the farmer, but an enemy of the farmer, and one who has betrayed that interest. The farmers of the South and West would no more indorse Governor Harding than a sane father and mother would indorse the man who had assaulted and slain their children.

Mr. President, I am discussing the suggested arrangement that this shrewd crowd up in Wall Street are trying to put over on the farmers of the country. I have been in Congress for 18 years and the people of my State know that I am the friend of the farmer. I was on the Committee on Agriculture in the House and I am on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the Senate, and I have their interests enough at heart to dare assail any official self-constituted or sent here to the Capitol who betrays the trust and goes over to the Wall Street interests. If I hear of it I am going to read some documents of protest that I have against them right here in this Chamber. I have nothing to hide. Somebody must always be willing to stand up here and say when these officials are representing the farmers faithfully and when they are not representing them faithfully. I just wanted to say that about this article. That is about all I want to say on it.

Now, I have here an article from the New York Evening Post, a very short one. I want to read it to you Senators. It is undertaking to prod the President, it is scolding at the President, this bold and brazen boodle bunch of Wall Street, at a time when his good wife is lingering betwixt life and death. Listen to what this paper says in its scolding editorial:

"A delay that is a scandal."

Here they are demanding that he hurry up and come away from the bedside of his desperately ill wife and do what they tell him to do to, reappoint W. P. G. Harding. I read:

"The delay in the appointment of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board has reached the proportions of a scandal.

"No one seems to know or be able to find out why the name of Governor Harding is not sent to the Senate."

Senators, did you ever see anything that would excel that bold and brazen thrust at the Chief Executive of 100,000,000 people? The President is practically told that it will be a scandal if he does not go on and name the man that Wall Street has indorsed. There it is in a nutshell. Will the President yield to such pressure? I do not believe he will. I read:

"The opposition to his reappointment is distinctly to his credit, being based upon his refusal to allow the board to be made the football of special interests."

That must have choked even that poor thick-hided editorial writer to say that.

"Keep it from being made the football of special interests." What else was it but the football of special interests during the drive of deflation? Let me remind you of what occurred and you will agree with me. They applied the progressive interest rate to the State of my friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who sits just to my right. They applied it to my State. They never applied it at all in Wall Street. Now, what is that but serving the special interests? Wall Street speculators got all the money they wanted for 6 per cent, but your people, Senators from the West, and mine paid 20 and 30 and 40 and 60 per cent and more, and then a paper like that dares to have the brazen audacity to scold and try to drive the President, sitting at the bedside of his sick wife, to come out and hand in the appointment of the man that the special interests of Wall Street had O. K'd. I read:

"Secretary Mellon has placed the country under fresh obligation by unflinchingly advocating Governor Harding's reappointment."

What about the people of the great West? Are not they a part of the Union? What about the people of the South? The South and the West produce the stuff that feeds and clothes the Nation; and we are outlawed, held up, pillaged, and plundered by this man, and the Wall Street interests flourish and make their millions and billions and then have the gall to scold at the President and demand that he name at once the man who guided deflation to the suffering, the misery, and business ruin of millions of American people. I read:

"Has President Harding decided to avoid the fight that Senator HEFLIN promises to make against Governor Harding's confirmation by waiting until Congress adjourns and then giving Governor Harding a recess appointment? This would merely postpone the contest. It is virtually admitted that if President Harding makes the renomination it will be confirmed. This emphasizes his duty. He has waited long enough to allow the fullest consideration to everything that can be said in opposition to the reappointment. He should now give that opposition its proper and final answer by sending Governor Harding's name to the Senate."

Senators, here is an attempt to coerce and hurry the President into doing the bidding of Wall Street. They are growing more and more impatient and displaying more and more a desire to impress the public that they intend to have their orders obeyed. "We who represent the money changers, we whose god is gold, demand at your hands the reappointment of Governor Harding." I make the prediction again to-day that his name will not come, and that if it does come his confirmation will be defeated.

Now, one other thing before I close. Here is the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, the greatest business magazine on the continent. The editor of this paper, Richard H. Edmonds, is one of the ablest, best Americans who lives beneath the flag. He has a strong editorial against the reappointment of Governor Harding in the issue of September 7, 1922, page 78.

Why, Senators, the thoughtful men and women of the country are talking about this thing everywhere. They are talking about this at the crossroads. They are talking about it in banking circles. Bankers, many of them, are afraid to come out and speak their honest convictions because the governor of this board would intimidate them and mistreat them and punish them.

We have this man out now by the expiration of his term and the interests that made big fortunes by deflation are demanding that the President put him back with all of his crooked record trailing at his heels. Let me read you part of the editorial from the Manufacturers' Record:

"Playing politics, indeed!

"The inspired press continues to be filled with editorials"—

That is comforting to a man like me, who is fighting a battle for the right and for the good of his country, to have a man like Edmonds say that.

Here is what he says:

"The inspired press continues to be filled with editorials, evidently of identical origin, demanding that President Harding, at this late date, restore to office and power the former governor of the Federal Reserve Board, W. P. G. Harding. It is claimed that Governor Harding is the victim of politics. Rather has he all along been the beneficiary of politics, else he would have been removed months ago. It is public opinion that has made his longer tenure of office impossible, a public opinion that is in no sense partisan, for wherever men gather and talk, even in the financial districts, be they Democrats or Republicans, there is voiced the thought that W. P. G. Harding can exercise the vast abilities with which his friends endow him better in private than in public life.

"In a typical editorial demanding the reappointment of former Governor Harding the Wall Street Journal does its favorite but scant service. Bankers, says the Journal, have urged the reappointment because they have recognized ability, 'because they, too, at a late date recognized the wisdom of Governor Harding's action when he urged the restriction of credit.' Urged the restriction of credit! Why, is not the former governor on record, in testimony before congressional commissions, in the press, and in public addresses, as having militantly declared that never, never was there any restriction of credit—that he expanded credit during the panic, as his charts showed, and that the accusation against him was false and untrue?"

Mr. President, I said here that in Wall Street they pat him on the back and congratulate him for deflating, and in the South and West and here they deny that he deflated.

Continuing, Mr. Edmonds says: "The bankers would have him rewarded for doing the thing which he emphatically declares he did not do. No man can be on both ends of a seesaw at once."

That is a statement of the Manufacturers' Record. Now comes the gist, the main point, of this strong editorial.

"We hear reports that powerful financial interests are declining to contribute to the campaign funds of the Republican Party unless first assured of the reappointment of W. P. G. Harding. That would be playing politics with a vengeance, it is needless to point out, and any appointment made under such duress and coercion would cause a political revolution in this country."

Mr. President, that is all I desire to read, and I wish to print this and the other references which I have made in 8-point type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to say a word or two further before I close. This editorial presents one of the greatest issues that will ever come before the American people, which is, Is the governorship of the Federal Reserve Board for sale? Can men have it by contributing to the funds of any party, either Democratic or Republican? Shall they buy the office which has and exercises control over the money supply of the country?

Mr. President, a great daily in New York City has already had an article on that subject, and here is the Manufacturers' Record, which goes into the business establishments of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people, and the editor of that paper makes the statement that if this thing should be done it would create a revolution politically in the country, and it ought to do so.

Mr. President, the people of the South and West are entitled to be heard. They will be heard. If they can not be heard here in defeating the reappointment or then the confirmation of this man, if his name should come in, they will have another chance to be heard at the polls. I will tell you what would happen, Mr. President, should this reappointment be made. There is not anything in President Harding's administration that would so injuriously affect him in the minds of the masses as to permit the Wall Street crowd to compel him to reappoint Governor Harding at the head of the Federal Reserve Board.

The issue is joined and I wish to draw a picture of the two forces to the conflict. The South and West and Northwest with their teeming millions as I saw them in 1919 and the spring of 1920 enjoyed prosperity. The average man had an automobile; his family wore good clothes. Those people were buying farms; they were building houses; they were buying little homes in the towns and cities. Prosperity was not confined as now to a few money kings who tower like peaks above a plain, but it was felt by the common man. It was seen everywhere amongst the masses, spreading peace and plenty over a smiling land. I heard the edict go out of Wall Street, "Deflate! deflate!" I saw the message sent back by Governor Harding, "We will use every power at our command to carry out the edict." Then I saw him sweeping through the South and through the West. I saw upon the faces of the once prosperous people the look of despondency, distress, and discontent as the tide of prosperity ebbed and flowed, passing away, leaving the people in the gloom of despair, with clouds of debt hanging over them.

Here, then, Mr. President, an invading army could not have done more harm and wrought more ruin to our property than did this drastic, destructive deflation conducted by Governor Harding. It impoverished our people; it mercilessly reduced the salaries of the ministers of God; it closed the schoolhouse door. Boys and girls belonging to families moderately well to do received telegrams at college to come home, while distress and discontent seized the people, happy and prosperous just a little while ago.

Hear the western man: "Mr. President, we had fine cattle feeding upon the plains that reminded one of the days to which the Bible refers when cattle were 'grazing on a thousand hills'; prosperity was there; sheep were feeding upon the plains as far as eye could see; men and women had automobiles in which to ride; the people were happy and contented."

And I saw the clouds of deflation gathering in the East, and then I heard the muttering thunders of currency contraction and credit curtailment, and then I saw the storm of deflation break in all its fury. It destroyed the sheep, hog, and cattle industry in the West, and the grain markets of the country perished; and when the storm was over I saw devastation and ruin where peace and prosperity had been. There was disappointment, discontent, and debts—these and nothing more.

Whence comes the demand for Governor Harding's reappointment? Only from those who profited by deflation; only from those who fattened upon the substance of your people and mine, Mr. President. They are the ones who demand that this man be reappointed. Is this place for sale? Can they bulldoze the President, or can they influence the reappointment of this man by contributing or refusing to contribute to the campaign fund of the Republican Party?

If he is reappointed what will southern and western Senators do when the question of confirmation confronts them? Wall Street boldly and brazenly stands up and says to the President, "You have got to reappoint him; we hold the purse strings; the election is near at hand; and we will refuse to give money to your campaign funds unless you name W. P. G. Harding, the man we want, as governor of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. President, what will the President do? Will he reappoint him? Will the pressure be so great that he will reappoint him? If he shall reappoint him, what will western Senators do? What will some of the eastern Senators do? What will some of the northern Senators do? What will southern Senators do? It is my understanding that every one of them but three will vote against his confirmation, and those from the South who vote for his confirmation will be seen in this body no more when their terms of office expire.

The President is being boldly and brazenly importuned to reappoint Governor Harding by men who made millions and hundreds of millions out of the business distress and financial losses of three-fourths of the population of the United States. He is being urged to reappoint Governor Harding by the very men who planned and demanded deflation. These men no doubt promised Governor Harding that they would see to it that he would be reappointed. Governor Harding took orders and led the forces of deflation in the perpetration of a national crime. The deflation, conducted by him, not only robbed millions of patriotic Americans of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, but it drove to self-destruction—to suicide—more than 4,000 citizens who broke under the terrible stress and strain that bore down upon them under the Wall Street deflation drive conducted by Governor Harding. The deflation conducted by him paralyzed American industry and drove from prosperous employment 7,000,000 of laboring men. It struck down agriculture and stripped the farmers of the earnings and accumulations of a lifetime. The demon of deflation demanded a fearful toll at every farm and factory, town and city in the South and West. It will take our people 10 years to recover from the treacherous, painful, and murderous blow dealt by Wall Street deflation under the direction of Governor Harding. Will the President approve and indorse what he has done, and reward him with reappointment, or will he respect the deep feelings and heartfelt wishes of millions of patriotic Americans who protest against the reappointment of the man whose name is associated with the most cruel, the most despicable and criminal deflation holdup ever perpetrated against the American people?

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CALDER.

During the delivery of Mr. HEFLIN's speech,

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I renew the request I formerly made that the address delivered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] in Brooklyn some 10 days ago be printed in the RECORD, and in order that it may be more readable I ask that it be printed in 8-point type.

Mr. BORAH. I did not hear the request of the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I renew the request which I made a few days ago that an address delivered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] at the Nazarene Congregational Church in Brooklyn be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

Mr. BORAH. Is it a political speech?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It is not a political speech nor a partisan speech but a very thoughful speech upon current matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

"I have come here to-night in a twofold capacity—as a citizen of Brooklyn and as a Member of the United States Senate.

"As a citizen of this great borough of churches and homes I am glad of this opportunity of bringing you a message from Washington which will cheer every colored man and woman in the United States and hearten millions of other American citizens who believe that the negro, wherever he lives, whether in Brooklyn or the South, is entitled to justice and fair play at all times, no matter what the provocation may be.

"There is no influence so wholesome in American life to-day, in politics, or government, as the healthful influence of the church and the home. Brooklyn to-day holds a high place in the minds of the great masses of people in this country because it is a home city and because it is a religious city and you members of the colored race through your churches and homes have contributed your full share to the good reputation which our city has throughout the United States.

"This is the reason why I am always proud to identify myself as a Brooklyn man, whether I am speaking to colored men and women or to the Members of the Senate.

"We who are officers of the Government and you who are citizens have much in common. The Government can not function without your confidence and loyalty and you can not work or live without the orderly processes of law and the protection and safeguards which the Government gives every citizen. The Government and its citizens are absolutely dependent one upon the other, and if the Government has responsibilities toward you you also have responsibilities toward the Government.

"As a democracy our country to-day is governed not alone by laws but by public opinion. Laws which do not meet the views of the majority of the citizens of any community lose much of their value. By reason of the many complications to-day, legislation is almost impossible unless and until the full force of public opinion demands action. It is not because Congress is afraid or unable to act that needed legislation is not passed with greater speed. It is because every issue is really decided first by the people before it takes shape in the Halls of Congress; and then throughout the period of discussion there the great issues of the day are threshed out thoroughly by the people. You are a factor in legislation just as your influence is noted and needed to enforce laws. Public opinion knows no color line.

"Now, I have come here to-night to bring you a message, but before I delivered that message I wanted to emphasize the position and the responsibilities which you hold in American life to-day.

"There are in New York State to-day, according to the latest census figures, 198,483 negroes, an increase of 64,000 since the last census. Of this number a large majority live in the cities, most of them in Greater New York. Less than 14,000 live on farms, but among those negro farmers there are members of your race who own nearly 20,000 acres of land, valued at $1,558,000.

"I cite this specific example of the negro on the farms of our own State just to show you what the colored people have done in a field of activity where their work is not generally recognized in the North. These men and women are not only farm workers but farm owners with more than a million and a half dollars of their own savings invested in their business.

"You know as you see your own churches and homes, your own doctors, lawyers, teachers, and business men that every year adds to the progress and prosperity of your race; but I sometimes wonder whether the other citizens of the United States realize what progress the colored people have made since the Civil War. I wonder how many of you know what advancement has been made.

"The other day I was interested in seeing reports from the Negro Yearbook, published by your own people in Alabama. I saw there definite evidence of your advancement in all fields of activity. In 1866, for example, negroes in the United States owned only 12,000 homes. To-day more than 600,000 own their own homes. Fifty-three years ago you operated less than 2,000 farms. To-day the number of farms operated exclusively by colored people exceeds 1,000,000. In 1866 negroes conducted only 2,100 business establishments.

"To-day more than 50,000 negroes own and manage their own businesses in every part of the country.

"After the close of the Civil War negro children went to school wherever they could be admitted and where economic conditions made it possible for them to attend school, but the number was small compared to the attendance to-day, which exceeds 1,800,000. In 1866 there were some 600 negro schoolteachers. To-day there are close to 40,000, and there is being spent annually for negro education a sum in excess of $15,000,000.

Do you realize also as we meet here to-night in one of your churches that there are to-day more than 43,000 negro churches in this country, having nearly 5,000,000 members, and that you have invested as a race more than $85,000,000 in church property?

"Is there anything more convincing than these figures to prove the progress which you have made in less than 55 years? Is there anything which is a more eloquent tribute to the advancement of the colored people? You have progressed on the farm, in the factory, in the home, in public office, in the schools and universities, and in 1917, when the supreme test came, the negro regiment which fought in France went into the thick of battle and came out with honors high and colors flying. Were not your regimental colors one of the few to be decorated on the field of battle for unsurpassed bravery and discipline?

"When I think of the progress which you have made, and when I recall the services which you rendered in the World War, I am shocked and ashamed of a condition which exists in some parts of the country to-day. It is shocking to know that during the past 33 years there have been more than 3,400 lynchings, that many cases of lawlessness, that many and more cases where the negro has not had fair play and justice because he was a black man.

"I regret that something has not been done long ago to remove this cancer, but, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, legislation follows the demands of public opinion, and public opinion to-day is at last aroused to the necessity for action by the Federal Government to operate on this cancer and remove it from our body politic.

"This we are going to do through the Dyer antilynching bill, which is now on the calendar of the United States Senate for consideration before Congress adjourns. I hope it will be a law before we adjourn.

"I have been using all my influence in Washington to have that bill considered by the Senate, and the message I want to bring you to-night is that you have nearly won your fight. It is only a question of time until the Dyer bill is passed, if not before adjournment, then immediately afterwards, when the new Congress convenes. I say this in all earnestness because I know the sentiment in Washington, and I know how public opinion in this country has been aroused to the necessity of such a bill as the Dyer measure now on the Senate Calendar.

"Sometimes it takes a long time to arouse the American people, but when a campaign is conducted as cleanly and efficiently as has been your campaign of education for the Dyer bill not only is the country aroused to its duty but Congress is in a position where it can crystallize public sentiment into law.

"Through your own magazines and newspapers, through The Crisis, and the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People you have shown the American people and the Government once more that your interests are the interests of Americans and that your loyalty and devotion to the country are as great as that of any other people.

"You have made and you are making great progress, culturally, economically, and religiously, but do not make the mistake of becoming impatient. Build your foundations solidly as you have in the past. Follow the advice of your able leaders and you can look the future confidently in the face convinced that if not to-day, to-morrow will bring you the full measure of justice and fair play which is due you in every State in the Union.

"And, if I may leave one more message, it would be that you continue to make your Brooklyn standards so high that they can continue to be the standards of the colored race throughout the country."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, some days ago I took the liberty——

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield to the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no; I am not going to make a speech.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The Senator from Alabama is speaking to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yielded briefly to the Senator from California, but I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not going to make a speech.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from California will have his opportunity later.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. But I do not want to sit here all day to ask this privilege. If the Senator from Alabama will yield to me a second——

Mr. HEFLIN. It is not my fault. The Senator from Iowa has objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa calls for the regular order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I myself may hereafter invoke the rules.

After the conclusion of Mr. HEFLIN's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Petitions and memorials are in order. If there be none, reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1463. An act for the relief of William Malone (Rept. No. 920); and

H. R. 1862. An act for the relief of Leroy Fisher (Rept. No. 921).

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8996) to amend paragraph 440, section 5211, act of June 3, 1864, reported it with amendments.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on September 15, 1922, they presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 3086. An act providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia;

S. 3917. An act to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes;

S. 3918. An act to amend section 51 of chapter 4 of the Judicial Code; and

S. J. Res. 169. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to receive for instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Mr. Willem van Doorn, a subject of the Netherlands.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 4000) to enlarge and extend the post-office building at Goldsboro, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CAMERON:

A bill (S. 4001) to impose a duty on long-staple cotton; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4002) to amend the Federal Reserve Act, approved December 23, 1913, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 244) to donate to the American Legion certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 245) to extend for three months the provisions of the dye and chemical control act, 1921; to the Committee on Finance.

ENCAMPMENT OF UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS.

Mr. HARRISON. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read, and then I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 243) to authorize the loan by the Secretary of War to the commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans of cots and blankets for the use of members of the United Confederate Veterans during sessions of the national encampment of the United Confederate Veterans at Jackson, Miss., from October 17 to October 19, 1922, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to lend not to exceed 200 cots and blankets to the commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans at their national encampment to be held in Jackson, Miss., from October 17 to October 19, 1922, upon receiving from such commander in chief a bond satisfactory to the Secretary of War to indemnify the United States of America from loss or injury to such cots and blankets, or any of them, such indemnity bond to be drawn by and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand that this is for a national encampment?

Mr. HARRISON. It is really an encampment of the State Confederate veterans at Jackson, Miss.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I make just an observation concerning this matter?

The Committee on Military Affairs has adopted for the last two years a rule for its own guidance, to the effect that it will not make favorable reports upon resolutions or bills for the loan of cots and blankets and tents to organizations other than the G. A. R. in their national encampments, the Confederate Veterans in their national encampments, the Spanish War Veterans in their national encampments, and the World War Veterans in their national encampments, thus eliminating State encampments and organizational reunions, which have been coming to Congress in great floods asking for the loan of this Government property. My understanding of this joint resolution is that this is for a State encampment. If that is the fact, I am compelled to object, in loyalty to the policy laid down by the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. HARRISON. This is a State encampment, and the cots and the blankets are there. There will be very little expense to the War Department, but they stated that they could not loan them except by the enactment of a joint resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true; but the committee have declined innumerable requests of this kind, and to be consistent and fair to everybody we have always held to our attitude, and have promised many, many Senators that if a different attitude was taken with respect to any one of them it would be taken with respect to all of them.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask, then, that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The morning business is closed.

BRIDGES IN ALABAMA AND MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 239) authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the feasibility of constructing bridges across West and East Pascagoula Rivers, the Bay of Biloxi, and Bay St. Louis, in the State of Mississippi, for purposes of the national defense, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION AND SALE OF FUEL.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report upon House bill 12472, ordinarily known as the antiprofiteering coal bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	McCumber	Shields
Ball	Fletcher	McLean	Shortridge
Borah	France	McNary	Simmons
Brandegee	Glass	Moses	Smoot
Broussard	Gooding	Nelson	Stanfield
Bursum	Hale	New	Sterling
Cameron	Harreld	Norbeck	Sutherland
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Underwood
Colt	Heflin	Phipps	Wadsworth
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kellogg	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	King	Reed, Pa.	Watson, Ind.
du Pont	La Follette	Sheppard	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

[For report see Senate proceedings of Thursday, September 14, pp. 12568 and 12569.]

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, as bearing on the general subject involved in the conference report just placed before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain correspondence between the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and the Secretary of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
September 8, 1922.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I do not need to say to you that the controversy in the coal industry which has just been settled has had a serious effect upon all the industrial and commercial activities of the United States.

It is my understanding that, while the particular issues of the recent strike have been settled for the time being, there is no assurance that a recurrence or a suspension may not result again. I would like to analyze the situation as thoroughly as possible, and in order that I may have authentic information I would like your views of the general condition of the coal industry at the present time, also your opinion of what might be necessary to accomplish a betterment of conditions within the industry; that is to say, I should like specific information as to: (1) Sources of coal supply; (2) transportation and distribution; (3) selling prices; (4) classification of consumption—proportion of coal consumed by railroads, industries, households, etc.; (5) cost of living of miners; (6) stabilization of industry.

I would be glad if you will give me this information at your early convenience.

Sincerely yours,

SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, September 12, 1922.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: You are certainly getting down to the root of the whole trouble. The analysis of the factors in the coal industry, such as you have set out in your letter of September 8, is just what is needed to point out the solution of the problem. Our commissioners of conciliation who have been working on the problem have reported to me many, many things which affect the industry, and these facts, if they could be brought together and collated, would make a foundation for a permanent solution of the problem and the stabilization of the anthracite and bituminous industries.

Unfortunately the Department of Labor has had no authority nor the funds to make the sweeping investigation necessary to disclose all the pertinent facts. The general condition of the coal industry of the country, which has just emerged from a 155-day strike in the anthracite and a few days less in the bituminous, indicates very forcibly the need of a special study of the underlying conditions that have contributed to the causes which periodically precipitate these strikes, to the general disturbance of the business activities of the country.

A recommendation of the President that Congress create a special coal commission with full power to investigate and report as a fact-finding body on the ills of the coal industry is most timely and should be very helpful in the framing of constructive legislation, as well as aid to a more intelligent understanding of what should be the basis for relations in the coal industry.

My experience during the past 10 months, in which we have been keeping in close touch with the developments in the strikes, has led me to some very definite conclusions as to what should be the scope of an investigation to be made by a coal commission. I particularly outline below what I think should be the scope of such investigation.

1. Ownership:
a. Estate mineral holdings leased to operating coal companies.
b. Corporation mineral holdings held in undeveloped reserve.
c. Holdings of operating companies in fee, mineral or leased.
d. Original valuations of said holdings when first acquired for mining purposes.
e. Present valuations.
f. Royalties paid by lessee operations with detailed comparison of changes in royalties during the last 10 years.

The purpose of such a survey is to locate present ownership of our coal lands with special reference to the future control of same, as well as the amount of royalties which becomes a tax on the coal-consuming public.

2. Sources of coal supply:
a. List and map location of present bituminous operating fields in every State with the annual production each year since 1910; also anthracite fields.
b. Special characteristics of the coals of the different fields as well as their special commercial use.
c. Competition between different coal fields in seeking and finding a market.

3. Average cost of production f. o. b. cars at mines in each producing field, this cost to be shown in detail:
a. Labor.
b. Management (local); management (executive).
c. Supplies.
d. Repairs.
e. Fixed charges—taxes, insurance, interest on bonds, etc.; sinking fund.
f. Royalty.
g. Depreciation.

Extent and cost of improvements and new developments and how shown in the cost or balance sheets of mining companies.

Change of methods of cost accounting during the last five years, showing in a comparative way the items and amounts used during the previous five years which will indicate clearly the relative variation and share of each item as affecting the gross cost for each of the last 10 years.

4. Sales:
Wholesale—Mine-selling expenses:
a. Coal company agencies.
b. Commission or brokerage paid to agents.
c. Producing company partnership or control of wholesale selling agencies.
d. Duplication or multiplying of commissions through rehandling.
e. Proportion of sales under contract.
f. Proportion held for spot market.
g. Relative shares of producer and brokers in ultimate "spot sales."
Retail:
a. Number of dealers in each State.
b. Amount and grade of coal handled.
c. Detailed cost of operating each yard, including delivery, sales, expenses, etc., based on each ton sold.
d. Average sale prices charged each month of each year for last five years.
e. Average mine price paid f. o. b. mines each month, plus freight, plus cost of operations as per "c."
f. Margin of final profit for each month.
g. Storage capacity and when yard is fully stocked.
Freight rates—Transportation and distribution:
a. From each producing field to the leading markets of the country with the special purpose to show extent of competition between the different coal fields by comparison of competitive rates and mileage in transit.
b. Ratio of consumption for each producing State and where surplus finds market.
Stabilization:
a. Ratio of production in tons produced in each State sold on all-year contracts.
b. Ratio of production sold in the summer months for storage. How stored; by whom or how carried.
c. Ratio of production held for "spot" or free market during each month of the year.
d. What is actual capacity of mines in each State if mines could work regularly five and one-half days per week.

Present annual capacity of mines largely overestimated when based on relative production of one-third, one-half, or even two-thirds working time. The miner is a "piece worker," and speeds up production when given only an opportunity of part time at a pace which he could not maintain on a full-time basis.

This is shown in the increased per capita tonnage production in the years of shorter work time when compared with the years of fuller work time. Thus three or four days' actual work may really mean four or five days' normal work if work were regular. This explodes a large per cent of the supposed loss through "intermittency," especially in mines working less than 200 days in the year. Yet the intermittency and its causes and possible cure should be thoroughly investigated, because the irregularity and the uncertainties of each day's opportunity to work largely unfits the miner for any other avocation and contributes all the "force of necessity" to unite for the maintenance of a wage scale so recently renewed after a four and one-half to five months' strike.

Consumption.

	Per cent.
Railroads	30
Steel industries, manufacturing plants, and public utilities	47½
Household	15
Export and bunker	5
Miscellaneous	2½

Railroads, public utilities, and large manufacturers should provide storage facilities which will enable them to take the bulk of their supplies during the months when the mines most need the business and idle railroad cars are most available, as they are the consumers of three-fourths of bituminous production.

Various storage methods should be scientifically investigated, and I would especially commend the "water storage," so long practiced by the European navies, whereby all the losses of "dry storage" are avoided and the coal retains all its heat units and commercial value indefinitely.

The railroads are the greatest sinners in massing of orders to supply their own needs when the needs of their consuming patrons are at the peak. Of course, this may be due largely to inability to finance such storage, but there is no doubt that the railroads can contribute materially to greater stabilization of the industry if they could supply their own needs when their cars are rusting during their summer idleness.

COST OF LIVING.

I can appreciate that there is room for more specific and local information on the cost of living in each coal-mining center in each State than has been possible in the past.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor in the past has largely confined its studies to the big representative cities, but they do not furnish a fair basis to find out the cost of living in the mining communities of the different States.

Therefore there should be a special quarterly report issued regularly by this bureau that will show the relation of cost of living in said mining districts to the "earnings" made in the same district based upon the average work time for the same period. Such a tabulated comparison will be helpful to arrive at a fairer understanding of the true relation of the prevailing wage to the cost of living or vice versa.

Only by getting all the facts—and the public as well as the operators and miners are entitled to know them—can the Government hope to reach a safe and sane policy toward the coal industry. Legislation may be neessary, but measures should not be passed until a good working basis has been established. Finding all the facts and then making recommendations for intelligent legislation is properly the work of a special commission created for that purpose.

Cordially yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this is the conference report upon what is known as the antiprofiteering coal bill. It has been thoroughly discussed in the Senate, and I think every Senator understands fully what it is hoped will be accomplished. There is no substantial difference between the bill as it now comes before the Senate and the Senate bill, with this possible exception:

The Senate committee, in its report, provided that the law should expire at the end of one year after its passage. Through an amendment, however, it was provided that the expiration should take place at the end of six months. The House bill provided that the law should expire on the 1st of January, 1924, but that during the meantime, the present emergency having passed, the President might declare a new emergency. That disappears from the bill. There are many minor changes; but, so far as I know, the legal effect of the bill as it is now presented is the same as it was when it passed the Senate.

If any Senator desires to ask any question in regard to the conference report, I shall be very glad to answer it, but I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in discussing it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the report now limits the act to one year?

Mr. CUMMINS. One year from the passage of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should have been very glad, if I could, to support the conference report, because I realize that the purpose of the bill is to try to meet an emergency in a portion of the country; but, as I said when the bill originally came before the Senate, the real powers that are conferred in the bill are already in the law. They were enacted when the transportation act of 1920 became a law. The Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to levy an embargo or to make preferences in the handling of cars to reach this situation.

When this bill was first introduced the coal situation in the country was a very serious one. The bituminous-coal strike had not been settled, the anthracite-coal strike was still in force, and there was no indication that any settlement would be reached of the railroad strike. The bill was introduced prior to the time that the Attorney General filed a bill for injunction against the strikers on the railroad lines. I say this merely to point out to the Senate that the situation has changed very much since the introduction of this bill. Although there may be some necessity for its passage, the necessity is neither as urgent nor as manifest as it was when the bill was introduced, which changes the situation very greatly and raises the question as to whether the Senate now should take the responsibility of exercising these very far-reaching powers to interfere with the business of the people of the United States when the grave emergency that existed a month or six weeks ago does not exist to-day.

I do not mean to say that it has been entirely relieved, but in the main it has been relieved. The coal is moving where transportation can be had. The bituminous coal strike has been settled for some weeks. The mines are now in full operation. The anthracite coal strike has been settled for some days, and very shortly the mines will be in full operation.

We find from the papers that a settlement has been reached in the railroad strike on most of the railroads where transportation was being interfered with, and where the settlement has not been reached it is stated in the papers that there are sufficient men in the shops to handle the motive power of the roads, and the trains are moving.

It is true, of course, that during the period of the war a bill somewhat similar to this one was passed by the Congress. A fuel administrator was appointed, who gave priorities in the right to purchase coal and the right of shipment, and handled the distribution of coal in a way to meet the war emergency. I am not criticizing the administration of Mr. Garfield's bureau in controlling the coal supply of the country during the war. It may be an open question as to whether it was necessary or not, but during the period of the war it was impossible to determine in advance what had to be done. At that time we not only had to furnish coal to our own people and our industries but we had to furnish coal to some of our allies, and they burned American coal in order to carry on the war.

The war power of the Government was then exercised. The war power of the Government does not exist to-day. An entirely different condition of affairs exists throughout the country. Yet, notwithstanding the emergency which confronted us during the war, the many difficulties we had to face, I do not think any man can say that the administration of the bureau in charge of the distribution of coal and the fixing of its prices was a success. It may have operated successfully along certain lines. On others it did not. But I think it can be said without contradiction that it annoyed pretty nearly every man, woman, and child in the United States, and very seriously hampered a great deal of the business of the United States.

As I said a while ago, I do not say this in criticism of Mr. Garfield and those who cooperated with him in the coal bureau, because I really believe they honestly and sincerely tried to do the best they could to meet the situation. But they failed because they were human, and no human can look into all the various business developments and business necessities of the United States, or attempt to control things which go into the home life of its people, and not make a vast number of mistakes. It is impossible for them to do so, because their vision, from a business standpoint, is confined to what they hear and what they read, just as our vision is confined by the walls of this room, and we do not see what is going on upon the outside. No bureau established here in Washington can have the vision to look into the life of the American people and make its orders so that it will not destroy their business and inconvenience their lives. That, I think, is a statement which can stand without contradiction.

I can illustrate, as I have done before. I called the committee's attention to a simple illustration, one which is very pertinent, to show how such mistakes can be made. During the war the fuel administration here in Washington issued an order that fuel should not be used to promote building, except the construction of such Government buildings as were necessary to carry on the war. They would not permit fuel to be furnished for sawmills where the lumber was going to be used for building purposes, or to sand pits where the sand was going to be used for building purposes.

There was a small company in my home city which was engaged in the business of digging sand, but not for building purposes. It was digging sand for the furnaces in that great district. The usual method of making pig iron is to cast it in sand molds, and it is necessary to consume quite a quantity of sand in order to make pig iron. Of course, pig iron was a necessity of war.

The bureau had not been operating very long before I received a telegram one day from this company stating that their priority rights to coal, of which they needed only about a car a month, had been cut off by the fuel administrator, and that they could not go on digging sand with their steam shovels to supply these great furnaces, and in the midst of war the iron production of a great district was about to be shut down because there was no fuel to provide the sand in which the iron had to be cast.

I went to the fuel administrator and explained the facts. Mr. Garfield's agent, the man who represented him, was very nice about it, said that he had made a mistake, that he assumed the sand was being dug for building purposes, sent a telegram, and ordered that this little sand pit should have the coal to dig the sand to supply the great iron furnaces to make the war materials. I thought that was the end of it.

Within a few weeks or a couple of months they put another man in that office, and as soon as he took office he went through the files to see how he could economize in fuel for the benefit of the Government, and saw that this carload of fuel a month was being used by a sand pit, and he blue-penciled it and stopped it. I got another telegram, went down and explained the same facts to the new man, and he very courteously and promptly corrected the mistake, and sent a telegram putting the sand-pit people back on the priority list.

To make a long story short, during the course of that fuel administration the same thing occurred in that particular case four times, because they made four changes of men in that particular division, and each man could not see beyond the walls of his room, and when he saw that the fuel was being used to dig sand, he assumed it was being used to dig sand with which to build houses, which was against the policy of the Government, and therefore issued his order to stop the supply of coal to dig sand, which coal was going to furnaces to make the iron that was necessary to use to prosecute the war.

I do not say that by way of criticism of these gentlemen. They sit in Washington and do not know and can not know conditions out in the country, and they have not the time to go and inquire into each case, and do not do it. The result is that they make thousands and thousands of mistakes, which are not only annoying but sometimes very greatly distress the people of the United States, because they take the responsibility and authority to direct from here, by general orders, instead of letting the matter be worked out through the natural channels at home.

Thomas Jefferson very truly said in the early days of the Republic that if this country had not been divided into separate States before the adoption of the Constitution it would have had to be divided into separate States afterwards, or the fabric of the Government would have been destroyed, because the territory was too great and the interests too diversified for any one government sitting in Washington to control and regulate affairs satisfactorily to the American people.

Therefore, whenever you attempt to pass any sumptuary legislation affecting the business and the lives of the American people you make a serious blunder, unless the emergency is so great that the very lives of the people and the Nation itself are at stake. If they were, I would join you. If they were, I would be willing to let people suffer, because we must save the Nation, must save the State, we must save the situation. I would be willing to let the blunders of a bureau chief in Washington be suffered by the people of the United States if the emergency were here which required it. But the emergency is not here; it is past. The coal strike is over. The railroad strike is about settled. This bill does nothing to further the settlement of the coal strike.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. At the time this bill was formulated and was under discussion in our committee, as the Senator well remembers, there was a very great deal of what we ordinarily call profiteering in coal in the United States, and that continued for some time. We all know that exorbitant prices were charged, perhaps by mine owners, certainly by agencies, retail dealers, and so on. I am wondering if the Senator has investigated to learn to what extent that still continues, or to what extent it has been abated or abandoned.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know the facts, but I am informed—and I got my information from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]—that as far as profiteering is concerned, it is worse now than it was before. I do not know myself; but I will accept that statement as correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. The statement just made by the Senator from Alabama is quite correct. Profiteering is more general now than it has been at any time since the coal strike started, and the only additional power this bill gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission is to stop profiteering. If there ever was an emergency in regard to that subject, it exists now.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am going to assume that to be true. I do not know, myself, but I take the Senator's word, and the word of the Senator from Minnesota. I am going to assume that is true. Of course, I do not indorse profiteering; but I ask whether that justifies the passage of this bill. Before I start to make a statement on that, however, I yield to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator seems to agree with me in the statement——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I accept the statements made by Senators. I do not know myself.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That the profiteering is going on now to as great an extent as it did formerly and perhaps more so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The consideration of the conference report will be proceeded with.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If I may, with permission of the Senator from Alabama, who has the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask permission to report back favorably from the Committee on Banking and Currency House bill 8096.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule of the Senate, the Senator from Alabama can not yield for that purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. What is the report which the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is making?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can not make the report while the Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would rather have a chance to look into it myself.

Mr. McLEAN. Very well.

[The report was subsequently submitted by Mr. McLEAN and appears under its appropriate heading.]

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (continuing). If that be true in regard to profiteering, I am wondering whether or not it is such profiteering as can be reached by the passage of the pending measure. That is to say, is it profiteering on the part of the coal operator so that priorities may be denied him or embargo may be set up against him; and if not, is it profiteering by the agencies or the dealers that can be reached by the passage of the bill? I should like to have the Senator's opinion upon that, and also the opinion of the chairman of the committee later on.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I intend to discuss that because the chairman of the committee has said that is all that is left in the bill; that there is nothing else in it. There was something else in it when it was introduced.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; from my standpoint, there was nothing else in it when it was introduced. All that the Senator from Alabama has been discussing is in the law now, and if there is any complaint against it, it is not against the pending bill, but against the present law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator about that. I think it is all in the law now. The only power in the bill against profiteering is in the law now. Although I have no doubt that during the summer months there was some profiteering in coal and some very unjustifiable profiteering, I think it could be reached without a bill and was reached without such a bill. I am proud to say that, so far as the coal operators of my own State are concerned, there was no strike there. When the Government suggested they would like to agree on reasonable prices at which coal should be shipped, they came to Washington and entered into an agreement with the President's agent, Mr. Hoover, to sell their coal at something like $2.50 a ton, which was agreed by all to be a reasonable price per ton under the circumstances. They took his figure, they agreed to it, and they lived up to it just as long as the agreement lasted. I think the agreement went out of effect on the 1st day of September. They did not require any law. They came voluntarily and agreed to furnish all the coal they could mine where the cars were furnished to ship the coal. So there was not need of compulsion there.

I think there were cases which occurred during the summer where others asked exorbitant prices of the people who wanted to buy coal. I believe that condition confronts the country to-day. Senators in charge of the bill say the condition is worse now than it was in the summer, because, of course, the agreement between Mr. Hoover and the operators has expired and has not been renewed by Mr. Hoover. I know of no objection on the part of the operators to renewing it. I suppose Mr. Hoover has not renewed it because he is waiting for this legislation, and instead of renewing it he wants to act under the legislation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Hoover has not any power to issue any orders.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know, but I think Mr. Hoover is supposed to be the man who will determine matters.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think so at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is he not going to be appointed fuel commissioner?

Mr. KELLOGG. No; I do not believe he is to be appointed fuel commissioner. He can not be so appointed. He is a Cabinet official, and there is no intention of appointing him, so far as I know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may be mistaken. I had heard his name discussed with reference to the matter and I thought he was the man. But whether it is Hoover or Smith does not make any difference.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Interstate Commerce Commission has the only power that can issue an order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the bill. I am sure the Senator knows that I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I think the Senator does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the power in the bill. Instead of providing in the bill that the President should appoint a fuel commissioner and giving him $250,000 to get the facts and report to the Interstate Commerce Commission his findings and recommendations, I really think that the bill would have been better if you had given the $250,000 to the Interstate Commerce Commission and told them to function under their powers. It would have been a better bill, in my opinion; but of course you did not do that. You have named in the bill a fuel commissioner and you are going to give him $250,000 to organize his force, to ascertain facts, and when he gets through, as the Senator from Minnesota said, he has no power directly, but he is going to report the facts to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and then the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to lay an embargo against any man who charges more for his coal than the fuel commissioner thinks it ought to sell for, and to deliver cars to those people who are mining coal and selling it within the terms that the fuel commissioner thinks it ought to sell for. You are going to give the fuel commissioner a right to go through the country and to go into the business houses and homes of people who want coal, and say that Jones can have coal because, of course, he is operating a public utility, but Smith can not have coal because he is operating knitting mills. Smith's employees may be thousands in number and may have to walk the streets without bread because they are without wages, because your fuel commissioner tells Smith to shut down his factory because he can not have any coal.

That is the power you are trying to put in this man's hands. Why? Because you say that there are some profiteers in the country who are trying to charge too much for coal. If I could punish the profiteer without to a far greater extent punishing the American people, I would join with you in punishing him. I have no sympathy with him whatever.

I say the foolish thing in the bill is that you do not accomplish anything by the power you give. The American people, whether it be the housewife who buys coal for her kitchen stove, or whether it is the operator of a great mill who is buying coal for the operation of his plant, are not going to pay any more for the coal than they are required to pay. They are going to pay more for the coal if they have to do so.

You do not in the bill tell the man that he can not mine his coal above a certain price. You do not say anything about that. He can mine it and hold it for his price as much as he wants to. You merely say in the bill that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall withhold cars for the shipment of that coal if it is not sold within the price at which the fuel commissioner thinks it should be sold. What is the result? If there is enough coal offered in the American market at a reasonable price to supply the reasonable demand, the profiteers will have to come down or not sell their coal.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But, if the Senator will allow me, suppose there is not enough coal?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am coming to that. That is the other end of my question. If there is enough everybody will recognize that the profiteer will have to lower his price or not sell his coal. But, as the Senator from Indiana said, suppose there is not enough coal on the American market at a reasonable price to supply the American people with the coal to warm their homes and run their factories, does anyone think they are going to stand for the fuel commission saying that a man can not ship his coal because the commissioner fixed the price at $5 a ton and the coal man wants $6 for it? No; the fuel commissioner, representing the great Government of the United States, will have to turn tail and back his cars up against the door of the profiteer if there is a shortage in the supply being delivered by the reasonable and honest people of the United States. That is all there is to it.

There is no way to punish the profiteer in the bill for asking profits, but what is promised in the bill is to penalize the man who buys the coal. The purchaser of the coal is sent to jail if he represents to the agent of the fuel commissioner that he needs more coal than he actually does. If a man with a house to heat and keep warm this winter says that he needs 10 tons of coal, and upon investigation it is learned that he only needs 5 tons to keep warm during the winter, and he has thus made a false statement to the fuel commissioner, the terms of the bill would make a criminal of him and provide for his being sent to jail by the United States courts. I think that is going pretty far. I do not think it would be any very great crime for a man whose family was cold to exaggerate a little bit about how much coal he needed to run his house during the winter, if he could get it and had the money to pay for it. He is not going to exaggerate a great deal, because he will not want to pay for it at present prices. If he exaggerates at all the fuel commissioner can send him to jail.

No provision is made for a jail sentence for the coal profiteer who is going to charge four or five prices. The only way he will be punished is by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which will not back cars up to his door. But the consumer, the man who needs the coal, the man who is being frozen because he can not get it, if perchance he should lie a little about how much coal he needs, is to be sent to jail. There is no such emergency, in my judgment, existing in the United States to-day in regard to the price of coal that requires any such strenuous action at this time.

More than that, when the bill passed in the Senate it was made to relate to interstate transportation, business transactions between the States. When it came back from conference we find that the conferees laid down on the Senate bill and made it relate all along the line, according to my construction.

Of course, I understand that the chairman of the committee has stated that this measure is now so drafted that section 1 of the transportation act of 1920 as construed will make the measure relate only to interstate commerce. We had that very plainly written in the pages of the bill; but now it has been left open to the interpretation of a fuel administrator. I have never known one of these bureau chiefs, no matter how honest and how sincere he may have been, who has not assumed all the authority he could get. So far as authority is concerned, whenever you let him, like the camel, get his nose under the tent he goes in and takes the tent. As the bill passed the Senate and went to conference little transactions within the States would not have been subject to the pains and penalties of the proposed law, but the conference committee now present a report which, if adopted, will, under a construction which may be placed upon it, make such intrastate transactions subject to the pains and penalties provided in the proposed legislation. I do not think that that would be absolutely the right construction; the chairman of the committee may be right in his construction, but that is a question for the lawyers and the courts. We shall not ascertain that until the courts get through construing the act; whereas there was no doubt about the proposition as contained in the Senate bill.

I am not going to take up the time of the Senate in discussing the conference report; we have other matters of vast importance to consider; but I am going to vote against the report. I wish to say, and I wish it understood, that the people in the great Northwest had my utmost sympathy in their desire to get fuel in order to protect them against the cold this winter. If the emergency had continued to exist as it did a month ago I would have gone a long way in voting for legislation which would have given them relief; but I believe the emergency has now ended. The only question now involved is as to whether they will have to pay a dollar or two dollars more for a ton of coal than they ought to pay. That is not a great emergency. I do not believe in profiteering; I have no sympathy with the profiteer; but the vast number of coal operators in this country will sell their product for reasonable prices, and as it is not proposed to put the profiteer in jail but it is proposed to provide, figuratively speaking, for putting the consumer in jail in order to meet this emergency, I do not see the necessity for adopting this conference report at this time in its present shape. Therefore, when the question is presented on the roll call in the Senate, I shall register my vote against the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the adoption of the conference report I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I have already spoken on the bill on which the conference report now pending has been made when the bill was previously before the Senate, but there are some Senators now present who were not here when the bill was formerly considered. In less than two minutes, I think, I can say to them what I believe it is necessary they should know before voting on the conference report.

It should be understood that the bill proposes to vest in an appointive official the power to punish what is called "profiteering" by denying to the so-called profiteer any car service; that it is proposed to punish him for charging more than what this appointive official may consider a just and reasonable price; that it is proposed to find him guilty of that offense without any notice to him; that it is proposed to find him guilty of the offense even if he made his sale before this proposed act was ever introduced into either House of Congress. In other words, this proposed legislation will be retroactive, and the chairman of the committee responsible for the measure has resisted any amendment which would prevent it being retroactive. He has stated that a man who sold coal at an unreasonably high price in the past ought now, if you please, to be punished by withholding from him car service in the future.

Not only is this proposed legislation retroactive, not only is the judgment of guilt or innocence left to an appointive official, but the conviction is to take place without notice to the so-called profiteer; without any opportunity to him to present his proofs or his argument, and without any opportunity to him to appeal from the decision which shall be made ex parte in his absence.

The Constitution of the United States is not needed by a majority of the people; the majority never needs constitutional protection; nor is it ever needed by a popular minority; but the Bill of Rights, if I understand its history, was embodied in the Constitution in order to protect an unpopular minority from arbitrary, hasty, and ill-considered action by majorities. This is just such a case as the Bill of Rights was put into the Constitution to prevent.

Here is an effort, because for the moment what we call profiteering is unpopular, to tear up the Bill of Rights of the Constitution; an effort to pass an ex post facto law; an effort to take from the owner of coal a part of the market value of his commodity without pretending to make compensation to him for what is taken. It is all attempted to be justified by the assertion of an emergency which, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has so well pointed out, has now ceased to exist. This is the sort of legislation which, if adopted, will not only be ineffective but will come back to plague us. Every time something goes up in price and some people wish to get it cheap they will come rushing again to Congress to fix the price.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall vote against the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, with all due regard to the Senator from Pennsylvania, I submit that this bill is not retroactive at all. It simply provides that the commission may in the distribution of cars and in decreeing priority of cars deny cars to those who are charging an unreasonably high price for coal. It creates a commission to inquire into that price. There is no punishment provided for any act theretofore committed; there is no power in the commission to deny cars on account of anything that has occurred in the past. The bill in no respect is retroactive.

Second, the Senator from Alabama says that the bill applies to intrastate commerce. If there is any one thing that the committee was careful about it was to place in section 2, covering car distribution, every limitation that to-day is in the interstate commerce act and has been there since it was enacted in 1887. I refer to the following provision in section 2:

This act shall not be construed as repealing any of the powers heretofore granted by law to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but shall be construed as conferring supplementary and additional powers to said commission and as an amendment to section 1 of the interstate commerce act, and subject to the limitations and definitions of commerce controlled by said act.

Section 1, page 1, of the interstate commerce act defines that commerce which is subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission as commerce between the States and with foreign nations, and excludes in express terms "the transportation of passengers or property or * * * the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property wholly within one State and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any" place in the United States. Nothing is plainer than that the pending measure has been confined to interstate commerce, as was the original interstate commerce act and as every act since that time has been so confined.

Now, Mr. President, just a word as to the emergency. I do not think the emergency has passed. It is true that bituminous coal is now being produced in considerable quantities, and had it been so produced during the entire summer there would have been sufficient to supply the needs of the country, but in the next three months, before transportation to the Northwest on the Great Lakes closes, it is not possible to produce and transport a sufficient quantity of coal to supply the needs of the entire Northwest, including Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, which must obtain the major portion of their coal by transportation over the Great Lakes. So, in that section, at any rate, there is bound to be a shortage. Even if they were in normal condition, the railroads could not transport coal enough to supply the public utilities of those sections of the country which must get their coal within the next three months.

It is true that profiteering in coal by operators can just as well take place when there is a shortage of transportation as when there is merely a shortage in the production of coal. It is true that Mr. Hoover made an arrangement with about 70 per cent of the mine operators in the nonunion districts to conform to a certain schedule, which ran from $2.50 to $3.50 as a maximum, but that agreement has never been renewed by the operators; the operators are not willing to renew it, and practically all the bituminous mines in this country are now charging, as I showed the other day, from $5 to as high as $9 a ton at the mine. The coal which is now being transported to Milwaukee, Sheboygan, Duluth, Superior, and Ashland is going up there at a rate that will result in a cost to the consumer there from $10 to $15 a ton instead of the normal price.

Is it not reasonable, when the mines can produce all the coal that can be transported, that some priority in the distribution of cars should be given to the mines which are willing to take a good but a reasonable and fair price? Nobody wishes them to take a losing price; but are the people of this country to pay for all of the losses, with additional profits thrown in, which the mine operators claim they have sustained during the last few months? I say the emergency is as great to-day as ever; in fact, it is greater so far as the price of coal is concerned. Do everything that can be done, yet the Northwest is bound to suffer not only by reason of unreasonable prices but because of a shortage of coal, as many other parts of the country are likewise going to suffer.

Mr. President, the so-called fuel administration is nothing more than a board of inquiry to furnish the Interstate Commerce Commission with facts and to make recommendations. The Interstate Commerce Commission has not the force, it has not the time, it has not the facilities for doing that, and the Government has been carrying on similar activities for some time. This bill is merely designed to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission temporarily to meet a great emergency which is now facing the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I only want to say very briefly that I am just as much opposed to this bill in its present form as I was when it was originally before the Senate.

As to the matter of the bill being retroactive—which it clearly is, as it appears to me—if it was not designed to be retroactive I do not see why it was that the proponents of this measure carefully excluded from the bill amendments which were designed to protect even existing contracts that were made prior to the passage of the bill.

An amendment was finally put upon the bill in the Senate which protected contracts that had been in force prior to July 25, and at a price of $2 per ton. So far as I can see, in the conference report, even that amendment has been eliminated by the conferees. It seems to be perfectly clear that the bill is intended to be retroactive in its effect; that it is not even intended that contracts in actual existence shall be protected, if their abrogation can be arbitrarily effected and without tests in the courts. I firmly believe that when those contracts are tested in the courts they will be sustained; but so far as it can be done by the arbitrary act of a bureau official here in Washington, those contracts will be abrogated and the coal diverted, the entire matter resting upon the personal opinion of an underemployee of a bureau here in Washington as to whether or not the coal has been sold at a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. President, my office has been deluged in the past few days with complaints from coal producers who have been busily engaged in trying to produce enough coal to keep the industries of this country running, and who have been selling their coal at an entirely reasonable price. Great disturbance has already arisen because of the arbitrary action of the bureau here in routing cars and in issuing service orders which have greatly disturbed the ordinary flow of coal to its destination, and so far from solving the trouble which it was feared would come upon us it has made confusion worse confounded. Instead of shippers going to the railroad nearest to them, upon which they ship their coal, and securing a decision as to cars and routes, and other matters pertaining to the shipment, they now have to come from all over the United States to one man located up here in the Interstate Commerce Building, who seems to have been designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission as the repository for the consideration of all such matters. No doubt he is a very estimable man; no doubt he has great judgment or he would not have been selected for this important post; but one man here, an underofficer or employee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is attempting to do what dozens of men highly skilled in the matter of transportation and all its problems have been doing heretofore with reference to these matters.

As to prices, Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who has just seated himself, makes statements regarding prices which, in my judgment, the facts, if carefully studied, will not bear out. By far the larger percentage of coal, as has been previously stated by me and as the facts will show, is sold upon yearly contracts made prior to the 1st of April. During the past spring, when many of those contracts were renewed, the price of coal was very low, and a great many are now running at very low prices. Practically all of these public-service corporations that are now complaining and are now engaged in this buyers' strike for their own benefit in order to get coal at a price below the market price had ample opportunity to renew their contracts and obtain their year's supply of coal at prices far below what have been fixed upon two different occasions in cooperation voluntarily by Mr. Hoover and others working upon the matter, the first time at $3.50 a ton and the second time, I believe, at $4.50 a ton.

Mr. KELLLOGG. Mr. President, can the Senator name a single mine that is selling coal in West Virginia to-day at $3.50 a ton? Not a car of coal has gone to the Lakes in the last week at a basis of $3.50 a ton.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a great deal of coal being sold in West Virginia that is not going to the Lakes, and of course the price was voluntarily arranged by Mr. Hoover at $3.50 a ton some time ago, and later at $4.50 a ton, in cooperation with the owners of the mines.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is again mistaken. Mr. Hoover did not do it. Some of the States fixed the price at $4.50 a ton, but Mr. Hoover did not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My understanding is that Mr. Hoover agreed to the price.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly the operators who were concerned with it have agreed to the price and have been adhering to the price; but as to these enormous prices which the Senator has cited, if any such prices have been asked it has been done by a very few mines only. The Senator himself stated a few days ago that probably 70 per cent of all the coal operators engaged in producing coal had produced coal and sold it on the market at the price agreed upon of $3.50 a ton, and perhaps only 30 per cent of the producers of coal had in any way exceeded that price; and that only means 30 per cent numerically of the coal operators, as stated by the Department of Commerce. As to the total tonnage of coal, a very much larger percentage than 70 per cent will be found to have gone to the market at the price agreed upon. Those who have exceeded that price have in almost every case been the operators of small mines, in the larger percentage of cases the wagon mines, which come into operation only when a high-price period is upon us.

They can operate and produce and market their coal only when there is a high price, which justifies the unusual expense to which they have to go in order to get the coal to market. They load their coal upon a truck or a wagon perhaps several miles away from the railroad tracks; they haul that coal in the truck or wagon to a loading place upon the railroad tracks, and there sometimes dump it upon the ground and reload it there into cars, or load it directly into cars from their trucks or wagons. Sometimes they have a bin into which they can dump these wagons or trucks, and from that load into cars; but it is a very expensive operation. That high price, however, does the very thing that high prices always do. It stimulates production, increases the supply of coal, and tends to relieve the very situation about which we are now complaining.

Mr. President, I think this situation will cure itself in a very short time so far as the soft-coal industry is concerned. I am not at all well posted upon the anthracite industry, and am not attempting in any way to speak with reference to it; but as to the soft-coal industry the mines of the country are now largely engaged in producing coal, and I believe that the entire difficulty would be more readily solved if the transportation companies and the shippers were authorized to proceed to get this coal to the market in their usual manner, according to methods that have been adopted after many years of trial and experiment. I do not believe that there is any one officer, or several officers in this Government, under the Interstate Commerce Commission or elsewhere, who has the judgment necessary to give the orders which will tend to clarify this situation. On the contrary, I believe that he will be continually interfering with the ordinary process of getting this coal to the market after it has been mined, and producing more confusion and intensifying the situation, rather than clarifying it.

I think it is a great mistake to pass this bill. I think it is establishing a precedent which will be very dangerous in the future. I believe that it is in contravention of the Constitution, and that it will come before us many times to plague us when similar measures are attempted to be adopted in the future for the purpose of fixing prices by governmental action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], I vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I expect to vote upon this measure, so I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. HALE. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. COLT. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. KING. Upon this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 12, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3307) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7425) for the relief of Zah Barmon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

H. R. 5214. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 6929. An act for the relief of Horace E. Walker;

H. R. 7425. An act for the relief of Zah Barmon;

H. R. 8073. An act for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co.;

H. R. 8173. An act for the relief of Mrs. E. H. Jackson;

H. R. 11116. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended; and

H. R. 11843. An act for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain by regulating transactions on grain-future exchanges, and for other purposes.

MEMORIAL TO JOSEPH J. DARLINGTON.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 240) authorizing the erection, on public grounds, of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to select a suitable site and to grant permission for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, the White House, and the Mall, of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington, a leader of the Washington bar, as a gift to the people of the city of Washington: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Joint Library Committee of Congress, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts; that it shall be erected under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said memorial.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send to the desk several letters which explain the joint resolution. The Fine Arts Commission has approved the memorial, which is to take the form of a public drinking fountain. It is to be designed by one of the most noted sculptors in the United States. I ask that the letters and the editorial which I have sent to the desk be printed in the RECORD in explanation of the entire project.

There being no objection, the letters and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, CORPS OF ENGINEERS,
OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
Washington, August 30, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Chairman Joint Committee on the Library,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: Mr. Milton E. Ailes, president of the Riggs National Bank, has, on behalf of the friends and associates of the late Joseph J. Darlington, a leader of the Washington bar, brought to the attention of this office their desire to erect on public grounds in the District of Columbia, preferably Judiciary Park, a memorial to Mr. Darlington as a gift to the people of Washington, the United States to be put to no expense in or by the erection of the memorial.

In accordance with this, a resolution has been prepared here authorizing the erection of the memorial, and a copy is inclosed herewith, with recommendation that if it meets with your approval it be introduced.

Colonel Sherrill, who has been absent from Washington on a vacation, will return to duty in a few days, and will then be available for furnishing any information you may desire to have on the subject.

In the absence of Lieut. Col. C. O. Sherrill:

Very truly yours,

D. L. WEART,
Major, Corps of Engineers, Executive Assistant.

THE RIGGS NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Washington, D. C., August 31, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: Referring to my talk with you at the Senate this morning regarding the Darlington memorial, I take pleasure in sending you herewith a copy of a letter which I addressed to Lieut. Col. C. O. Sherrill, August 12, and the clipping from the Journal and Carolina Spartan, of August 12, 1920, referred to therein.

I have asked Colonel Sherrill to address you directly with additional information. Meanwhile, I may say that the artist is Mr. C. P. Jennewein, of 560 West Twenty-sixth Street, New York City, who was selected by the Fine Arts Commission. I have also called Colonel Sherrill's attention to the fact that the Hahnemann Memorial and the Major Butt Memorial are instances of the appropriation of public grounds to purposes where it is desired to commemorate the virtue of private citizens. Thanking you for your courtesy, I remain,

Very sincerely yours,

M. E. AILES.

THE RIGGS NATIONAL BANK OF WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Washington, D. C., August 12, 1922.

Lieut. Col. CLARENCE O. SHERRILL,
In Charge of Public Buildings and Grounds, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL SHERRILL: Referring to my conversation with you a few days since just on the eve of your departure for vacation, I write to say that when Mr. Frank J. Hogan, attorney at law, went abroad recently he turned over to me the matter of getting permission to place the Darlington Memorial in Judiciary Square.

I am deeply interested in this subject. The late Joseph J. Darlington was my close friend. He was an inspiration to me in many ways, and I spent a great deal of time with him in his sick room during his last illness when for months he faced death, not only unflinchingly but with anticipations of great reunions when it should occur.

I inclose a copy of an editorial from a South Carolina paper, quoting the minutes which we spread upon our records of the Riggs Bank after Mr. Darlington's death, and from which you will learn of our great respect and veneration for him.

Joseph J. Darlington was for more than 40 years the accepted leader of the Washington bar. He was born in South Carolina in 1849, and died in Washington in 1920.

Lawyers, civic leaders, men engaged in charitable and religious work, representative business men, and officers of the city's leading financial institutions intend to erect a memorial to Mr. Darlington.

The Fine Arts Commission selected the artist and approved the design of the memorial, which is a very artistic fountain surmounted by a group consisting of a maiden and a fawn.

The entire project will be without any expense whatever to the District or to the Federal Government, being financed throughout by private funds.

It is considered most appropriate to place this fountain in Judiciary Square. There is an excellent place for it in the center of the angle made by the Court of Appeals Building and the District Supreme Court Building. Mr. Darlington's law office was directly opposite this place on Fifth Street. For more than one-third of a century his work daily took him through that corner of Judiciary Square.

Governmental permission to erect this memorial fountain, selected and approved, as above stated, by the Fine Arts Commission, is desired. May we rely on your good offices to secure as promptly as possible such permission? We will be happy to respond to your call for cooperation from important citizens here should you need us.

With cordial regards, very sincerely yours,

M. E. AILES.

[Editorial from the Journal and Carolina Spartan, August 12, 1920.]

WORTH LIVING TO HAVE MERITED THIS.

In the month of June there died in Washington one of the most eminent men of that great community—Joseph J. Darlington, a native of Due West, Abbeville district, S. C., and for the greater part of his life a resident of the National Capital. A lawyer of marvelous gifts, a scholar of high distinction, a superb figure among the moral forces of the city, a builder who ever builded on a sure foundation, the very soul of hospitality, his passing away was deplored by all who had been associated with him in professional or business activities, and by bar and bench and church and State appropriate tributes have been paid to his memory. One of the most expressive of these, because it is so happily worded, and so transparently truthful withal, is contained in the following minute which was offered by the Hon. Milton E. Ailes and entered on the books of the Riggs National Bank, of Washington, at the meeting of the board of directors on Tuesday, the first that had been held since the death of Mr. Darlington:

"Joseph J. Darlington, one of our general counsel, died June 24, 1920.

"He was at the Washington bar 46 years. When he died, he was its dean and leader. In his long career at the bar he was the trusted adviser of many persons and institutions. The list is long and important. Through them he has left a deep impress on the times and place in which he lived.

"The Riggs National Bank, among other leading institutions here, was honored by relationship with Mr. Darlington. To him it owes a debt of gratitude which we can best repay by emulation of his simple virtues. No man ever served another or an institution with higher sentiments of service; for he was not moved, so far as our affairs were concerned, by any ordinary sense of fealty as between counsel and client. He himself proclaimed that he regarded his services to our bank as a response to a call of public duty.

"Reverently and affectionately we write these things in our minutes so that our successors in other years may know of our grateful recognition of a great service and our admiration for his attainments and lofty character.

"In the smaller affairs of the bank no less than its larger problems he gave us freely from his stores of wisdom, much as if he possessed no power to distinguish between great and little things. He was a prompt, sympathetic, careful, safe adviser; a great lawyer, a rare man.

"We all knew him well, and some of us, with the larger opportunity for contact, were admitted to the intimacies of his soul, and can bear witness to the spirit which gave him the heart to do the right in life, and again to carry on his daily tasks with simple, cheerful, understanding purpose in the face of known approaching death.

"In his life and work he set the highest examples. In his last months he was an inspiration to his intimates. No one closely associated with him during that time can ever forget what this means. For death to him was life again, reunions with the beloved, and a retreat where he would patiently, confidently, and fondly await our coming.

"It was a wonderful privilege to accompany him through these days, part way on the journey. Happy in his great expectation, deeply interested to the last in old friends and affiliations, in perfect peace of mind, with all the old-time sense of humor, without complaint or fear along the way, he reached the crossing, and when he went on alone we who remained on this side could not but feel, as Howells did at the passing of a good and great man, that although his fine spirit was still with us it yet seemed that eternity was the richer and time the poorer in his going from us."

This tribute was written by Mr. Ailes, who knew intimately Mr. Darlington, one of the general counsel of the Riggs Bank, of which Mr. Ailes is vice president, and who has rightly appraised him for the strength of his character, the force of his example, the wideness of his sympathies, the beauty of his life, and we print the story here that the thousands of men and women in South Carolina who knew him may more fully realize the greatness of the man and the glory of living as he did for the good of others.

WAR DEPARTMENT, CORPS OF ENGINEERS,
OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., September 5, 1922.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Chairman Joint Committee on the Library,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: Referring to our letter of August 20th to you, with respect to the memorial to the late Mr. Joseph J. Darlington, which his assiciates desire to erect in Judiciary Park as a gift to the people of this city, Mr. Ailes has informed me that he has had a talk with you on the subject and that you would like to have a plat of the proposed site. I am, therefore, sending you herewith a blue print of Judiciary Park, which shows the plot of ground at the southwest corner of the park at Fifth and D Streets. It is understood that the site suggested by Mr. Ailes is in the center of the large plot of ground immediately south of the Court of Appeals Building and west of the Court House Building. It is suggested, however, that in introducing the resolution, Judiciary Park be not mentioned, but the wording be that contained in the form sent you with our letter referred to, which authorizes the selection of a site on public grounds of the United States other than the Library of Congress, the White House, and the Mall. This is in accordance with the usual custom.

Mr. Ailes states that the name of the artist who is to make the statue is Mr. C. P. Jennewein, of 560 West Twenty-sixth Street, New York City.

With respect to your desire to have a list of precedents where public grounds have been used for memorials to private citizens, I would suggest the Butt-Millet Memorial Fountain in the White Lot, authorized by the act of Congress, approved August 24, 1912; the statue to

Gen. Albert Pike, at Indiana Avenue, Third and D Streets NW., authorized by the act of Congress, approved April 9, 1898, and a monument of Edmund Burke, which is to be placed at Massachusetts Avenue and Eleventh Street, under authority contained in Public Resolution of Congress No. 52, approved April 5, 1922.

Very truly yours,

C. O. SHERRILL,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BRANDEGEE: Referring to my call on you at the Capitol a few days since regarding the resolution which you introduced in connection with the Darlington Memorial, I take pleasure in sending you a letter I have just received from Mr. Julius Garfinkle, one of the active spirits in the matter of the Darlington Memorial, which will give you a rather complete account of the artist, Mr. Jennewein, who was selected for this important work.

If there is any further information you desire, please let me know. Hoping that the matter may receive prompt and favorable action, I remain

Very sincerely yours, MILTON E. AILES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 8, 1922.

Mr. M. E. AILES,
Riggs National Bank, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. AILES: So that you will have a record of Mr. Jennewein's qualifications and reputation as a sculptor, I am writing you as per our conversation of Wednesday.

Mr. Jennewein was brought to my attention by Mr. Kendall, member of the firm of McKim, Meade & White, also a member of the Fine Arts Commission, through Mr. Charles J. Moore, chairman of the Fine Arts Commission. Mr. Kendall and Mr. Moore said regarding Mr. Jennewein that in their opinion if not to-day ranking as one of the greatest sculptors of this country it is only a matter of a short while before he will be given that place. The work that has been given him recently of the greatest importance is the Caruso placque placed in the Metropolitan Art Gallery and one for the Metropolitan Opera House. He is doing the most important work for the permanent building of the Philadelphia exposition. Just now he is doing the remarkable Barre statue at Barre, Vt.; also many other important pieces of work, and it is fortunate that we secured him at practically the outset of his career, and I can conservatively say that if we had to give him the order to-day it would be more than double the amount agreed upon.

I might add further that Mr. Jennewein's qualifications were of such high order that he was awarded a four years' scholarship to the American Art Academy at Rome.

I had not only Mr. Moore pass on the model selected, but each member of the commission very enthusiastically gave him approval. I think this was the only course to pursue, as they are the supreme court of the art world, and the people who criticize the work can be referred to the Fine Arts Commission, and we can say that it was selected with their enthusiastic approval.

I trust this information will be of service to you.

With my best wishes, your friend,

JULIUS GARFINKLE.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE TARIFF—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 7456, the tariff bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does that automatically displace the unfinished business, the Liberian loan joint resolution? Would it not be better to ask that that be laid aside?

Mr. CURTIS. The unfinished business was laid aside temporarily at 2 o'clock, and I understand that taking up the conference report will not displace it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. To avoid having a question of order again raised which might consume time unnecessarily I now move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Chair to rule yesterday that the matter I am now going to present should be brought up before we begin the consideration of the conference report. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether it is his purpose to continue the consideration of the report to the usual hour of adjournment this afternoon?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the purpose of those in charge of the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to make a point of order against the report. I think the conferees have exceeded their authority in the matter of the authorization to the President to proclaim the so-called American valuation.

The Senate, after much discussion and, I think, due deliberation, placed a limitation upon the power of the President to proclaim American valuation, and confined his power to exercise that authority to dyestuffs and other things specified in paragraphs 27 and 28 of the bill. There was no power conferred upon the President in this regard, or in any respect with reference to the American valuation, in the bill as it passed the House. The bill as it passed the House placed the rates prescribed in the bill upon the basis of American valuation, but in no way conferred upon the President the right to proclaim American valuation, either as to the particular items mentioned in paragraphs 27 and 28 or as to any of the items in the bill. There is a vast difference between the Congress applying the American valuation to all or any of the items in the bill and authorizing the President to proclaim American valuation.

The paragraph which I am discussing confines itself entirely and absolutely to the exercise of the power of imposing American valuation by the President. There is nothing in the bill as passed by the House which gives the President any powers at all in this respect.

When the bill went to the conferees it went there with a provision that the President, in the case of dyestuffs and certain derivatives and such other articles as are specified in paragraphs 27 and 28, in the exercise of the functions of his office, upon the advice of the Tariff Commission, might proclaim American valuation, but as to those specified items only. The conference committee have enlarged that power conferred upon the President so as to extend his right to proclaim American valuation, if the results of investigation shall justify it in his opinion, to every one of the 4,000 items in the bill.

I think that is a clear usurpation of power. I do not use the expression offensively. I only use it as indicating an undue arrogation of power to themselves on the part of the conferees. It was legislation by the conferees, pure and simple; legislation, it may be, of the most vital consequence to the taxpayers of the United States—undertaking to confer upon the President, so as to embrace all the industries of the country, a power which the Senate had limited to one particular and specified industry, and it therefore becomes a matter of very serious import to the taxpayers of the country. If it were exercised to the full extent of the potentialities of the situation, of course, it would change the entire basis of valuation fixed in the bill.

In view of the fact that the present occupant of the chair [Mr. CUMMINS] is a great lawyer and a great parliamentarian, I do not think it is necessary in the presentation of the point of order to do more than state the facts, so as to make clear the basis of my position, and then state in a very general way, as I have done, the reasons upon which I rest my conclusion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is one essential feature of the case of which the Senator from North Carolina has failed to take note. It must be remembered that as the bill came over from the House it provided for the American valuation on every matter on which duties were to be levied ad valorem. So it will be seen that we have introduced no new matter, but have simply allowed the House to accept our foreign valuation in its entirety with the exception that in those cases in which the power is given to increase or decrease, if the duty shall not equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, then the American valuation basis may be retained. So that before the committee of conference there were on the one side the conferees insisting that the American valuation should be the basis throughout, and on the other side was the contention of the Senate conferees that the American valuation should be applied only to those articles covered by paragraphs 27 and 28.

Now, we had a perfect right to agree upon any condition between those two extremes. The House yielded to the general foreign valuation scheme, but insisted that if they abandoned everything relating to the ordinary process of valuation they should retain, not only in subdivision (b) but in subdivision (a) of the new matter which we inserted, the right to go to the American valuation plan. The Senate conferees conceded that, provided that there should be inserted a provision that if we returned to the American valuation for any purpose, we could not raise the rate. So it was specially provided that we might return to the American valuation, which was the House scheme, on condition that if the rates fixed in the bill did not give sufficient protection the President could not raise the rate, but could simply, by adopting the American valuation, thereby secure a higher rate of duty.

For all practical purposes I think it amounted to really nothing, because we are limited in our raising or lowering of duties to the sum which shall measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, and I do not believe there is a single thing except coal-tar products in which the rates fixed would not be sufficient to measure the difference without even returning to the American valuation.

But I even go further, Mr. President. I say that the conference committee had a right to cut out any part of the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment was new matter entirely except as to the American valuation, and all the House conferees needed to do was to say, "We will agree to subdivision (b) if you will strike out the words 'paragraphs 27 or 28 of.'" That would have allowed the American valuation for which they were contending on all products to be applied in the particular cases wherein the duty fixed by the committee would not measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad upon any article, whether it was a coal-tar product or otherwise. But they stated, "We will limit the power of the President, if he goes to the American valuation basis on any article, to the declaration that he shall not raise the rate of duty at all for any purpose but only require such rates as would measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad."

It was nothing more nor less than an easy way to allow the House conferees to step down from their American valuation scheme. I do not think it will amount to anything, or will ever be used, but, notwithstanding, the conferees had the undoubted power, inasmuch as the House had provided for the American valuation basis throughout and the Senate had declared for foreign valuation throughout, with the exception of two paragraphs, to yield to the House in order that American valuation in certain instances and under certain restrictions might be provided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD obtained the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Alabama proceeds, the Chair would like clearly to understand whether the point of order which has been made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is in complete possession of the Chair. The Official Reporter has given to the Chair the following as being a statement of the point of order made by the Senator from North Carolina:

> Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to make a point of order against the report. I think the conferees have exceeded their authority in the matter of the authorization of the President to proclaim the American valuation.

The Chair asks the Senator from North Carolina whether that states his point of order as he intended to state it?

Mr. SIMMONS. That states my point of order, Mr. President, as I intended to state it. I hope I have stated it correctly. If I have not, I desire to say that I make the point of order that the conferees exceeded their authority in striking out the limitation placed in the Senate bill upon the power of the President to proclaim American valuation and inserting a provision that proposes to authorize him to proclaim American valuation in all instances whenever, after investigation, in his judgment it is expedient and wise to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from North Carolina also in making the point of order particularized by referring to the action of the conferees in striking out, on page 292, line 25, the words "paragraphs 27 or 28 of." The Senator called that matter to the attention of the Chair in his argument.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that was the basis of the point of order, that those words had been stricken out.

I stated, Mr. President, that the reference to those two paragraphs in the bill limited the power of the President to proclaim American valuation to dyestuffs, and that was stricken out, and later the committee conferred upon the President full and plenary powers to declare American valuation in all cases in which he thought it was proper.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the President pro tempore will refer to the last print of the bill, he will see that the brackets indicate that the language embraced within them has been stricken out, namely, the words "paragraphs 27 or 28 of."

Mr. President, I rise to say a few words in support of the position taken by the Senator from North Carolina in connection with the point of order raised by him, which, aside from the fact that, if sustained, it would send the bill back to conference, involves a very far-reaching question.

I listened to what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] said against the point of order. If his viewpoint is correct, and the point in issue is the American valuation and not the power of the President as stated by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], of course, the Senator from North Dakota would be right; but he was not speaking to the point of order. The point of order was not that the American valuation did not extend to the whole bill so far as the action of Congress was concerned, but the point of order made by the Senator from North Carolina goes to the proposition that as the bill passed the Senate there were certain, what I should call legislative but which, I have no doubt, the Senator from North Dakota would call executive, powers conferred upon the President, which powers were limited so that he could not increase or decrease the rates proposed in the bill more than 50 per cent, and, in addition to that, in reference to two paragraphs, he was authorized to adopt the American valuation instead of the foreign valuation.

If I recollect aright, the bill as it went to the conference, so far as the powers of the President were concerned, was limited in regard to the American valuation to two paragraphs, paragraph 27 and paragraph 28, which relate to dyes and dyestuffs and to them alone. Am I right about that—that when the bill was passed by the Senate the American valuation plan applied only to dyestuffs?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. It applied merely to dyes and dyestuffs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was my understanding.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Is the Senator referring to the House bill or the Senate bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am referring to the Senate bill.

Mr. MCCUMBER. In the Senate bill the provision in regard to American valuation was limited to dyes; in other words, to paragraphs 27 and 28.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the Chair to bear in mind that as the bill passed the Senate the tax on all items in Title I was based on foreign valuation, which has been the basis for many years past, but there were two exceptions, namely, paragraphs 27 and 28, which related to dyes, and under the terms of the bill as it went to conference the American valuation basis was provided in the case of dyes.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the Senator is mistaken. As the bill passed the Senate, and went to conference, all the items in the two paragraphs to which the Senator refers, embracing dyestuffs, were to be based on foreign valuation, but the President was given the power to proclaim American valuation as to dyestuffs.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong as to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from North Carolina will pardon me, I think I was correct in my statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator to repeat his statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What I stated to the Chair, and what I should like to be assured about before I start my argument is—in reading the bill last night I came to that conclusion, and if I am wrong about it I hope the Senator from North Dakota will correct me—that as the bill went to conference, in so far as the Senate is concerned in Title I, which is the taxing feature of the bill, the duties on all articles in Title I were based on the foreign valuation, except two—paragraphs 27 and 28—relating to dyes which, as the bill went to conference, carried the American valuation.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Alabama is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So there is no dispute on that; we are all agreed as to that.

Mr. President, when this bill went to conference paragraphs 27 and 28, relating to dyes, provided for the American valuation, but the duties on all of the remaining items in the bill were based on foreign valuation. Of course, we all know that the House bill was based altogether upon the American valuation as to all items. So if the issue involved here were only one as to which valuation should apply to the articles in this bill, undoubtedly the Senator from North Dakota would be right, and the question as to valuation would be entirely within the powers of the conference. That, however, is not the question; that is not the issue. The House bill gave no power whatever to the President of the United States to adjust tariff rates, either on dyes or anything else; but when the Senate came to act it threw out the American valuation and, except as to the two paragraphs referred to, adopted the foreign valuation. Then, in addition to that, the Senate inserted several paragraphs in the bill which were not in the House bill at all, giving the President power to increase rates of duty under certain circumstances after certain investigations by the Tariff Commission. Of course, all that was at issue in the Senate amendments and was properly before the conference, so far as the power of the President of the United States was concerned, and the power given him in the Senate bill in reference to increasing or changing rates. Of course, ex cathedra, we know that rates based on American valuation would be higher than those based on foreign valuation; but it is not material whether they would or not, although necessarily a change in the basis of valuation would change the rates, whether it raised or lowered them; but when this bill went to conference the basis on which the President could act in making a change of rates related entirely to the foreign valuation except in regard to two paragraphs, and the items in those two paragraphs carried the American valuation as they went to the House, because they were the particular two items on which American valuation had been adopted.

I take it, Mr. President, that if nothing had been said about foreign valuation in paragraphs 27 and 28, and if all the power given to the President in this bill in its entirety was to increase or decrease the rate 50 per cent on the American valuation, and the conferees had turned around and changed the basis of the valuation on which the Executive was to operate, there could be no dispute about its being beyond their power, because the Senate had not conferred or considered such a power. It happens, however, that in the bill when it went to conference there were two paragraphs that had the American valuation, and in conferring on the President the additional power to increase rates or to decrease them, the bill said that he should act on the American valuation in all cases except in paragraphs 27 and 28; and of course if paragraphs 27 and 28, under the terms of the bill, carried the foreign valuation, the President was given the authority in paragraphs 27 and 28 to operate on the foreign valuation in his 50 per cent increase or decrease.

With that staring them in the face, the conferees on this bill, by a clerical amendment which seems very simple on its face but is very far-reaching in effect, merely strike out five words, the words "paragraphs 27 or 28 of." Now let us read just what is said here:

That in order to regulate the foreign commerce of the United States and to put into force and effect the policy of the Congress by this act intended, whenever the President, upon investigation of the differences in costs of production—

It formerly read "of products," but they have changed that to—

of articles provided for in paragraphs 27 and 28 of Title I of this act, wholly or in part the growth or product of the United States—

And so forth.

That clearly limited the President's power in increasing or decreasing rates under a foreign valuation to paragraphs 27 and 28, but as a result of striking out those five words the paragraph now reads—upon investigation of the differences in costs of production of articles provided for in Title I of this act.

Title I of the act comprises the entire taxing features of the tariff bill.

Mr. President, the Senator says that this does not mean much; that it will not be operative. Whether it meant much or little would not affect the standing of the point of order. If it meant very little, it would be just as good a point of order; but I do not agree with the Senator about its not meaning much. The difference between a foreign and an American valuation meant so much that the Senator in charge of this bill, through months of debate, continually explained that when he nearly doubled or actually doubled rates of duty in Title I of this bill over the House rates, the reason why he did it was because the lower rate in the House bill was based on the American valuation, and when he changed it back to the foreign valuation he had to increase the rate to make up for the difference. The Chair knows that it is not material whether it meant 5 per cent or 100 per cent, but as a fact before the American people it means the opportunity for enormous increase of the taxes on the American people that are put into this bill by the conferees, and not by the action of either body of Congress.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator contend that the conferees would not have the power to strike out paragraph 27, for instance, and say that this authority should apply simply to paragraph 28?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think paragraphs 27 and 28 were both in conference on this particular question, and I think the conferees might have exercised their judgment in reference to the two paragraphs; but if they had gone beyond either paragraph, not merely by adding all the items in the bill but by adding one paragraph to it, they would have violated their authority.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator think they could not have added paragraph 29, then, in the place of paragraph 27?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Paragraph 29, so far as the President's power to fix rates was concerned, was not in conference.

Mr. McCUMBER. I just wanted to get the Senator's position.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, then, contends that they could not strike out "27" and insert "29"?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. Of course, the Senator has discussed this question from an entirely different standpoint from that from which I say the point of order lies and from which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] presented his case. The Senator from North Dakota is looking at the question from the standpoint of whether or not the valuation was in issue. The question that is in issue as to what they did was the authority of the President of the United States and as to how far that authority extended.

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President; I was discussing the matter just now from the standpoint that, it being entirely new matter, the conferees had the right either to extend or to limit it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will reach that point. I think the Senator is entirely wrong, and I think I can show him authority on that point without any trouble.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the provision as reported, giving the power to the President to transfer articles from a foreign valuation to an American valuation, gives him the power only to decrease the rate but not to increase it. Originally the power was given to decrease or to increase, but as reported to the Senate now it does not give him the power to increase any rate where the article is transferred from a foreign to an American valuation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is not material. I do not agree with the Senator entirely about that, however.

Mr. SIMMONS. Except as the mere transfer may do that.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the mere transfer, as the Senator from North Carolina says, will very largely increase it; but that is not material in discussing the point of order.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because if the power was given to decrease it is just as effective on the point of order as the power to increase.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but what I wanted to call the Senator's attention to was this: He said that giving that power to the President increased the rate sometimes two or three times.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Here is what I understand from this provision: As the conference report now stands the President of the United States—of course, after investigation—if he reaches certain conclusions will have the right to take any article in Title I of this bill and transfer it from the foreign valuation to the American valuation.

There is no dispute about that question. We are agreed. Now, suppose the tax on an article, say, silks, is 50 per cent, or 60 per cent now on the foreign valuation. We know that when it comes here under the foreign valuation you have to take the cost, you have to take the selling price in the American market, and in many cases the mere transfer of that article from the foreign valuation to the American valuation would double the rate of duty, and some of these articles bear rates of two or three hundred per cent; but suppose it is an article like silk that bears a duty of 60 or 70 per cent. You would add 60 or 70 per cent tax on the American people by the mere act of the Executive authority. As I say, the amount of it is not the question on the point of order, but it shows clearly the great importance of the proposition that has been brought back here. If the Senate had had an opportunity to vote on this item alone I do not believe it would have ever agreed that the President should have the power to transfer every article in this bill from the foreign valuation to the American valuation. If there was a protest that went up in this country against one thing in this tariff bill from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean, that was almost universal so far as business men were concerned, except those who were directly interested in the bill, it was a protest against the provisions of the House bill providing for an American valuation; so much so that in response to that sentiment the Senate committee rejected the American valuation, and brought the bill in here with a provision that the tax should be levied on the basis of the foreign valuation of goods.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall be delighted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know whether it is appropriate or not, but he desires fully to understand the point of order as made. Is it the contention under the point of order that the conference bill would permit the levying upon a given article of a higher duty than had been provided in either the Senate bill or the House bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think undoubtedly that would be the effect of it in the case of many articles—undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is that the foundation of the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. The foundation of the point of order is the authority granted to the President. The result of the authority granted to the President, if exercised by him, would be to enable the President by Executive order to raise the rates higher than they were fixed in either bill and higher than they were fixed in either bill in addition to the executive authority to increase 50 per cent. That would be the result of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill provided for the American valuation upon all articles.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But with low rates—the American valuation, with low rates of duty on most articles. The Senate bill provided for the foreign valuation, with higher rates, but this bill provides for an American valuation with the high ad valorem rates fixed in the Senate bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, it provides for American valuation with the duties prescribed by the Congress for foreign valuation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure. There was considerable discussion in the aisle at the time I was trying to make myself clear.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, if I understood the Senator correctly, he said that this gave to the President the power to raise a rate to a point higher than that provided in the Senate bill. The bill as it passed the Senate provided that he might raise the rate under both subdivisions (a) and (b) up to the difference between the foreign cost of production and the home cost of production. The same bill provides in both instances that he can not raise the rate, no matter what system he adopts, above the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I have said a good many times, when you deal with the question of the difference in the cost of production, that means anything; it is a mere figure of speech. It is mere language placed in the bill to give the President of the United States power to operate on this question. I have had experience for many years in this kind of work, and the Senator knows, as well as I do, that witnesses themselves, men who may be prejudiced by their business interests but are perfectly honest, will differ more than a hundred per cent in stating the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. There is no limit on that, and there is none in the bill, except mere language. The result is that if the President of the United States desires to do so—and there is no limitation on his conclusion and no provision for a review of his conclusion—as the bill now stands he can transfer any article from the foreign valuation to the American valuation and more than double the effectiveness of the tax on the American people by Executive order.

I am sure that neither House of Congress contemplated any such result when it sent the bill to conference. It is entirely beyond the scope of what they expected. The rates of the highest tariff taxes ever levied on the American people are increased by the action of the conferees in striking five words out of the bill.

But whether it decreases the rates or whether it increases the rates is not the question; it is merely illustrative of the situation. The real point is that when this bill went to conference, so far as the Executive power was concerned it was limited to foreign valuation except in two paragraphs of the bill, and limited to American valuation as to those two paragraphs. The Senator in charge of the bill gave away his case in his own argument when he said that he only put that in, that he did not intend to do much with it, but it helped soften down the differences between the two Houses and settle the contention of the House of Representatives on their claim for American valuation on the imported articles coming into this country. In other words, he gave to the President of the United States what Congress itself would not exercise. Power which the Congress itself would not exercise he gives away in conference to the President of the United States in changing every paragraph in the bill except two. It seems to me that is clearly beyond the power of the conferees.

Of course, I need not refer the President of the Senate to those decisions which have been often made in both branches of Congress, that where an appropriation is made, say, for a hundred thousand dollars, and it is disagreed to in the other House, the power of the conferees is limited within the hundred thousand dollars, and they can not exceed that amount and make the appropriation a million. Although they could cut it to seventy-five thousand or to fifty thousand, they can not exceed the advance limit of the amount given.

I think the same proposition would apply with reference to the items in the tariff bill. Where a specific power is limited to two items—in this case to adopt the American valuation—within the scope of those two items they could act; but they had no power to go beyond the scope of that, any more than they would have the power to increase the amount of an appropriation beyond the amount named by the two Houses.

The President of the Senate is very familiar with the rule, but for the RECORD I want to read the rule. Section 2 of Rule XXVII reads as follows:

> Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

That amendment to the rules was adopted March 8, 1918, because the Senate, as the President knows, had been very lax in these matters. There have been precedents in the past where matters have been allowed to be inserted by conferees in conference reports entirely changing the language and the effect of the legislation, but the error of that procedure had gone so far that the Senate itself revolted against it, and in March, 1918, a more drastic rule was brought in to govern the Senate conferees than the rule which had theretofore existed in the House of Representatives.

If the Chair will pardon me, I want to read a decision from the House of Representatives where in conference very much the same thing was done with regard to a bill as has been done here, except in a different way. It was on March 7, 1904. I read as follows from Gilfry's Precedents, page 333:

> In the House of Representatives, Mr. Bingham, of Pennsylvania, called up the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill. Mr. MANN, of Illinois, made the point of order that the managers of the conference had exceeded their authority by inserting new matter in their report.
> On the following day the Speaker [Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON] ruled upon the point of order, as follows: "On yesterday, upon the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the point of order that the conferees had exceeded their jurisdiction, in substance as follows: That Senate amendment numbered 235 inserted these words 'or any other'; and again to the amendment numbered 236 the Senate inserted these words 'by this or any other act.' The House provision, which the Senate amended, is as follows: 'No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers therefor for the personal use of any officer provided for herein other than the President of the United States, the heads of executive departments, and the Secretary to the President.' The conference report takes the matter in difference to which the Chair has referred, accepts the Senate amendments, and inserts 'or official,' so as to make it read 'for the personal or official use of any officer provided for by this or any other act other than the President of the United States,' etc. It is objected that the insertion of the words 'or official' is aliunde to the matter that was in difference between the two Houses, and prevents, if enacted, the use of appropriations in this or any other appropriation bill for paying the expenses of horses and carriages, or drivers therefor, for the personal or official use of any officer, etc. It is evident from the reading of the amendments that the insertion of the words 'or official' inserts that within the conference report that was not proposed by the House or by the Senate. It is true that if the whole paragraph in the bill as it passed the House had been stricken out and a substitute therefor proposed by the Senate, or if the Senate had stricken out the paragraph without proposing a substitute, and the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate, then the conferees might have had jurisdiction touching the whole matter and might have agreed upon any provision that would have been germane. But that is not this case. This provision in the conference report inserts legislation that never was before the House or before the Senate, and it was quite competent for the conferees, if they could do this, to have stricken out the whole paragraph and inserted anything that was germane. They could have stricken out these words, 'other than the President of the United States, the heads of executive departments, and the Secretary to the President,' and while there were but two words inserted, the provision, if enacted into law, would be far-reaching and would run along the line of the whole public service. As to the wisdom of such a provision, the Chair is not called upon to intimate any opinion. It is for the House and the Senate to determine upon the wisdom of it, and, as the House and the Senate never have considered that proposition, the Chair is of opinion that the conferees exceeded their power, and therefore sustains the point of order."

In that case they merely changed the words in conference to extend the power of the appropriation to certain other officials besides those named and in dispute. In this case the conferees merely struck out five words, and by doing so made the language apply entirely to article 1, instead of two paragraphs in the bill. In other words, by striking out five words they inserted every other paragraph in article 1.

Mr. President, no man can contend that any such question as that was submitted by the Senate of the United States to the conference or by the House to the conference. No man for a minute imagines, when this great power was given to the President of the United States to function in reference to rates in a tariff bill, that he should have the unlimited right, under article 1, to adopt either the American or the foreign valuation as he saw proper. It is an enormous matter. It goes to the whole substance of the tariff bill. It doubles the taxing power of the bill, if the President chooses to exercise the power.

To say that any such question was submitted to the conferees seems to me beyond reason. It was not within the scope of the viewpoint of the two Houses. It was shown absolutely that the Senate did not intend that any such application should be made by the Senate rejecting American valuation on these articles. It rejected it in response to public sentiment. Yet the conferees, after they went to the conference, without the matter being in dispute except in reference to two paragraphs in the bill, by a mere elimination of those words made the language so as to apply the American valuation to every item in the bill, if the President chooses to exercise the power.

I am not contending that he will or will not, or when he will or when he will not, but he can do it if he wants to and there is no limitation on his power except his own discretion, because the idea of his having to find out the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad is so broad a discretion that anything can operate within the power of that discretion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair ask the Senator another question before he concludes his argument? The Chair very much desires to get the principle of the matter which the Senator is presenting.

The Senator insists that it was not within the jurisdiction of the conference committee to enlarge the authority of the President. I take it that is the fundamental proposition?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; to enlarge the power of the President in this way. That is it exactly. I am not arguing the question of valuation. That was a legislative power which was in dispute as to the policy of Congress, as to whether the fundamental principle in the bill would have been affected, but this is an additional power which they have granted to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Alabama takes this position: The House gave the President no power, the Senate gave the President certain powers, and the conferees could not enlarge the powers which the Senate had given to the President.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. In other words, the Chair is exactly right as to the position I take in the matter. To illustrate, the Senate bill gave the President certain powers to increase tariff duties on foreign valuation in the bill. Of course, the power of the President is the issue and not the tax. Does the Chair think that because it had given the President power to increase duties the conferees could have gone on and written provisions into the bill that would give the President power to levy internal taxes on all articles coming into the customhouses, to have applied a similar tax in his discretion to the internal tax levied on tobacco, for instance, and broaden his powers to that extent?

I think clearly that was not within the scope of the power granted to them. We sent to conference here a bill granting power to the President to change the rates of duty on a certain basis. The conferees changed the entire basis of power on which he is to operate, leaving the old basis and adding a new one besides.

Now, just eliminate paragraphs 27 and 28 and take up some particular item in the bill—optical glass, for instance, on page 227. As the bill went to conference the tax fixed by the House was 35 per cent American valuation. As it passed the Senate it was 45 per cent foreign valuation. In that case I know the difference in valuation would amount to more than 100 per cent. The bill gives to the President the right, as to optical glasses, to apply 45 per cent on the American valuation. That is the result of the amendment.

Does the Chair think that was in conference, that the Chair and myself and other Senators sent that authority to the conference to be determined by them? Instead of 45 per cent on optical glasses, that would make probably a tax of 90 per cent on the American valuation if we levied the 45 per cent on the American valuation plan. So the effect of it is to increase the rates in the bill by a mere order of the President away beyond anything contemplated by either House of Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think it would have been competent for the conferees to have accepted American valuation with the rates fixed by the Senate upon optical glasses?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I do.

Mr. LENROOT. And if they did, what would have been the difference between the effect of doing it in that way and in the way adopted by the conference?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The difference in effect is this: Of course, the valuation in the two bills was in issue so far as valuation was concerned. I do not dispute the fact that if the conferees had had the nerve—and I say "nerve" with all the emphasis I can command—to apply the Senate rates of duty to the American valuation and brought the bill back in that form to the Senate the Senator from Wisconsin would not have voted for the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. That would not have been a question upon the merits.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I realize that. The Senator would not have voted for the bill, and they would not have dared to bring it back in that way. But they did bring in an amendment which they would not have dared to bring in any other way, because the country, if they had known it, would have rejected it. By striking out five words they seek to give the power to the President to do this thing.

The Senator may not have been here when I started my argument. I am not contending at all on the question of valuation that the committee did not have the right to do what it thought best.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought the Senator was contending that the action of the conferees would result in exceeding the tax that the conferees were authorized to fix.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was not contending; I was merely illustrating. It was not the point of order to which I was addressing myself, but I was trying to impress on the Chair what a dangerous effect the amendment would have so far as the American people are concerned if the conferees are allowed to keep it in the bill. It is not that it has anything to do with the point of order except as to the very grave importance of the matter that is at issue before the Chair now. Of course, I realize that the only issue of importance is as to whether the conferees had a right to extend the power of the President in the way they have done.

I thank the Chair for hearing me.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it seems very clear that the question hinges on determining what is the matter in disagreement. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] insist that it is the power of the President, and that the conferees have enlarged that power beyond their jurisdiction. The chairman of the committee [Mr. MCCUMBER] insists that the subject matter in disagreement is that of valuation. It seems very clear to me that that was the subject matter which was in disagreement between the two Houses, and the object of the conference, so far as this question was concerned, was to bring both Houses together upon the question whether rates of duty should be based upon foreign valuation or upon American valuation.

The two Houses could be brought together in only one of four ways upon that subject. The conferees might have agreed upon foreign valuation throughout. They might have agreed upon American valuation throughout. They might have agreed upon certain paragraphs having the American valuation applied to them and the balance of the bill having foreign valuation applied to it. They might have agreed that the American valuation under certain circumstances and conditions should be applied and the foreign valuation should be applied in all other cases. There is no other way for the two Houses to be brought together with reference to the subject matter in disagreement, and the conferees have chosen one of those four ways.

I insist that if there had not been a word in the bill as passed by the Senate with reference to the power of the President regarding American valuation, it was clearly within the province of the conferees to insert a provision in it delegating to the President, under certain conditions and in certain cases, the power to apply the American valuation which the House insisted upon with reference to the entire bill. That does bring the two Houses together.

We do not need to argue the provision of the bill with relation to the power of the President as to valuation. The House was insisting upon American valuation throughout. The Senate delegated power with reference to two paragraphs in the bill, and as to those two paragraphs took the position that there might be American valuation applied, but as to none other. The House necessarily disagreed to that provision, because they insisted that the whole bill should have the American valuation applied to it.

Of course, to make the point of order good it seems to me we would have to have this condition: If the House had foreign valuation and the Senate had foreign valuation and then had put in the provision for American valuation as to those two paragraphs, it might well then be argued that the only question of the power of the President as to American valuation was as to those two paragraphs. But the House necessarily had to disagree to that provision of the Senate bill in order to be consistent with their position in insisting upon American valuation throughout the bill. So we have the two extremes. The Senate is really insisting upon foreign valuation; the House upon American valuation; and the conferees have gotten together by agreeing upon the foreign valuation, except that in certain instances and under certain conditions the Senate conferees have yielded to the House and have provided that under such circumstances the American valuation may be applied by the President.

May I observe that in any case where the President does apply American valuation it leaves it exactly as if the conferees had accepted the House plan as to American valuation as to every paragraph to which the American valuation is applied.

I want now to call attention to a precedent of the House of Representatives. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] quoted one, and I desire to read another:

On February 25, 1901, Mr. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, of Iowa, presented the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.

The conferees recommended that the House recede from its amendment, which was in the nature of a substitute, striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a new text; and they further recommended that the House agree to the Senate text with certain specified amendments.

Mr. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, made a point of order that the conferees had exceeded their authority and incorporated in their report matters not in difference between the two Houses. The House text had substituted reference to the Court of Claims instead of to the commission proposed by the Senate text. The conferees not only recommended the adoption of the Senate text, but had enlarged the provisions of it, making the number of commissioners five instead of three, although, he asserted, there was no issue between the two Houses on this point, and also materially changing the Senate text in those portions relating to the right of appeal.

After debate, the Speaker held:

The current of authorities in regard to the action of the conferees is that they must be held strictly to the consideration of such matters as are in issue between the two Houses. That is the general governing principle, and a most valuable one, and a necessary one. In this case, however, the Chair sees no difficulty. As stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Mahon], the Senate presents a proposition for a commission; the House turns that down, so to speak, and adopts an amendment, by way of substitute, providing that these Spanish claims shall be referred for determination to the Court of Claims. In other words, the Senate contends for a commission, the House for the Court of Claims. The method of treating these Spanish claims is thus put in issue.

Then the Speaker goes on and holds that that being the matter in issue, the conferees had a very wide discretion. So here the matter in issue, and the only matter that is affected by the point of order raised by the Senator from North Carolina, is the question of valuation as to whether American valuation shall be applied or foreign valuation shall be applied. The conferees have brought the two Houses together by agreeing that foreign valuation shall be applied except that in certain cases and under certain conditions the House provision as to American valuation shall be accepted.

Mr. President, it seems very clear to me that upon principle the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to say just one word?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, there is no contention on my part that if the issue is merely one relating to the question of valuation the point of order would lie; but both the Senator from North Carolina and myself contend that it is a question of power. However, I desire to refer to the precedent which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has quoted. In that instance the issue involved was the settlement of certain Spanish War claims, and the Senate had adopted the commission plan while the House of Representatives wished to refer the claims to the Court of Claims, and both of those questions were in issue. I can cite a precedent, if the Chair desires to go back to Speaker Henderson, for whose decisions I have much respect, based on a decision which was rendered at about the same time. A claims bill was pending, and certain claims were in dispute between the two Houses. In that case the conferees inserted three new claims which were not in the bill at all. I remember making a point of order at the time against the action of the conferees. The Chair sustained the point of order, and the report was sent back to conference, with instructions to strike out the new claims which had been inserted in the bill. The conferees contended that the bill being a claims bill it was within the scope of their power to put in any claim. The same proposition is now involved in this case in a tax bill. The conferees because a tax was involved seemed to think they had authority in conference to increase the power of the President so as to enable him to put into operation any tax scheme they saw fit.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. ODDIE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ODDIE. As the question has been raised by the Senator from Alabama——

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought I was recognized, and I yielded to the Senator from Alabama for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand. The Chair recognized the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought I was recognized. I ask the Senator from Alabama if he did not ask me to yield to him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I asked the Senator to yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would not make the point now, but for the fact that the Senator from Nevada is probably going to talk about some other matter. However, I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ODDIE. As the Senator from Alabama has brought up the question of whether American valuation or foreign valuation is the more popular in this country, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a list of organizations, with the number of their members, which have indorsed American valuation. I think my request is very apropos at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that debate, being at the pleasure of the Chair, must be devoted to the point at issue, and the popular opinion with regard to American valuation is not material to the present proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Nevada if the list which he desires to have printed in the RECORD has not already been so printed?

Mr. ODDIE. No; but a very small part of the list has been printed. The matter is short and will take but very little space if it be printed in small type, which is all I ask for.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to it being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, has anybody made a point of order against or raised any objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair made objection to it. The debate is proceeding on a point of order, and must be confined to the point of order, because debate in this instance is not a matter of right. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to prolong this discussion. I do desire, however, to make myself a little bit clearer to the Chair than I seem to have done in my first presentation of the question. It is probable that I did not speak as loudly as I should, and, on account of the conversation in the Chamber, the Chair probably did not hear all I said. I am saying this because, from some observations which have fallen from the Chair since I made my statement, I apprehend that probably he did not catch in its fullness the point which I originally presented.

Mr. President, I have made no question, and I do not make any question, as to the right of the conferees to have made any change which they saw fit with respect to American and foreign valuation, so far as such change related to the positive provisions written by the Senate into the bill.

The House bill was based in toto upon the American valuation. It included every item in Title I, which covers the entire dutiable list. The Senate rewrote the bill from beginning to end, so far as concerns the basis of valuation upon which the rates prescribed were to operate and be calculated. There was a complete disagreement between the two Houses upon that question; and undoubtedly the conferees might have provided for the American valuation throughout Schedule 1, which relates to chemicals, and they might have applied the foreign valuation to every item in Schedule 2, which relates to metals, and so they might have gone on through the bill, applying foreign valuation to the items in one schedule and in the next schedule applying American valuation. No question is made about that. That relates to congressional action, to the action of the two Houses with respect to the method of valuation to be employed. The power which fixed the valuation in that case was the legislative power, the Congress, and, under the rules, the conferees might make any changes within the two methods of valuation that they saw fit in order to bring the two bodies together.

When, however, we come to the power which is conferred upon the President in connection with the so-called flexible tariff provision, we find that the bill as originally written and presented to the Senate by the Finance Committee contained three or four sections, each of which conferred upon the Executive extraordinary powers with reference to rates and with reference to the valuation upon which those rates should be based, powers never before granted by Congress to the Executive, powers that seemed to confer upon him quasi legislative functions. Those powers in the bill are distinct from the rates fixed by this body and the other House acting in conjunction. With respect to those powers over rates and valuation the House and the Senate have nothing to do; they are in excess of the powers exercised by the two Houses; upon the President is conferred power to do things which neither branch of the Congress has undertaken to do. Among the powers conferred upon the President by the Senate bill was the power, under certain circumstances, to increase rates within the limits of 50 per cent, but the additional rates which the President was authorized to impose must be based upon the plan of valuation prescribed in the bill, namely, upon the basis of foreign valuation. The House bill contained no such provision as that.

The next power conferred upon the President in the original bill related to valuation. The bill as originally reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee conferring these extraordinary powers on the President, in connection with the making of this so-called flexible tariff, provided that he might proclaim American valuation as to any item in Title I, provided he should find certain conditions and facts to exist.

That was the character of the power conferred upon the President as it came to the Senate from the Finance Committee; but the Senate, after due consideration and discussion, decided against this broad and sweeping power with reference to American valuation, and by amendment to the Senate Finance Committee's proposed amendment—namely, by the so-called Bursum amendment—limited the powers of the President with respect to American valuation to two paragraphs in Title I, those relating to dyestuffs. Now, the bill goes back to the conference committee for action. The powers of the President have been expressly confined to those two paragraphs. The Senate has expressed its will about it. The conferees strike out this amendment, put in by the Senate, and they extend the President's power so as to embrace within its scope every item in the whole title. If that is not an exercise of legislative power I do not know what it is.

I have put this case purely upon the question of power. To my mind there is a vast distinction between the powers over rates which this bill gives to the President and the powers over rates which are inherent in the Congress. The powers over rates that are inherent in the Congress are left here in such a way that the conferees had a perfect right to change the methods of valuation in any respect that they saw fit to bring the two Houses together; but the powers that are delegated to the President seem to me to be powers that must be considered from an entirely different standpoint.

If you are going to confuse those two things, then of course there is force in the argument made by the Senator from North Dakota and the argument made by the Senator from Wisconsin; but if those two things are distinct and separate—and I think they are vastly different—then I take it that there was no authority in the conferees to make this broad and sweeping change.

But the President pro tempore has suggested the question of the effect upon rates of this change by the committee. Mr. President, the effect of it is sweeping. It is difficult to estimate it. It is uncertain, but nevertheless it is clear that by reason of this action the rates have been increased to rates much higher than those imposed by either branch of the Congress. The House rates, being based upon American valuation, were low in percentage of rates, relatively speaking. The Senate rates, based upon foreign valuation, were higher, relatively speaking. In fact, all through the discussions that we had here on the question of whether or not the Senate rate was higher than that imposed by the House, the representatives of the Finance Committee declared that the rate was nominally higher because the rate of the House was based upon one valuation while the rates of the Senate were based upon another valuation, and they claimed that while the rates upon the foreign valuation all through the bill were nominally much higher, as a matter of fact they were not any higher. The fact remains, however, that the rates are higher, considered as rates, and the foreign-valuation rates obtain in every item in this bill. They are all higher than the House rates.

What does this section do with reference to those rates? Here it is. I am reading now from paragraph (b) of section 315:

In such cases—

That is, where the President proclaims American valuation—

In such cases and upon the proclamation by the President becoming effective the ad valorem duty or duties based in whole or in part upon the value of the imported article in the country of exportation shall thereafter be based upon the American selling price.

In every case, Mr. President, the duty—what duty? The duty imposed in this act. Upon what basis of valuation is that duty imposed? It is imposed upon the basis of the foreign valuation. It is made higher than it otherwise would be on the American valuation, because it is on the foreign valuation. The President is authorized by the proclamation of the American valuation to increase further that rate, based on the foreign valuation, by the extent that the value of the article in the foreign market is less than the value of the article in the American market. The rate that is to apply, upon which his proclamation is to operate, is a rate based upon the foreign valuation, the price of the product landed at an American port. The duty is fixed on that basis. That is the high rate. When the President adds to that rate the difference between the foreign valuation and the American valuation he necessarily raises the rate higher than it was and is in the bill either upon the rates fixed by the House or upon the rates fixed by the Senate.

I think that this is a very important matter. I am not caviling about it. I believe that it is a clear usurpation of power by the conferees. I believe that we ought to keep the conferees within their proper sphere. The importance of this question can not be too much emphasized.

I am ready, so far as I am concerned, for the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to examine this question. He is not ready to rule upon it, and hopes that inasmuch as the hour of adjournment is near at hand the Senate will either adjourn or take a recess at this time.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, since the Chair is going to take this matter under advisement—which is a very wise decision—may I suggest that if the Chair will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning, containing yesterday's proceedings in the House, at page 13738, he will find the best reasons that could possibly be assigned for the action of the House. They were proclaimed by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, Mr. FORDNEY, when he said:

Senator BURSUM sent word yesterday that if the language in his amendment was left in it would ruin his reputation, and we sent word back that if it were it would ruin the reputation of the House bill, and therefore we struck it out and saved the reputation of both.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order which I send to the Secretary's desk, assigning places on committees to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], may be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order for the adoption of which the Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. REED, be assigned to membership on the following committees, to wit: Immigration, Interoceanic Canals, Manufactures, Naval Affairs, and Territories and Insular Possessions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will state that those are the same committees of which the late Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Crow, was a member, and it was thought by the committee on committees to be only fair that his successor should take the same places. They are the only vacancies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the assignment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the committees named in the order which has just been read? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session to-day it recess until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being until Monday at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order entered, took a recess until Monday, September 18, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, September 16, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we do not come to Thee under the bondage of fear, for Thou dost not delight in destruction. In Thy sight human life is not a vanishing dream, for in Thee we live and move and have our being. The Lord be exalted, for He is so high and holy that the archangels veil their faces before Him. O be Thou with us that we may be champions of the truth and right, heroes for liberty and in everything the loyal sons of our heavenly Father. O care for our own United States, and in every crisis may our Republic come to its great task with high honor, erect, mighty, and valiant. Make of all who dwell on its breast defenders of our flag and loyal to all those institutions which bless our Christian land. O bring peace to the earth and may it stop shrieking the hymn of hate. Let hope revive beneath the forbidding skies and let faith discern the coming of the truce of God. With the dawn of to-morrow, still the care and the anxiety of the world's busy week. In Thy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. FAIRFIELD was granted leave of absence, for five days, to attend a funeral.

Mr. WASON was granted leave of absence, for one week, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels he ought to state he was notified of Mr. WASON's illness some days ago, but forgot to put in the request for leave.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5214) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. GOODING, and Mr. TRAMMELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

H. R. 2722. An act for the relief of W. W. McGrath;

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askeli;

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels;

H. R. 5918. An act for the relief of the Michigan Boulevard Building Co.; and

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2377. An act to authorize the extension and widening of Ninth Street from Longfellow Street NW. to Underwood Street and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue NW.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2377. An act to authorize the extension and widening of Ninth Street from Longfellow Street NW. to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue NW.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATION BILL.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the river and harbor bill for consideration under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a conference report on the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8 and 67.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, and 74; and agree to the same.

The committee of conference reached no agreement on Senate amendments Nos. 3, 11, and 23.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the words "Corpus Christi" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word "Nogo" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Noyo"; and strike out the period at the end of the paragraph, insert in lieu thereof a comma, and add the following words: "and subject to the conditions set forth in said document"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Tennessee River and tributaries, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky: Survey, at a cost not to exceed $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committe of conference reached no agreement on Senate amendment No. 11.

Amendments numbered 15 and 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15 and 16, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In the language proposed by the Senate amendments strike out the words "landing place" and insert in lieu thereof the word "harbor," so as to make the matter affected by the amendment to read: "any one harbor in any one fiscal year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 6 as the last paragraph in section 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed by the Senate amendment strike out the word "heretofore," at the beginning of line 3; also strike out the comma after the word "contracts" in line 6 of the amendment, insert in lieu thereof a period, and strike out the balance of the matter proposed, so as to make the section read:

"SEC. 10. That any work of improvement herein adopted, and any public work on canals, rivers, and harbors adopted by Congress may be prosecuted by direct appropriations, by continuing contracts, or by both direct appropriations and continuing contracts."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed in the Senate amendment strike out the proviso at the end of the first paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That this provision shall not apply to those rafting logs except upon a direct request upon the owner to furnish specific information," and in the second line of the second paragraph strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 18, after line 17; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 12, to follow amendment No. 58; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Cheboygan River, Mich., in the city of Cheboygan, with a view to securing a depth of 16 feet between the State Street Bridge and Elm Street"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 13, after line 18; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 14. That the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission is hereby extended, for the purposes of levee protection and bank protection, to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River between Cairo, Ill., and the Head of the Passes, in so far as these tributaries and outlets are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference recommends that the paragraph relating to Plymouth Harbor, Mass., on page 3, line 3, 4, 5, and 6, be transferred to page 1, after line 7.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

The river and harbor bill as it passed the House authorized new work, the total estimated cost of which was $40,652,309. The amount added by amendment in the Senate was $15,449,100, as follows:

Westchester Creek, N. Y.	$475,000
Absecon Inlet, N. J.	240,000
Acquisition of the Lake Drummond Canal, Va. and N. C.	500,000
Channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, Tex.	1,394,800
Noyo River, Calif.	16,000
Umpqua River, bar, and harbor, Oreg.	276,500
Siuslaw River, Oreg.	35,000
Lake Washington Ship Canal, Wash.	446,000
Wrangell Harbor, Alaska	50,000
Tennessee River and tributaries (survey)	515,800
Acquisition of the Cape Cod Canal, Mass.	11,500,000
Total	15,449,100

As a result of the conference the following reductions were made from the authorizations added by the Senate:

Siuslaw River, Oreg.	$35,000
Survey of Tennessee River and tributaries	315,800

The following statement shows the action taken by the conference on each of the Senate amendments (page numbers refer to print of bill with Senate amendments numbered):

On amendment No. 1, page 2: Item adopts new projects for Westchester Creek, N. Y., estimated to cost $475,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 2, page 2: Item adopts new project for Absecon Inlet, N. J., at estimated cost of $240,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 3, page 3: Item provided for the acquisition by the Government of the Lake Drummond Canal, Va. and N. C., at a cost not to exceed $500,000. No agreement was reached by the conference committee

On amendment No. 4, page 5: Item adopts new project for dredging channel from Aransas Pass, Tex., to Corpus Christi, at estimated cost of $1,394,800. House conferees recede with an amendment changing the title of the project from "Corpus Christi, Texas," to "Channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, Texas."

On amendment No. 5, page 6: Item adopts new project for Noyo River, Calif., estimated to cost $16,000. House conferees recede with amendments correcting a typographical error, and making the prosecution of the work subject to the condition that local interests contribute one-third the cost thereof.

On amendment No. 6, pages 6 and 7: Item amends provision of the House bill adopting a new project for Oakland Harbor, Calif., by providing that no work shall be done above the Webster and Harrison Street Bridges until those bridges have been removed or so altered, in accordance with plans approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, as to provide suitable facilities for navigation. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 7, page 7: Item adopts new project for Umpqua River, bar, and entrance, Oregon, estimated to cost $276,500. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 8, page 7: Item adopts new project for Siuslaw River, Oreg., Acme to the entrance, estimated to cost $35,000. Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 9, page 8: Item adopts new project for widening the channel of approach to the Lake Washington Ship Canal and constructing a mooring pier for vessels. Estimated cost, $446,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 10, page 8: Item provides for a survey of the Tennessee and its tributaries for the purpose of gaining full knowledge of navigation and water-power possibilities of these rivers. The estimated cost of the survey is $515,800. House conferees recede with an amendment limiting the cost of the survey to $200,000.

On amendment No. 11, page 9: Item modifies the existing project for East River, N. Y., by limiting the depth to be secured from the navy yard to Long Island Sound to 35 feet, instead of 40 feet, as authorized. No agreement was reached on this item.

On amendments Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, on pages 9 and 10: These items amend the House provision authorizing the expenditure of appropriations or allotments for the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis for dredging of channels to landing places, as follows: Amendment No. 12 provides that appropriations or allotments "heretofore or hereafter made" shall be available for this purpose; amendment No. 13 includes landing places in former channels among the harbors to which such channels may be dredged; and amendments Nos. 14, 15, and 16 limit the amount that may be expended on any one of such channels to $50,000 in any one fiscal year, while the House language limited the amount that could be expended on all such channels to $100,000 in any one fiscal year. House conferees recede with an amendment substituting the word "harbor" for the words "landing places" in the matter covered by Senate amendments Nos. 15 and 16.

On amendment No. 17, page 10: Item adopts new project for the construction of a breakwater at Wrangell Harbor, Alaska, estimated to cost $50,000. House conferees recede with an amendment transferring the item to the end of section 1 of the bill.

On amendment No. 18, page 12: Item provides for the abandonment of the operation, care, and maintenance of lock and dam in the Galena River, Ill. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 19, page 12: Item strikes out the words "and directed" in House provision authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to construct six sea-going hopper dredges. At the present time it appears that not more than four of these dredges will be required immediately and it may be some time before the two additional dredges will be required. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 20, page 14: Item provides that hereafter no project shall be considered by any committee of Congress with a view to its adoption, except with a view to a survey, if five years have elapsed since a report upon a survey of such project has been submitted to Congress pursuant to law. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 21, pages 14 and 15: Item provides that any work of improvement herein adopted, and any public work on canals, rivers, and harbors heretofore adopted by Congress may be prosecuted by direct appropriations, by continuing contracts, or by both direct appropriations and continuing contracts, as may be provided in any act making appropriations to carry on such works. House conferees recede with an amendment striking out the word "heretofore" in line 3 of the amendment, and by striking out the words "as may be provided in any act making appropriations to carry on such works."

On amendment No. 22, page 15: Item vests the Secretary of War with authority to require all vessels operating upon the navigable waters of the United States to furnish such statements relative to vessels, passengers, freight, and tonnage as may be needed in connection with the investigation of proposed river and harbor improvements and in carrying on the work assigned to the War Department by the transportation act of 1920. House recedes with three slight verbal changes in the matter proposed.

On amendment No. 23, pages 15 and 16: Item provides for the acquisition of the Cape Cod Canal, Mass., at a cost of about $12,000,000. House conferees disagreed to this amendment.

On amendment No. 24, page 16: Changes the number of a section.

On amendment No. 26, page 18: Survey of Buffalo Harbor and Creek, N. Y. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 27, page 18: Item amends House provision for a survey of the Hudson River channel along the water front of Weehawken and Edgewater by directing that the survey be extended in a straight line in front of the dock of Edgewater about three-quarters of a mile farther north. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 28, page 18: Survey of Oyster Creek, N. J. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 29, page 18: Survey of Shrewsbury River, N. J. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 30, page 18: Survey of Manasquan Inlet, N. J. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 32, page 19: Survey of Herring Bay and Rockhole Creek, Md. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 33, page 19: Item strikes out the word "Black" and inserts in lieu thereof the word "Back." House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 34, page 19: Item changes language in House provision for a survey of Norfolk Harbor, Va., with a view to providing an anchorage basin so as to give more latitude in the selection of the location. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 35, page 20: House provision covered by this amendment was transferred to page 22, under amendment No. 52. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 36, page 20, strikes out the word "Manassa" and inserts in lieu thereof the word "Nevassa." House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 37, page 20, strikes out the word "Gut" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cut." House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 38, page 20: House provision covered by this item was transferred to page 21, under amendment No. 40.

On amendment No. 39, page 20: Survey of section of Waccamaw River, N. C. and S. C. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 40, page 21: Item replaces provision for survey of Savannah River, Ga., stricken from the bill by amendment No. 38. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 41, page 21: Survey of section of St. Johns River, Fla. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 72, page 27: Survey of Kahului Harbor, Hawaii. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 73, page 27: Item extends the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River between Cairo and the Head of the Passes insofar as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River. House conferees recede with amendment making verbal changes.

On amendment No. 74, page 27: Item adopts new section giving the Secretary of War authority, in his discretion, to annul a contract entered into May 22, 1916, between the United States and the Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. for the removal of Coenties Reef, East River, N. Y., and relieve the said company from further obligation thereunder as between the company and the United States. House conferees recede.

S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,
RICHARD P. FREEMAN,
AMOS H. RADCLIFFE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. Now is the proper time to determine points of order before entering upon consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MADDEN. I raise the point of order against amendment 73 and state that the conferees have exceeded their jurisdiction. The point of order is in reference to amendment 73 on the ground that the conferees have exceeded their jurisdiction in agreeing to the Senate amendment with an amendment by taking it up for consideration in any way in the conference.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his reason for the point of order as to how the conferees have exceeded their jurisdiction?

Mr. MADDEN. In the first place, this is a matter under the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee. It is not within the jurisdiction of the River and Harbor Committee at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will be glad to yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. This amendment is virtually in violation of paragraph 2 of Rule XX, which provides in the last clause that no amendment of the Senate providing for an appropriation upon any bill other than a general appropriation bill shall be agreed to by the managers on the part of the House unless specific authority to agree to such amendment shall first be given by the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Chair will take cognizance of the fact, I take it, that under existing law the Mississippi River Commission has available at its disposal many millions of dollars for the improvement and protection of the banks of that river. That money to-day is available running into millions—some $6,000,000. It is a continuing appropriation. Now, what is sought by this provision? It seeks to make available the appropriation which is under the control of the Mississippi River Commission to all tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River, and by this legislative enactment it virtually carries an appropriation to make available to its tributaries appropriations now available exclusively for the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. It extends the purpose of the appropriation but it does not appropriate a new appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. It extends the purpose of the appropriation just the same as if it carried the appropriation, and in effect provides that funds for the Mississippi River improvement shall be utilized and available for tributaries of the Mississippi River. It is in effect an appropriation——

The SPEAKER. But it does not appropriate new money.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but it makes available the existing money. It is a new authorization for the money indirectly made available and it extends the scope, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, for something which is not now authorized by existing law.

If the appropriation to-day is authorized for this character of work, as soon as this becomes a law it is not necessary to go to the Appropriations Committee for an appropriation of money for this new purpose.

The SPEAKER. Exactly. It does not cost the Government any more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Following that logic, it does not cost the Government any more. Of course that involves the idea that if we appropriate $5,000,000 for a specific work in one locality and then later, by an authorization, extend that all over the country and spread its use, that there will be no further demands made upon the Government, upon the Committee on Appropriations, for more money for the original authorization.

The SPEAKER. Very likely that result might follow, but after all does that make an appropriation?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair must take cognizance of the fact that as soon as this is authorized the money now available for Mississippi River Commission work will be available for this purpose.

The SPEAKER. How does it provide an appropriation? That is the trouble.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not hear the Speaker's question.

The SPEAKER. How does it provide for funds? At first blush the Chair does not see that this makes an appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Chair will permit, during the session of Congress, for the year 1923 appropriations exceeding $6,000,000 were made and placed at the disposal of the Mississippi River Commission for uses within the territory embraced within the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission. This legislative provision seeks to extend the jurisdiction of the commission to a very much larger area. It takes in territory that was not embraced in the original act, and to the extent that it does that it makes the money available for things that it was not available for before, and hence restricts the uses to which the money can be put on the Mississippi River proper within the jurisdiction existing in the Mississippi River Commission, therefore making the existing appropriation inadequate for the purpose for which that appropriation was made and, consequently, making an appropriation out of that appropriation for something that does not exist at the time. And so, while it does not specify that an appropriation is being made, it is in fact making available the appropriation already made for purposes not in existence at the time the appropriation was made and reduces the purposes for which the money appropriated can be used within the territory now under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this the time to make the point of order? Would not the time to make a point of order have been when the original bill was up? Was not that the time to make the point of order? The conference report is now pending. The gentleman is making his point of order on the theory that the conferees have exceeded their authority.

Mr. MADDEN. I still think they have.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will read in the rule—

> Nor any amendment of the Senate providing an appropriation upon any bill other than a general appropriation bill shall be agreed to by the managers on the part of the House unless specific authority to agree to such amendment shall be first given by the House by a separate vote on every such amendment.

We are challenging the right of the conferees to agree to this amendment. Now is the time to bring it to the attention of the Chair. It is the same as if the conferees had agreed that so much money available for the use of the Mississippi River should be used for the improvement of Chesapeake Bay, or Baltimore Harbor, or the like. It is providing for something that is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, subdivision 2, paragraph 2, of Rule XX, to which the gentleman from Wisconsin referred, is in this language:

> No amendment of the Senate to a general appropriation bill * * *.

Now, this is a restriction upon the action of the House. It should be narrowly construed, strictly construed.

The SPEAKER. How is it restricted?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I say the clause to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers is a clause referring to a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is a limitation upon the action of the House, and so it should be construed strictly; and the question then is whether this bill, which is now before the House, is not only an appropriation bill, but a general appropriation bill. There can not be any claim that it is such. This is simply an authorization bill. It is not an appropriation bill of any nature whatever.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is referring to the wrong rule, and that if the gentleman will refer to the last part of clause 2 of Rule XX——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am referring to that clause 2.

The SPEAKER. The latter part of it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. I read:

> Nor any amendment of the Senate providing an appropriation upon any bill other than a general appropriation bill.

This does not provide for an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. That is just the question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No appropriation is made, and no appropriation is suggested. It simply extends the jurisdiction of the commission authorized by Congress, and if the Speaker should find that it is an appropriation, he would have to read into the provision an entirely different result from that conveyed by the language, because you can not find any language, taking it backwards and forwards, or any suggestion whatever, of an appropriation. It simply extends the jurisdiction of the commission, and whether they shall have an appropriation or not is a question to be decided by Congress for the future as to this territory which is added to their jurisdiction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman deny that as soon as this law goes into effect, this provision included, the money now available at the disposal of the Mississippi River Commission will be available for improvements for the tributaries of the Mississippi River, over which they have not jurisdiction now and can not spend money on to-day?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I say, in answer to the gentleman's question, first, that that depends entirely upon the language of the act creating the Mississippi River Commission and upon the language of the act appropriating money to be expended by that commission; and you can not assume that it is one way or the other. The gentleman seems to argue that we should assume that something is so. We can not assume that at all. It depends upon the precise language of the act, and the gentleman does not cite any language in the act that says that the money appropriated shall be used not alone on the territory over which the commission has jurisdiction at this time, but shall be used for territory over which they may be given jurisdiction.

Mr. STAFFORD. I say that unless the language is most unusual and extraordinary, the gentleman is absolutely and clearly wrong in his assumption.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Wait a moment. I have not finished.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have that question of fact settled, because that would have a very decided bearing on the matter.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentlemen who make this point of order are the ones who are raising this question, and they can not succeed except by their presenting to the Chair the necessary facts, and they have not as yet presented any facts, and I say that clearly the inference is exactly the contrary to what the gentleman from Wisconsin argues.

Now, let us take the second proposition and let us suppose, for instance, that the gentleman is right in his contention that the effect of this provision would be to make the present appropriation available for the added territory. I think he is clearly wrong; but suppose, for the sake of argument, that he is right that these funds which are in the hands of the commission subject to expenditure by them will be made available for the added territory. Let us see what the language of the rule is on that question.

Nor any amendment of the Senate providing for an appropriation.

That is the language that we have to construe.

Nor any amendment of the Senate providing for an appropriation.

This clearly does not provide for an appropriation. The appropriation to which the gentleman refers has already been made. This does not appropriate one additional cent. It does not provide for an additional liability on the part of the Government. It does not extend the liability at all. It does not make any new appropriation, and this language is directed solely against the providing of an appropriation. It is not directed against the extending of the scope or manner of use of the appropriation.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if the rule that he refers to is not a restriction upon appropriation and not upon authorization.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is a restriction upon appropriation. It is not a restriction upon the use of an appropriation. That is the distinction, and all that this provision refers to at the most is what the gentleman so blindly claims without producing any proof at all—all that it refers to is the use of an appropriation and not an appropriation at all, and the obvious purpose of the rule is to limit the liability of the Government and not to limit the Congress in its use of the funds which it has appropriated.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to express this thought: The rule to which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers is limited to the making of an appropriation and not to the distribution of an appropriation already made. Now, if his contention is correct, then if Congress should hereafter want to change the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission by law, or to extend it by law, that sort of a bill would have to come from the Committee on Appropriations instead of from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because it would be, as they contend, an appropriation. Why, the fallacy in that argument is very clear. If that argument were logical, then a bill to provide for additional clerks in the War Department would be an appropriation bill according to the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin, because the money heretofore appropriated would have to be used to pay those additional clerks. The fallacy of that sort of argument is very clear.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair would like to hear the authorization——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. For the last half hour I have been trying to get the librarian of the House to furnish this act, but I have had to resort to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to get it. I call the attention of the Speaker to Barnes's Federal Code, section 9502—

Control of floods in Mississippi River: For controlling the floods of the Mississippi River and continuing its improvement from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River the Secretary of War is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed to carry on continuously, by hired labor or otherwise, the plans of the Mississippi River Commission heretofore or hereafter adopted, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $45,000,000: Provided, That not more than $10,000,000 shall be expended therefor during any one fiscal year.

I wish to say to the Speaker that there is money available at the present time running into the millions of dollars which the Mississippi River Commission may utilize for that purpose.

Now I wish to refer to the section which states the authority of the Mississippi River Commission, section 9497:

Mississippi River Commission: * * * it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and mature such plan or plans and estimates as will correct, permanently locate, and deepen the channel and protect the banks of the Mississippi River; improve and give safety and ease to the navigation thereof; prevent destructive floods; promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the Postal Service.

The SPEAKER. The only point that the Chair cares to hear about is as to whether that law provides that the funds could be used for purposes referred to in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that with the authority being granted to the Mississippi River Commission to extend its jurisdiction over the tributaries, the same powers as are set forth in this act will be extended to those tributaries, and that the money thus available for that work must necessarily be considered as being available for the tributaries.

The SPEAKER. That is the point the Chair wishes to be clear about.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the Speaker please——

Mr. STAFFORD. The act says they may have at their control so much money for expenditure.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman read that section again?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is section 9502:

For controlling the floods of the Mississippi River and continuing its improvement from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River the Secretary of War is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed to carry on continuously, by hired labor or otherwise, the plans of the Mississippi River Commission heretofore or hereafter adopted, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $45,000,000: Provided, That not more than $10,000,000 shall be expended therefor during any one fiscal year.

The effect of this enactment is to read into the authorization of the Mississippi River Commission authority not only to expend the money on the Mississippi River proper but on all its tributaries and canals, and as soon as that law is adopted there is read right into it this authorization, the right of the Mississippi River Commission to expend the money on these byways and tributaries, and it is virtually diverting the money that is available, for an added scope, for which the Mississippi River Commission has no authority to-day to expend it.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If the position of the gentleman is correct, then every amendment in this bill is an appropriation and subject to the same objection, because in this bill we are authorizing a number of surveys by the Mississippi River Commission of other rivers that will have to be done with money already appropriated to the commission, and if the gentleman's argument is correct every one of these amendments is an appropriation, and he has picked out simply one and paid no attention to the others.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is the first time I have ever heard that the Mississippi River Commission has authority over the surveys of the Board of Engineers of the War Department.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin has not had time to read the act. If he had read it, he would not have made his point of order at all, because the act is perfectly plain, if the Speaker please, and it is absolutely clear that what he says could be done can not be done. He simply has omitted the section which deals with that subject. I refer him to subsection (c) of section 9502.

Any funds which may hereafter be appropriated under authority of this act for improving the Mississippi River between the Head of the Passes and the mouth of the Ohio River, and which may be allotted to levees, may be expended upon any part of said river between the Head of the Passes and Rock Island, Ill.

Now, that is all they have jurisdiction over to-day, and to that their expenditure of money is expressly limited by the act which creates the commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this extends it to these other things.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no; it does not extend it to these other things.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman let the Chair see that act?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. They have this money which they can expend.

Mr. DEMPSEY. They will have to come to the Committee on Appropriations to get any additional money.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to the Chair? May I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it has been held that the proper criterion in determining this question is whether or not without the amendment the money could be expended for the purposes provided for in the amendment. Clearly it could not. Without this amendment this money could not be expended on the tributaries. It takes this amendment to constitute the authorization. That being the case, it is clearly an appropriation and comes within the rule.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, if I may make a suggestion along the line of the first question asked by the Speaker, the flood control act provides for appropriations for controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi River. This particular amendment does not go outside of the purposes of that act. If you will read it you will find that it extends the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River to those tributaries and outlets in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River. So, in answer to the first question asked by the Speaker, it does not divert the appropriations that may be made in the future under the flood control act from their original purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman admit that this language amends the act and extends the jurisdiction and scope of the Mississippi River Commission?

Mr. WILSON. It extends the scope of the commission to the tributaries of the Mississippi River in so far as they are affected by its flood waters, but it does not change the purposes or the scope of the purposes for which the appropriations are authorized under the flood control act.

Mr. MADDEN. If this amends the act and gives the commission broader jurisdiction, of course, it extends that jurisdiction to the point of expending the money which is now available under the authority which they have.

Mr. WILSON. It does not amend the flood control act.

Mr. MADDEN. It certainly does.

Mr. WILSON. The jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission was given in the act creating the commission.

Mr. MADDEN. This amends the flood control act without any question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. There is considerable doubt in the mind of the Chair, in the absence of exact information, as to just what the effect of this amendment would be, whether it would really extend to some new purposes the use of the funds already appropriated or not; but even if it would, it seems to the Chair that that does not bring it within the prohibition of the rule that no amendment of the Senate providing for an appropriation upon any bill other than a general appropriation bill shall be agreed to by the House managers without express authority. It does not seem to the Chair that this is an appropriation. If it does allow the use of part of the money already appropriated for a different purpose, yet it does not follow that thereby any extra appropriation is required or any extra expenditure on the part of the Government. If the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can not report such an authorization, it is difficult for the Chair to see how it could be made. The Appropriation Committee would not have the authority to do it. It seems to the Chair that it is strictly within the jurisdiction of this committee, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-three Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Senate bill added several amendments which I will discuss in detail. The first amendment was that of Westchester Creek, and what was proposed to be done was to make it a 12-foot creek. In explanation of that let me say that the canals of the country—and this is, in fact, a canal—are standardized at 12 feet. The Erie Canal and the Intercoastal Canal and all canals to be useful are standardized to draw 12 feet. The reason that it was not in the House bill was the fact that the report did not reach us until after it passed the House.

Mr. SNELL. Is the gentleman speaking of the Cape Cod Canal?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I am speaking of the Westchester Creek, just outside of New York. It is a part of the New York City waterways. I am taking up the Senate amendments in their order as they are given in the report.

The next amendment is the one with reference to Absecon Inlet. You all know about Absecon Inlet. I do not suppose there is a Member here who has not been at Atlantic City, the greatest pleasure resort on the Atlantic coast. I would not dare say in the country, because gentlemen from the Pacific coast might differ with me. The people of Atlantic City have deepened the inlet to 16 feet with a width of 100 feet, but they want to standardize it so that it can be used by seagoing vessels. In view of the fact that Atlantic City itself, large as it is and growing as rapidly as it is, in view of the fact that it has done so much itself for the improvement of the waterway, the House conferees readily acquiesced in the proposal that the improvement should be made. The amount asked for is very small in comparison to the size of the place and its importance—$240,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Glancing over the report on this project, dated August 15 of this year—and I had hardly time to go over it carefully—I notice that there was an alternative proposal to erect a dike there at an estimated cost of $900,000; but the Board of Engineers of the Army recommend merely dredging, at an annual maintenance charge of $50,000. Can the gentleman inform the committee why it was sought to have the dike instead of the continual drainage proposition to keep the inlet free of sand?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I suppose these two alternatives confronted the engineers. One was a large capital expenditure, which they wanted to avoid in these times of economy, and the second a small initial expenditure with the hope that their fears as to the maintenance charge would prove not to be well grounded; that it might be smaller and that they might, after the work was done, discover some way of lessening the maintenance charge.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report only provides for a channel 20 feet in depth; that would not provide for ocean-going steamers of the average size.

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; but it will take craft of 5,000 tons burden, and it will take all the coastwise traffic, and really this is coastwise traffic and not through traffic which will go to Atlantic City. There will be another kind of traffic, and that is a large amount of excursion-passenger traffic.

The next item is the acquisition of the Lake Drummond Canal in Virginia and North Carolina. That is the item known as the Dismal Swamp Canal. I am not going to discuss that at this point for this reason: The House conferees have disagreed, or the majority of them have—the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] have agreed to it.

Mr. SNELL. That is not recommended in the conference report.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is not recommended, but will come up separately as a matter of disagreement. So I will not discuss it until we come to the matters in disagreement.

The next item is the channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, Tex. This is really one of the great projects of the country. It will serve one of the richest sections in one of the most rapidly developing parts of the whole United States. It will be a port for all of the Southwest and Texas. They have no port to-day because Port Aransas was destroyed in a storm. Then not alone is this a port that does a very large and rapidly increasing business, but it is a port also where those who are interested in it—the people of the locality—have shown a most remarkable degree of public spirit. The total cost is to be $5,000,000, and the local authorities are going to contribute all but $1,400,000 of that cost. As a matter of fact, the Pacific coast has shown continued instances of public spirit, but this is the largest contribution by a locality that I have known. The project is in every way worthy, and I should be glad, and I am sure all will feel that way, to have an opportunity to afford them in that very rapidly growing and rich country, which has no port for great vessels, to have a harbor commensurate with their needs.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman state what the project consists of?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will, in just a moment. I will pass to another matter and come back to this. The next item is the Noyo River, Calif. This is a very small matter. That is a fishing place where the catch of fish has gone from a very few tons to several thousand tons in quite a short period. The entrance bar is very shallow, so that it is dangerous to the fishermen, particularly in times of storm. In view of the very great increase of commerce, and in view of the danger to life and property, this matter was regarded by us as highly desirable.

Mr. KINDRED. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Certainly.

Mr. KINDRED. The appropriation there is very small.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is $16,000. Now, to go back for a moment to Aransas Pass. Here is what the Chief of Engineers says in reference to Aransas Pass and Corpus Christi:

> After due consideration of the above-mentioned report, I concur in the views of the district engineer and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore recommend that Corpus Christi be selected as a site for a safe and adequate harbor on the southwest coast of Texas, and that it be improved under the plan above described at an estimated cost of $5,051,900 for new works and $20,000 annually for maintenance, the United States to provide the channel for deep water at Aransas Pass to the shore line at Corpus Christi at a cost of $1,394,800 for new work and $195,000 a year for maintenance the first two years and $150,000 per year thereafter, work on this improvement not to be commenced until the Secretary of War is assured that local interests are in position to carry out their part of the work substantially in accordance with the plans described by the district engineer, the details of which would be subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers.

Then it goes on in some detail as to width and depth of the channel, and so forth.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. BLACK. With reference to this proposed channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi, are the people of that vicinity putting up any of the cost of building the channel?

Mr. DEMPSEY. They contribute out of a total cost of $5,000,000 all but $1,400,000.

Mr. BLACK. What I wanted to get at was the conference report, as I understand it, contains a proposition in reference to the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is another matter.

Mr. BLACK. I know, but I am getting at this inquiry: Why should not the people of those communities contribute toward the purchase of this canal in a like manner as the people of this vicinity are contributing to the digging of this new canal?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would suggest the gentleman go to Massachusetts with his eloquence and his force and his fire and inspire those Massachusetts people with the sentiment which he is urging.

Mr. BLACK. That is a responsibility for the committee, it seems to me, rather than the responsibility of Members of the House.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman pleases, we have not required the people of Corpus Christi to make this contribution.

Mr. BLACK. I have no quarrel with that policy, but I think it should be extended.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is quite a different proposition between this one and the Cape Cod Canal. The Cape Cod Canal is not more to the advantage of Massachusetts than to Maine, New York, Virginia, and other States.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I can not yield further, as we are going to take up these items separately, and we will give the gentleman reasonable time for discussion.

Now, the next matter is the Umpqua River, Bar, and entrance, Oreg. The Umpqua River is a river that flows down through a territory that has a very large amount of timber. Part of that timber belongs to the United States. It is the very best timber in the world, but it can not be shipped now unless we give them this harbor. Unfortunately, they are separated from neighboring harbors by a steep chain of mountains running right down to the shore, so although a harbor may be only a few miles distant in fact it is the same as if it were a thousand miles away.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I appreciate the situation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. So there is necessity for giving harbors in Oregon closer than ordinarily would be warranted. This will give the country at large a supply of timber which they need and must have, because of the fact that it can be no longer dependent upon the South. The cutting of timber in the South reached its height about four years ago, and since then it has been steadily declining. The people of the South are growing enormously in population, and will have greater requirements for timber in the future, and if the rest of the country is to have lumber it must come from the West, and the way to transport it is by channels such as we are providing in this project.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In one moment. The Umpqua River has a tonnage of 240,000 tons, and the amount proposed to be appropriated is $76,500. While we spend that amount on the harbor, the increase in the value of its timber adjacent to this harbor will pay the United States ten times over the amount which they are going to spend on this improvement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this harbor an ocean entrance?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What distance is it from the Columbia River?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is a long distance from the Columbia River.

Mr. STAFFORD. Very few harbors on the Pacific coast, especially in Oregon, have entrance directly on the ocean.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This has a direct entrance.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was wondering whether there are more than one or two ports in Oregon that have an ocean entrance.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think Coos Bay has, but it is separated by mountain chains from this harbor.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question but that this harbor can be maintained?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; unquestionably. This is not a sandy harbor. This, as I understand, is a rock harbor, and I think a part of this expense, if I recollect aright, is for the construction of a jetty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me say that this Umpqua item is entirely to assist in the construction of a north jetty.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. It is the very thing to which the gentleman refers.

The next thing is the Siuslaw River item, Oregon. From this amendment the Senate receded, so I will not discuss it.

The next item is the Lake Washington Ship Canal, in Washington. That is a place with an enormous tonnage, and the project is for the deepening and widening of the stream to afford adequate facilities for the transportation, which is very large, and the stream is in continuous and profitable use. That is one of the great streams in the country, and there can not be any question but that these improvements are needed and will add to the facilities of transportation.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is Lake Washington?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; this is Lake Washington.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall, it provides for the building of some mooring space. Has the Government established the policy of building mooring space for vessels in a port like Lake Washington?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In a big harbor it seems to me it is necessary to make that commerce safe. For instance, take the case of the gentleman's own city of Milwaukee. We are at present spending under this bill a large sum, running into the millions, for the building of an outer breakwater. The purpose of it is to afford mooring to ships that go in there to load and unload.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is not personally acquainted with the project at Milwaukee. The purpose is to provide an outer harbor in the lake, not to provide mooring space for vessels.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, every foot of a harbor is mooring space. You can not create a harbor, and make it a safe and good harbor, without providing mooring space. The gentleman from Wisconsin is discussing theories and fanciful things, and not facts.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am discussing facts. Of course, the gentleman desires to get away from the real question by yielding to another.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is simply iteration and reiteration. You do not add anything by saying the same thing over a number of times.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Puget Sound is salt water. Lake Washington is fresh water, is it not? It will be a great saving by utilizing and opening up the harbor of Lake Washington by permitting the hulls of vessels to be cleaned of barnacles.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. The gentleman is correct in his statement of the facts.

Now, for Wrangell Harbor the appropriation is very small. It is a place with a very large fishing industry. It is an important point. It is dangerous as it is, and with the improvement that is made here the lives and property of the people who use it are made safe.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. What number is that?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is next to the end.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is throwing that much money away. That is the way it seems to me.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman has not seen it. If he will take an airplane and go up and come back, I am sure he will agree with me.

The next is the Tennessee River and its tributaries. The proposal of the Senate regarding the Tennessee and its tributaries was that we should make an extended survey, very broad in its terms; a survey broader than what we would ordinarily adopt; a survey of economic, commercial, and industrial conditions, as related to commercial and water-power propositions.

We did not think we should make a survey of this river, important as it is, different from the other rivers of the country. Then the second proposition was to expend $500,000, and the division engineer, differing from the district engineer, said that the scope should be limited primarily to navigation and incidentally power, and that it would cost a very much less sum. So that the conferees agreed to limit the scope of the survey and to limit also the amount to $200,000; to limit the scope to navigation and incidentally power, and to limit the amount to $200,000; so that there was a saving there of $300,000, or three-fifths of the entire amount proposed. At the same time I am satisfied—we all became satisfied of it from the talks with the engineers—of the importance of a survey of this great river, with its wonderful tributaries, embracing wonderful possibilities, not alone as to navigation but as to power development; which means, as I am able to testify from personal observation, more to a community than any other asset that it can possess, be it gold, or coal, or anything else. There is nothing which makes a region so rich and makes it develop so fast and so rapidly as water power. This will give you all the facts as to water power in that very wonderful region.

The last item is the acquisition of the Cape Cod Canal. There was a disagreement, and that will be treated separately, and so I shall not discuss it now.

In conclusion, I want to say to the House that every one of these amendments which were accepted by us are, as I honestly believe after a careful and painstaking investigation, amendments which tend to improve harbors and rivers where there is large commerce, where the improvement is fully justified, and where the amounts authorized will make splendid returns upon the investments.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to call your attention to a matter in the bill that is of considerable importance to some of us Members on the upper Mississippi River.

Senate amendment 73 extends the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River between Cairo and the Head of the Passes, in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River. Concerning this amendment I understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP] will offer a motion to recommit, which I understand will not be opposed by the committee, to rectify a matter which was overlooked by the conferees. Originally the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission extended from the mouth of the Ohio to the Passes of the Mississippi River. Afterwards by an amendatory act the moneys made subject to use by the Mississippi River Commission were permitted to be expended up to Rock Island, Ill., which was the northern limit of the Mississippi River flood control, and since that time all moneys which have been used for that purpose have been used from Rock Island south.

Senate amendment No. 73 as originally offered, if you will notice, stated this:

The jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission is hereby extended from Cairo, Ill.—

Which is across from the mouth of the Ohio River north—to the Head of the Passes and to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River.

Unfortunately, when the conferees were considering the matter, thinking that the latter part of this language referred only to the tributary streams south of Cairo and between there and the Gulf, they fixed the conference report so that it reads as you will find it on page 3:

SEC. 14. That the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission is hereby extended, for the purposes of levee protection and bank protection, to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River between Cairo, Ill., and the Head of the Passes, in so far as these tributaries and outlets are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River.

Thus shutting out inadvertently all tributary streams north of Cairo, among which are, as you know, the Missouri River, the Illinois River, and the Iowa River, all rivers of considerable size, which flow into the Mississippi River, and especially along the Illinois River, where the flood waters of the Mississippi cause considerable damage to many extensive drainage districts along that stream. Now, it was not intended by the River and Harbor Committee to do that. It was not intended by the conferees to do it, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KOPP] will offer a motion to recommit, to substitute in this conference agreement the words "Rock Island" for the word "Cairo," which will simply extend this to the place where it is now extended by law, as the northern terminus of the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission. I sincerely hope that it may have the approval of the House and that this error may be corrected at this time. It will cause no delay in the final enactment of the bill. I understand that the conferees will have no trouble about it, because since I have been in the room here my colleague the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] has been in conference with some of the Senate conferees, and they tell him that this was an inadvertence and that it was not done with any intention of shutting out that part of the river.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the chairman of the committee yield for an inquiry or two?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. The conference report carries some legislative provisions which I think the chairman of the committee inadvertently passed over. I wish to inquire with reference to the provisions in amendment 22, section 11, page 15, which provides—

That owners, agents, masters, and clerks of vessels and other craft plying upon the navigable waters of the United States, and all individuals and corporations engaged in transporting their own goods upon the navigable waters of the United States, shall furnish such statements relative to vessels, passengers, freight, and tonnage as may be required by the Secretary of War: Provided, That this shall not apply to the rafting of logs except upon a direct request upon the owner to furnish specific information.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am very familiar with that amendment. All surveys containing recommendations for improvements are partly based upon statistics as to the tonnage and other facts embraced in the provisions to which the gentleman refers. The gentleman will recollect that we had some slight discussion and debate in this House upon the question whether certain surveys should be authorized or not. The question of the cost of those surveys was the vital thing involved in that debate. The engineers tell us that with this provision they will eliminate in large measure the cost of these surveys, and in addition to that they will be able to get more reliable, more certain, more accurate data than they have been able to obtain without the direction and assistance of such a provision as this; and taking, for instance, the question of maintenance, the question of improvement, the question of changes, or the initiation of projects, and every change of river and harbor legislation, concerning all these things the statistics covered by this amendment are absolutely vital, and it seemed to us that it should be within the power of the Government to obtain this information in a reliable, safe, accurate way without expense.

Mr. STAFFORD. The last amendment to which the conferees agreed, amendment 74, provides for the annulling of a contract. Will the chairman of the committee explain the scope of the contract proposed to be annulled?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; that contract was one between the Great Lakes Dredging Co., the city of New York, and the United States. It provided for the dredging to a depth of 40 feet over Coenties Reef. The Government was to pay for the cost of the dredging to a depth of 35 feet and the city of New York was to pay for the 5 feet additional. The work was to be done to a depth of 40 feet because it was thought it might be needed, and the city of New York paid for the last 5 feet because they wanted to protect a tunnel which was to be excavated under this reef. The contractors took this contract in 1916, when prices were very low, and they made a considerable if not a large loss in the work.

Now, here is what has been accomplished. So far as the Government is concerned, as I understand it, the work is not only completed but more than completed. A depth of 35 feet has been obtained for the entire area and 40 feet has been obtained for a part of the area, and for that part for which the depth of 40 feet has not been obtained the blasting has all been done, but the rock, or part of it, has not been removed. So far as the Government is concerned, then, the matter is at an end. It has no interest whatever in it now. So far as the city of New York is concerned, my understanding is that the city of New York is not interested and does not care to have this work done any further. The chairman of the Senate conferees and myself, as chairman of the House conferees, agreed that a joint telegram should be sent to the city of New York asking if they had any objection to the cancellation of this contract, and up to the time that the conferees reported no answer had been received. There has been, as I understand it, some communication with them, but no objection, so far as I know, had been made to it at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the amount of the penalty involved from which we relieve the contractors by annulling the contract?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the contractor would earn something like $20,000 from the city of New York for performing the remainder of the work, but it would cost him a good deal more than $20,000. Now, the Government engineers say affirmatively and positively that not only is it a fair and proper thing that this contract should be canceled, but they go further and affirmatively urge and recommend that it be done, and the other party, the city of New York, has said nothing with reference to it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. What is the change in the situation? Why do they not need the 40 feet now the same as they did originally?

Mr. DEMPSEY. My understanding is that it was something connected with the building of this tunnel which made them anticipate that they would need 40 feet, but that they have since found that they do not need it.

Mr. SNELL. And they never will need 40 feet there?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is my understanding. I am not positive about it, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I think we ought to have some definite understanding about this. If they are ever coming back to ask for 40 feet, we had better have it now rather than let them come back at some future time.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Wait a moment. I will yield to the gentleman from New York in a moment. I will try to get the additional data before we take the final vote.

Mr. SNELL. This is a very important matter, and I remember that when it was up before the House we were told that they actually needed 40 feet. I am very much surprised to find now that they do not need it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We are talking about 40 feet for a part of New York Harbor. We are not talking about 40 feet generally.

Mr. SNELL. You are talking about 40 feet at the place where this contract was let.

Mr. DEMPSEY. We are talking about Coenties Reef, which is a very small part of the harbor.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that. I think the information should be before the House why somebody has changed his mind. It is a very important matter.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Has anybody changed his mind?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will ascertain the facts before we take the final vote here.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Who took the initiative in asking that this contract be annulled?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have no doubt that the contractors took the initiative, but all that we had to do, as far as the House conferees were concerned, was this: The Senate committee sent for the War Department engineers, and I was present with Senator JONES at the time they reported, and they came up and recommended positively that this be done, and said it was fair and just. If there had not been a third party, the city of New York, the War Department would have had authority under the general act permitting the cancellation of such contracts, and would have canceled it, because it is unjust and unfair to insist upon the performance of this contract, and it would be in the spirit of this general legislation to allow the cancellation; but owing to the fact that the city of New York is a party it did not come within the scope of the general legislation, and so they were unable to cancel it themselves.

Mr. SNELL. Have you had anything direct from the city of New York?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have not. I stated that expressly.

Mr. KINDRED. May I interrupt the gentleman to say that while the city of New York and the United States Government were jointly parties to this contract, the city of New York has now no interest whatever in this proposal which comes from the Senate. The city of New York has had entirely completed the part of the contract in which it was interested, and I think I have permission to quote Mr. Murray Hulbert, a former Member of this House, who is now the president of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, as being of the opinion that the city of New York certainly has no interest in this matter.

Mr. SNELL. Why did they agree to pay the additional amount if they had no interest in it?

Mr. KINDRED. The city of New York, so far as its requirements were concerned, has met these requirements and is satisfied.

Mr. SNELL. Why did they want it?

Mr. KINDRED. There was some change in the specification and requirements as to the depth as originally provided in the contract. The city found afterwards, after some development, that they did not need the greater depth.

Mr. BOND. Is it not true that they have the 40-foot depth for the most of it?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that we ought to have direct information before we kill this contract.

Mr. KINDRED. May I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the engineers made a report on this question. I am not taking the side of the engineers or espousing their report or what they concluded, but I will refer the gentleman to that report.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that on a matter of this importance we ought to have more direct information.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that when I learned of the fact that this amendment was to be introduced I suggested to the Senate Committee on Commerce that they notify the city of New York and give them an opportunity to appear and be heard. It was not the fault of the House conferees.

Mr. SNELL. How long ago was that?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That was weeks ago. I wrote them a letter; there is no question about that. I wrote to one of the Senators from New York, a member of this committee, and told him that inasmuch as the city of New York was involved this procedure should be followed.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman think that we ought to have more direct communication with the people that signed the contract?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I not only think so but I have made every effort to do it. I joined in a telegram to the city of New York notifying them that the amendment would stay in unless they objected, and if they did object it would go out.

Mr. SNELL. If the city of New York is a party to the contract, how can it be canceled?

Mr. BOND. The contract provides that the Secretary of War may cancel it in his discretion.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Senator JONES and I sent a communication to the city of New York saying that if the city of New York appears and prefers not to have it canceled it would not be canceled. There is no intention as far as the chairman of the House conferees or the House committee is concerned not to give New York full opportunity to be heard. I did everything that it was possible to do, and it really was not for me to do anything because this amendment was put on in the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What harm would there have been in deferring the matter?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The only harm would be that it would not be in the bill.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Not only the municipal authorities demanded this but commercial and maritime organizations. Have they been heard on this subject?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The engineers say that so far as this particular place is concerned—and it is a very small area—there is no commercial demand for it. The Government did not undertake to dredge to this depth at all, it was the city of New York, at their expense, and all the Government provided for and all the Government ever deemed necessary has been finished and completed, and not only that but a part of the other work has been completed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question, and if he has not the information he can say so. I am curious to know whether the conference committee or the gentleman's committee made any inquiry as to the expense that will be entailed on the General Government in extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission from Cairo to the Head of Passes to its tributaries in so far as they are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It would seem as though that would be impossible to estimate. We did inquire as to a much more important question. We found that all this great work on the Mississippi River is rendered in a large degree valueless, and all of the expenditures in a considerable degree go for naught, because the commission has no control over the tributaries.

The water comes down with a great rush and destroys in a great part not alone the valuable territory adjacent to the stream, but injures the great works which the Government has built there. All that can be remedied, as was shown, by a comparatively small expense if the tributaries are taken in as well as the Mississippi itself. In other words, it is much easier to stop a leak at the place where it starts than to wait until it joins with other leaks and gets added volume and added descent and then try to stop the full force of the combined flood.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the localities on the tributaries as well as on the Mississippi River contribute to the expense of the construction and upkeep of dikes. Is it the purpose of the National Government to take over that work?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The purpose is to protect exactly what was originally intended, to protect the Mississippi River and to protect it the way I described by starting at the right point where the expenditure will be small instead of waiting and trying to stop it after it gains a large volume and great velocity. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I understand we are going to vote on the full report now?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; we have not considered the separate amendments, but we will have a separate vote on those amendments.

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand, it is the purpose to have a discussion on the three amendments in disagreement?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; that is the purpose.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, I make the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CHINDBLOM). The gentleman from Iowa presents a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KOPP moves to recommit the bill H. R. 10766 to the conferees with instructions to agree to Senate amendment No. 73 with an amendment, so that when amended the section will read:

"SEC. 14. That the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission is hereby extended, for the purposes of levee protection and bank protection, to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River between Rock Island, Ill., and the Head of Passes, in so far as these tributaries and outlets are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KOPP. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 33.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers, if the Speaker pleases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-five gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a recount on the question of the demand for tellers. I withdraw the point of no quorum and ask for a recount on my demand for tellers.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, that is too late.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Tellers have already been refused.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I appeal from the count of the Chair——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw the point of order of no quorum?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether there will be an automatic call and vote on the proposition on the demand for tellers or whether it will be on the original proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it will be an automatic vote on the motion to recommit.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then it is not necessary to move a call of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Regular order.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I withdraw my demand——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 89, nays 156, answered "present" 1, not voting 181, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion to adopt the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DEMPSEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3: Page 3, after line 4, insert: "Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase, as a part of said waterway, the existing Lake Drummond Canal, together with all property rights and franchises appertaining thereto, at a price of not to exceed $500,000, in accordance with the report submitted in House Committee Document No. 5, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, the House conferees move to further insist on their disagreement to this Senate amendment. I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] wants some time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How much time can the gentleman give us on this amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. There will be an hour's time, divided equally between those in favor of the project and those opposed to it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Could we not have that time extended later a little, say an hour and a half?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We want to get it over to the Senate or else we will defeat the whole bill. We have two hours' debate——

Mr. MANSFIELD. But only one other amendment will take any time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Cape Cod proposition will take some time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question? As I understand, a similar limitation will apply to the Cape Cod amendment. The gentleman proposes to confine the debate to one hour on each amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, some years ago the House adopted the intercoastal scheme of canalization from Norfolk down to Beaufort Harbor. The engineers at that time considered four different proposals. One was the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal, which is this route here on the map [indicating], which they subsequently adopted.

They also considered the Dismal Swamp Canal, which is the proposal now before the House for consideration. They also considered two other proposed routes by way of the Cooper River.

The testimony is rather voluminous as to the reasons why they selected the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal. It is sufficient to say that they were good reasons. One of the strong reasons is that it is the shorter route. It is a waterway upon which the Government has expended millions of dollars.

At the time the Government selected the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal for the through route the Dismal Swamp Canal, otherwise known as the Lake Drummond Canal, was then in existence. It extended virtually from here at Elizabeth City [indicating] and to the spot marked Fort Smith, Norfolk, a distance of about 22 miles.

At that time both canals were toll canals. It is now claimed that because the Government made the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal a free canal, therefore the Government should take over this Dismal Swamp Canal.

There are many other questions involved and many reasons why we should not adopt the policy of taking over a waterway—which I consider is not a waterway but merely a drainage canal—simply because the Government has improved and taken over a parallel canal. In confirmation of the position that this is largely a drainage canal I wish to read to the House the findings of the Board of Engineers when these original projects were under consideration. At that time the owners of the Dismal Swamp Canal asked a very large sum of money—a million and odd dollars—if the Government would adopt that route for the intercoastal waterway. But the Board of Engineers made this adverse report, deciding in favor of the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal as the proposed route for the intercoastal system. I read from the report on page 101 respecting the advantages and disadvantages of the several routes. This is what the board says in regard to the Dismal Swamp Canal:

The Dismal Swamp Canal route will be beyond question the most costly to construct, more costly than either of the Cooper Creek routes, even if all the property of the canal company were ceded to the United States free of charge. The existing canal is not located along the shortest line between its termini, nor on the lowest profile. The material already excavated has been deposited on the immediate banks and about one-half of it must be moved again on whichever side the enlargement be made. The cost of moving this material is included in the estimate. Its present cross section is small compared with that which would be necessary in the enlarged canal. Extensive areas along this canal have been reclaimed, and the cost of the right of way may be somewhat greater than the estimate. Former boards, for reasons stated at length in their reports, have rejected this route and apparently have considered it the least practicable of the four.

Many of the residents and landowners on and near the line of the Dismal Swamp Canal have called attention to the fact that in addition to providing a waterway convenient of access to them this canal acts as a drain, keeping down the level of the ground water on large tracts of reclaimed land in the Dismal Swamp; they fear that if the Government adopts some other route the Dismal Swamp Canal will be abandoned and they will suffer great damage.

From facts which the board has been able to gather it is thought no such damage can occur. The elevation of the land all along the Dismal Swamp Canal is quite uniform and there are few variations in its general character. Near the northern end of the canal large tracts of land are now being drained by ditches whose bottoms are at about sea level. Such ditches have been most efficacious and have greatly improved the lands through which they have been cut. In fact, it has been stated to the board that if the locks of the Dismal Swamp Canal were removed and if in its then condition it served no other purpose than a drainage ditch the increased value of the lands which could be drained into it would more than compensate for the loss of the canal as a waterway.

I call attention to this, that it is nothing more than a drainage ditch, and not a canal. Further, from page 110 I read:

As shown above the cost of a 12-foot canal via the Dismal Swamp Canal route is $2,868,220 greater than via the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route. At 3 per cent this sum represents an annual charge of $86,046.60. It becomes a question whether the local benefit conferred by carrying the waterway directly past Elizabeth City is worth this cost.

Elizabeth City is connected by rail with points north and south. Furthermore, a canal via the Albemarle and Chesapeake route does not cut it off entirely from water communication; it simply makes the water route from Elizabeth City to northern points somewhat longer and less direct. The actual distance from Elizabeth City to Norfolk via the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route is about 36 miles longer than by the Dismal Swamp Canal route, but owing to the greater speed that can be maintained on the former route the appreciable difference in distance by the two routes may be taken safely at about 30 miles.

That was the finding of the original Board of Engineers when they were determining which route they would select for the intercoastal stream, showing that it is a drainage proposition to drain these lowlands through the Dismal Swamp and not a traffic transportation proposition.

At the public hearing in Norfolk on the 6th of September, 1910, it was claimed that the selection of any route which did not pass directly by Elizabeth City would deprive that community of the benefit derived from the existing competition between the waterway and the railroad. The facts stated above seem to have been overlooked. A free waterway via the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route should certainly be a more active and efficient competitor with the railroad than the existing toll-charging Dismal Swamp Canal route.

In other words, a free waterway via the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route will improve conditions now existing at Elizabeth City, and this town will be much better off than at present, so far as its own water-borne commerce is concerned, meaning thereby commerce originating at or destined for this community. This can hardly be questioned.

The simple fact seems to be that if the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route be adopted, Elizabeth City will not be a port of call for through commerce, and to confer such an additional benefit upon this city would cost the United States, even if the cheapest route passing Elizabeth City were adopted, something over $1,059,000 more than it will cost to construct the waterway via the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route, and, furthermore, the opening of the free waterway would be delayed at least three years.

So far as the other small communities lying along the Dismal Swamp Canal are concerned, the abandonment of this canal as a waterway would no doubt impose a hardship upon them, but the amount of commerce involved is quite small, too small to warrant the serious consideration of the purchase and improvement of this route.

It is true that the Chief of Engineers has recently recommended the purchase of this canal for $500,000. It is stated that it has a possibility of traffic from 100,000 tons to 300,000 tons a year. The statement I wish to point out to you, which is borne out by the statement of the original board, is that most of the traffic generates at Elizabeth City. This principal city is on the Pasquotank River, and by the establishment of the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal the commerce originating there would go down the river and up to Baltimore. It is a proposition that I can not see how we should take over, when it has no practical value as a navigation proposition.

The mere argument that because the Government saw the necessity of having an entire intercoastal scheme and adopted another canal route and deprived the original canal of some transportation is no reason, in my opinion, why the Government should take it over and compensate the original owners; no more than if the Government should launch into the policy of constructing railroads or any other kind of highways and build a straight, modern, parallel line, which would impair the traffic earnings of established lines. That is a loss that properly belongs to capital, and ought not to be borne by the Government simply because it established a competing line. So, gentlemen, this Dismal Swamp Canal is nothing more than a drainage ditch. The value of these lands tributary to it will remain the same, because the land will be drained by this Dismal Swamp Canal. To take over something that has very little transportation value is a proposition that would land us in a scheme of expenditure in which the Government would never stop if we were going to take over any kind of rival projects just because the National Government adopts a different project that impairs its value.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is not informed about this proposition. I beg your attention for just a few moments while I shall speak from official records and make no statement of my own independently of them, but will be able to point to the official records to sustain every proposition I make. I am not speaking here for the bondholders of this canal, but for 28,000 people who live along the line of this canal and who have developed this country.

When the scheme to lay out the inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort was before the Board of Engineers on Rivers and Harbors some 10 or 12 years ago, they adopted the canal represented on this map, running eastwardly out of Elizabeth River, which flows south from Norfolk, and along the red line which I indicate by this pointer, running east of the mainland down the center of shallow and shoaly sounds out across the mouth of Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds to Beaufort Inlet, where the ships go out to the ocean. At that time the Dismal Swamp Canal had been there for 130 years, having been put there at the instance of General Washington for the purpose of carrying white cedar in the form of staves and shingles out of the great swamp through which it flows, and to offer means of transportation for the development of a part of his favorite country. At that time every acre of this territory was a howling wilderness, and would have continued to be so until to-day had it not been for the construction of this canal. It was constructed as a small but sufficient waterway for transportation, and in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin that it is only a drainage ditch, I assert the fact well established by the history of North Carolina and Virginia that it has been used for transportation continuously for 135 years.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It has a standard depth of 12 feet.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Its depth to-day is 12 feet; its width at the top is 90 feet and at the bottom 50 feet; and it is in shipshape condition. Before the Government adopted this other route of the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal, it was carrying more than 75 per cent of the through traffic, and it will do it again if it can be put upon all fours in opportunity with the other canal.

The Chesapeake & Albemarle Canal, which I am now following with my pointer, was adopted by the Board of Engineers because it could be purchased for a smaller amount of money, and when it was opened to transportation it naturally took all of the freight originating south of Pasquotank River, to which I am pointing, because it was toll free, leaving to the Dismal Swamp Canal only such freight as originated along its banks.

By reason of this competition, created by the Government of the United States, the Dismal Swamp Canal has fallen financially and must discontinue operations, and we ask that the Government take it over and operate it. Your Board of Engineers sat at Norfolk a whole day in May, 1921, and they went through this canal, and they left its banks and rode out through the country, and after waiting nearly a year they made this report which I hold in my hand, in which they say to you that to allow this Dismal Swamp Canal to fall and go out of service would be to work an injury upon the people beyond estimation and which they could not even approximate.

But although they could not approximate this loss, I can now approximate it by calculations based on their report. There are 135,000 acres of land lying along this canal that have no other means for transportation than the Dismal Swamp Canal, 30,000 of which are in active cultivation. If it was a drainage proposition only, as stated by Mr. STAFFORD, we would be better off without the canal with the locks than with them, because without the locks the water would fall. It has absolutely no semblance of a drainage proposition. It is a transporation proposition exclusively, and your Board of Engineers say that it was hauling 300,000 tons of freight annually. I use their language; that is what they said in their last report. There are 135,000 acres of land along this canal between where my pointer now is and the other end, the canal being 22 miles long. These 135,000 acres are worth $125 an acre. Of that 135,000 acres, there are 30,000 in active cultivation, and I hold up and show to you now the official document giving the names of the men who own the land, with their several holdings.

Here is their acreage, taken from the tax list [holding up the paper referred to]. One hundred and two farmers have in growing corn and other grain and foodstuffs to-day, 30,000 acres along the banks of this canal. That 30,000 acres is worth $125 an acre, and you know it, because it is not denied that it is swamp land reclaimed from the Dismal Swamp; land which is producing, as your records show, from 70 to 80 bushels of corn to the acre, and it has recently been discovered to be as fine celery land as there is in the world. It is worth $125 an acre, beyond question. There is absolutely no way for its owners to ship anything by the other canal, and I state to you as a solemn fact that this Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal would be as accessible to these people if it were on the moon as it is where it is now, for the reason that it lies in the middle of a shallow sound and its coast line is represented by dense "pocosin," or swamp. They have no railroad and no improved county roads.

Now, gentlemen, please remember this point. They are not asking you to give them a canal. They had one before the Government took it from them. They are asking you not to destroy the one they already have and the homes and the land that they have built up and developed, because this canal was given to them by the father of their country. To let this canal fall leaves them without transportation and impairs their valuations, as is stated in the hearings and not denied, not less than 50 per cent.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes; I will be glad to.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want the gentleman to point out the Government canal on this map.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. It is along this line indicated by my pointer [pointing on the map]. To defeat this proposition imposes a loss on these 28,000 people of $1,875,000 by depreciated values arrived at in this way: There are 30,000 acres of cleared farm land at $125 an acre, which amounts to $3,750,000; and at 50 per cent depreciation, the loss is $1,875,000. So, if your officers have told you the truth and if you believe these findings, you strike down some of the best farm land that the sun shines on, perhaps $1,875,000 in value, and you can see that it is reasonable. It is land which with every recurring season is contributing to the feeding of the teeming millions of the world. Is it extravagant? You know whether it is or not.

Now, one other statement. When they thought that this canal was as permanent as the pyramids, they established three drainage districts here. Here are the outlines of one of them [pointing]. That drainage district has 10,000 acres of cleared land in it. Its bonds have been bought and paid for to the extent of $233,000. I ask you how much you will give for the bonds if this only opportunity of transportation is taken from that land and it is left there and they have to wheelbarrow their crops to the market?

In addition to the $1,875,000 of direct loss to the land, to say nothing of the loss in the value of the personal property, there is this loss to the bondholders on their bonds. Then I point to the picture of the little village of South Mills that has been built up there with a graded school that cost them $60,000. I show you here the outlines of the best white cedar swamp in the world, where the Government got every foot of its white cedar during the late war, and ask you if you do not know that by destroying that canal as the Government has done you are impairing the value of that swamp at least to the extent of the sum I have indicated?

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. STEPHENS. I just want to ask if the canal will be abandoned if the Government does not purchase it?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Your Board of Engineers say yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will not the people still use the canal?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. No, sir. The use of the canal is dependent upon maintenance of the locks and the upkeep of the canal. You must remember that these people are relatively small land owners. They have farms, 102 of them separately. You can not organize farmers who own 30 or 40 acres of land into an easily operated and effective corporation of the kind that you have in your minds and of the kind that spring from the business centers of the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As I understand it, the gentleman is asking to have us who believe in this proposition vote for the Senate amendment?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes, sir. The conferees have not agreed to the Senate amendment, and we ask you to vote to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It was put on in the Senate?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes; but the conferees have not agreed to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The vote here is to accept the Senate amendment.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. What proportion of the canal is in Virginia and what proportion is in North Carolina?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Virginia has about two-thirds of the mileage, but North Carolina has the very much greater interest, because it is more important to these landowners to get to Norfolk and to the northern markets than it is to the northern markets that they come to them.

They say this is a "pork-barrel" proposition. Let me answer that it no more resembles a pork-barrel proposition than the Volstead law resembles a whisky-barrel proposition. [Laughter.] So different this is from a pork-barrel proposition, that when the Board of Engineers were investigating this thing, in my presence they said to the owners, "What will you take for your property?" The owners said, "Come and look at our books and examine them, every book that we have got is yours to examine freely, and you will find that we have invested in this property $1,700,000. Make us such an offer as you think is consistent with justice." The Board of Engineers reported that the Government should pay $500,000, which is about 27 per cent of the investment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understood the gentleman to say that the Government owns something at the north end of that canal.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. It owns the approaches at the north end and at the south end.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the distance between what the Government owns at the south end and what the Government owns at the north end?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. There are 22 miles of canal between the two Government approaches.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that the Government owns a part?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. It does.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. At each end?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes; and has always kept it up.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman kindly point out the termini of this canal?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes. [Pointing on map.] The Government owns only the approaches, one of which empties into the Pasquotank River, the other in Elizabeth River. There it comes out to the sound [pointing on map].

Now, gentlemen, where is the fudging and the fraud that they say is in this thing? Can anyone say this is a drainage proposition only, as contended by the gentleman from Wisconsin? Nobody can believe that after the Board of Engineers examined this thing, as I have stated to you. If that were true, they would have come back and said to you, "This thing is a ditch only." Can you believe for a moment that you have such a Board of Engineers as to try to pass off such a fraud as that would be? Can the gentleman from Wisconsin know better than these officers whose duties it was to investigate and report to you? Is not his contention absurd?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I will.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am curious to know where the destruction comes in.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. In answer to the gentleman I will say in the words of the Board of Engineers that it is because the toll-free canal takes up all of the through traffic originating beyond the termini of this canal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the Government would leave it as nature provided it.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. No; it can not leave it as nature provided it. Gen. George Washington and his coworkers gave them this canal, and your refusal to adopt this project takes it away from them, because your toll-free canal takes away all the traffic, except that originating within these narrow limits immediately on the banks of the present canal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Takes it away in what way?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. By reason of being toll free it naturally takes it from points below and above, because such freight passing through the Government canal is toll free.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for me to answer the question of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Let me make this suggestion in further answer to the gentleman from Kansas: The United States Government was a stockholder in the original company that owned the Dismal Swamp Canal. This company sold the canal to a new company which was organized and which improved it to the extent of about $1,750,000. The Government then constructed a free canal, 20 miles distant, which diverted the through traffic from the Dismal Swamp Canal, where tolls were charged, and reduced the revenues of that canal from an average of $97,000 to $18,000 per annum, which was below the cost of maintenance.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This canal that is sought to be taken over by the Government—if the Government takes it over, will operate it as a free-toll canal, the same as the other?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the Government operates this Dismal Swamp Canal, it will operate it as a free canal?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Certainly so.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will it be of any value to the Government for transportation?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Immensely so, as will be shown by the report of the engineers. And by the way, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] said that the other line was shorter, when the facts are absolutely opposite. It strikes the line here [pointing] and every boat that starts anywhere south of Beaufort Inlet or from the north, according to the point at which it strikes the canal, will be not less than 8 miles or as much as 20 miles shortened on its route.

Mr. BARBOUR. Why did they take the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Well, it was $250,000 cheaper in the first place. The Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal was dying by inches every day, and they took what they could get. When the owners of the Dismal Swamp Canal were asked to fix a price on their property they said give us whatever you please, we can demand nothing, and so they here offer them 28 per cent of their investment. In 1827 the Government bought 49 per cent of the stock in this canal and owned it to 1869, and the United States Government made a profit of $320,000 on it. In 1861, after the war broke out, the Federal Army captured it, and a military officer said that it saved for this Government $30,000 a day. In 1869 the Government consented that it be mortgaged, and it was mortgaged and afterwards sold under the mortgage, and the Comptroller of the Currency bought it in for the Government and the present holders hold under his deed.

Now, the proposition is this and only this: This Dismal Swamp Canal was here in fine condition, serving this large area, representing what is now 28,000 population, with 135,000 acres of holdings, 30,000 acres in active cultivation. The Government saw fit to take over the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal and to make it toll free in furtherance of the great scheme of constructing an inland waterway from New England to the South. When this was done shipping was diverted from this Dismal Swamp Canal to the extent that its income would not sustain it. It must go under, according to the report of your engineers. The people living in the territory through which it runs say if it goes under our only opportunity of transportation is taken from us by an act of the Government. This is found to be a fact. Is it right that it should be done? Can the Government in justice to these people afford to do it? It seems to me that every possible voice of the human conscience answers "No." I ask you to do unto them as you would they should do unto you. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Speaker, when H. R. 10766 was passed by the House and sent to the Senate, the Senate made a number of amendments thereto, among which was one recommended by the Board of Army Engineers for the purchase of the Dismal Swamp Canal, valued by the board at $500,000. Sent to conference, the conferees have disagreed. It has been stated that this is an attempt to unload a worthless property upon the Government. I say that it is an attempt to make restitution for an act of injustice done to certain citizens who have spent their time, labor, and money in the development of the Dismal Swamp Canal, in drainage projects, in creating farms and homes, villages, and cities adjacent to the canal.

The Dismal Swamp Canal was conceived by President Washington, who held large interests contiguous thereto. Being by profession a civil engineer, he quickly perceived the advantages that would accrue to a large area extending from Beaufort Inlet, on the southern coast of North Carolina, to the head waters of the Chesapeake Bay, in the State of Maryland. This canal was developed and opened for traffic at the beginning of the last century, in 1800 to 1805. It is 22 miles in length, one half of which lies in the State of Virginia and the other in the State of North Carolina, and has continued to serve the public through varying fortunes to the present day.

During the sixties another canal was built, known as the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal, likewise connecting the waters of the Chesapeake Bay with those of Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds on the south. This canal being of greater depth and width, could accommodate the gradually increasing size of vessels, and in consequence practically absorbed the through traffic. The owners of the Dismal Swamp Canal, realizing a loss of trade, found it necessary either to abandon the canal altogether or spend large sums of money for betterments; decided upon the latter plan, and in 1899, after the expenditure of more than a million and a quarter dollars, the canal was reopened for traffic. It was broadened to 80 feet water surface, with a 50-foot base, and a mean depth of 10 feet of water. There are two locks upon the canal; one at either end. The facilities thus afforded being superior to those of the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal, the traffic was regained by the Dismal Swamp Canal and a profitable business was gradually being developed, while the farms and villages and cities dependent upon this transportation began to grow in size and importance.

In 1912 Congress directed a survey and report to be made of a route for a Government canal between Norfolk and Albemarle Sound as a part of a projected intercoastal waterway from Massachusetts to the Gulf, resulting in a recommendation by United States Army engineers that the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal be selected as the route for this intercoastal waterway. While making this recommendation, the Army engineers frankly admitted that the opening of a free waterway would destroy the business of the Dismal Swamp Canal. Nevertheless, the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal was purchased by the Government, improved, deepened, and opened to the public for use free of tolls. As predicted by the Army engineers, the business of the Dismal Swamp Canal was diverted, with the result that the investment is confronted with an absolute loss. The Dismal Swamp Canal proved a paying investment until the Government diverted its traffic through the free canal. It would seem, therefore, that the Government should, in justice to the owners of the Dismal Swamp Canal, take over these properties, which the Army engineers have recommended that it should do, at a valuation of $500,000, $750,000 less than the amount invested by its owners, thus relieving them of 40 per cent of the loss which would otherwise result; that is to say, that the Government would bear 40 per cent of the loss, while the owners, through no fault of their own, after having in good faith invested their money for the development of traffic and of the contiguous territory, would sustain 60 per cent of the loss.

Not only would a great loss accrue to the owners of the canal but as such it has proven valuable as a drainage project to a large area of very fertile lands immediately within the Dismal Swamp Canal area. Something like 560 square miles have thus been drained, approximately one-half of which have been opened for cultivation, and has proven the most fertile and valuable lands in eastern Virginia and North Carolina.

About 25,000 people have settled within this section and are served by this waterway for transportation to Norfolk, Va., the nearest trading city, as well as Baltimore and New York, in which cities the forest products from an additional area find a ready market. Beyond the canal, on the Pasquotank River and eastward through the Albemarle Sound, a large number of people have been served by transportation passing through the Dismal Swamp Canal. For many years I was a shipper through each of these canals, the Dismal Swamp and the Albemarle & Chesapeake. Both served a useful purpose. During the winter seasons, when the north and northeasterly winds prevailed, the waters of Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds were forced southward to such an extent as to lower the depth of water in the southern approach to the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal. We have frequently had barges detained for many days awaiting a change of the wind and an inflow of water sufficient for these barges to pass through Currituck Sound to the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal. When, however, the Dismal Swamp Canal was opened, to avoid these delays we diverted our traffic to the Dismal Swamp Canal, thus avoiding detention and enabling our barges to be more heavily loaded.

It has been suggested that the Dismal Swamp Canal is dependent upon Lake Drummond for water to float its traffic, and that the lake will not supply the necessary water. Permit me to say that, though I have lived in the immediate vicinity of this canal for 32 years and was a shipper thereon for many years, it has never come to my knowledge that there was any shortage of water in the canal resulting from an inadequate supply by Lake Drummond. On the contrary, Lake Drummond was seriously considered as a source of water supply for the city of Norfolk, in addition to its supply to the canal. The principal reason that it was not selected was due to the fact that its waters are pregnant with juniper acids, which are injurious and render them unfit for boiler use, and hence the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth sought other sources of supply.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, when anybody anywhere in the United States has any sort of property which they can not operate successfully a good place to come and dispose of it is the United States Treasury. Here is a proposal submitted to the Congress of the United States to pay $500,000 for a property that is not worth 5 cents. It is not earning a dollar; it is not carrying any commerce; it will not carry any commerce, and there is not any reason in the world why the Government of the United States should be called upon to pay a dollar for the property. This canal is purely local. It does not serve anybody except in one or two townships. If there is any commerce carried by water in this section of the country it can be carried on the Albemarle Canal. The Dismal Swamp Canal is obsolete. There is not any sense or any justice in the proposal. If we expend $500,000 under the ordinary rate of interest that would be $30,000 a year on the investment, and then whatever it would cost to operate it would be added to that. So it is not $500,000 that is involved, but whatever may be expended in the future every year from now until the end of time. And for what? Not for any good purpose, not for the accommodation of commerce, not for the development of business, not for a necessity that exists anywhere, but merely to pay to somebody who has an obsolete piece of property which is not worth a dollar $500,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. I think I do not need to take much more of the time of the House to convince the Members here that this proposal has no merit. It is an iniquitous proposition.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. EVANS. Can the gentleman inform us whether or not this will be an additional burden always to maintain and keep it open so as to be operated for drainage purposes?

Mr. MADDEN. As I said, $500,000 under the commercial rate of interest would be $30,000 a year. Then whatever it would cost to maintain and operate it besides would be probably $50,000 or $100,000 a year more. The probable cost of every ton of commerce carried on this canal would be $50.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have only five minutes; I will yield later if I have the time. Mr. Speaker, I am not a resident of the portion of Virginia traversed by this Lake Drummond Canal and have no interest from that standpoint in the consideration of this matter, but in the very few minutes which are assigned me I would like to state that the uncontested facts are materially different from what the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MADDEN] has stated. The difficulty with the gentleman is that he has not read the hearings before the committee nor the report of the Chief of Engineers.

This Lake Drummond Canal is a very old canal. Prior to 1912, when the Government acquired the Albemarle Canal, it was absolutely dependable for transportation. It was so dependable that people had gradually settled on the land which is now under cultivation and which is shown on the map as having a considerable population. The population increased as the necessity for products outside became more urgent, and thus prior to 1912 large areas had been occupied by people who had come in not from the South alone but from the North and West. Besides putting land in cultivation, they had organized drainage systems with a view to making use of additional land. They had built up villages; they had established their churches and their schools; they had become an active, vigorous community of from 25,000 to 50,000 people, relying upon this waterway for their future food.

What the House is going to do if it declines this proposition is to crush that community. In that connection, according to the undisputed evidence, it will cut off from the eastern markets a very substantial and widening food supply. Among the products raised on that rich soil in large quantities is the soya bean. It is the best soya-bean producing land in this country. The beans produced there are shipped to the West and other portions of the country for seed. If the Government refuses to take the canal over, all such operations will cease.

The canal has been and is a live enterprise relied upon by those who live and labor near it as their only means of transportation. It could not have been destroyed, it can not be destroyed now by any other agency except the Government of the United States itself. It could not be destroyed by any competing canal company charging tolls. It could be destroyed by State action or arbitrary private action. It is now to be eliminated by the Government, unless the Government takes it over.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I can not yield to my friend; I have such a short time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I have one minute more?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What is the opinion of the Board of Engineers, speaking as late as February 22? That board, speaking through General Beach, recommends the purchase of this canal for $500,000. The hearings, which include the statement of our respected friend, former Representative Small, of North Carolina, all show that it is to the interest of the public, not only of the community directly involved but to the interest of consumers in the eastern markets for the Senate proposition to be adopted. Those who speak for the Government, its engineers, tell us that it is likewise to the interest of the Government that it should purchase and operate the canal. It seems to me that the rejection of the proposition would be indefensible and amount to great and cruel injustice.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has three minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. WYANT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WYANT. What were the gross earnings of this canal during the last year?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not give that offhand. I admit that they have been diminishing since these people all around this district made the demand upon Congress that we establish an intercoastal route at an expense of millions of dollars. Of course the returns of the old Dismal Swamp Canal, which has only a depth of 9 feet and not 12 feet, as the principal proponents say, and which has no tonnage to speak of, has been diminishing.

What is the proposal? Originally these same people who are asking that this canal be purchased by the Government advocated the establishment of an intercoastal waterway, of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] was the proponent, at a cost of several million dollars for a through route here. The people of Elizabeth City now have the advantage of that through route, going up to Baltimore, only 30 miles difference.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. What is the date of that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Nineteen hundred and sixteen. We are expending on it $500,000 to-day to finish the completion of it, and now they are trying to dump on the United States a local proposition, purely local in character, entirely of local concern, and of no national value. Why should not these rich farm owners maintain it and purchase the stock, which is of no value to-day, rather than dump it on Uncle Sam?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What did the Government do to this project that has tended to destroy it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Nothing at all. It yielded to the appeals of those people for a through waterway of 12 feet. This canal has not enough water to supply a 12-foot waterway.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I will use the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, quite unintentionally, I am sure, there have been numerous misstatements made as to this canal. Let us see what is the situation. From Norfolk to Albemarle Sound there are two canals, and, of course, the primary question that confronts Congress, the only question in which it is interested, the only question which it cares to consider, is whether the canal in question here is necessary to the commerce of the country through which it flows.

Let us see what their transportation facilities are, first by land, and then by water. In this narrow peninsula there are two lines of railroad. Any farmer—and it is a farming community—is within 15 miles of a railroad.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Accessible to this land?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; accessible to all this territory; every foot of it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The evidence shows to the contrary.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, the Dismal Swamp is used for agricultural purposes, and it is the Dismal Swamp that we are talking about, and these railroads run right through the Dismal Swamp.

Now, there are as good transportation facilities in that county as there are in my own county—by rail—and I represent as good an agricultural county, as rich an agricultural county as there is in the United States.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In a moment.

Next let us come to water transportation. Through this narrow peninsula run two canals. Neither one of them was a canal of standard depth. Neither one of them was adapted to or would handle the traffic of that region. We have standardized, as I have stated in another place, canals in this country at a depth of 12 feet, and both of these canals were less than 12 feet, so that in the effort to provide transportation facilities, in the effort to accommodate these people, to give them that which they needed, to give them better transportation facilities, this Government expended a large sum of money. How much do you suppose we have expended? We have expended practically $4,500,000 upon this Albemarle canal, an enormous sum, considering the shortness of the route and the traffic which is handled.

So, gentlemen, let us make no mistake. Do not let us consider any false premises. Gentlemen start out as though this Government was injuring some one. Why, this Government in its paternal care, in its solicitude for its citizens, has expended $4,500,000 upon a waterway—with what results? Why, when we took it it was carrying 229,000 tons of freight annually. What is it doing to-day? The freight has been cut in two. It is carrying just half that.

And there we come to the second line of the argument. Why, the gentlemen from the vicinity say that by taking over this canal we have ruined the other canal. How have we ruined it? Why, they intimate to you that we are carrying all the traffic. Why, they had 229,000 tons when we took the Albemarle Canal over, and we are carrying scarcely more than 100,000 tons to-day. We have not ruined anybody except the Government of the United States. [Laughter.] We could not by any possibility have hurt anybody except the Government of the United States. Now, let us see what the history of their canal is. In 1913, when the Government took over the Albemarle Canal, the traffic on the Dismal Swamp Canal was 327,000 tons. That, too, has dwindled to 132,000 tons. In other words, instead of developing commerce, instead of this being a community which has an added commerce, which is growing and prospering and increasing, both canals have carried very much less freight, because apparently either the railroads carry it all or they have not the freight. So we have not robbed them in any way. The situation on the Dismal Swamp Canal has not changed an iota more than our situation on the Albemarle.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In just a moment. The Government has made an investment of $4,500,000, and we are carrying 118,000 tons of freight. Why, we could almost better afford to pay for the freight than to have an investment of that kind in this canal. That is an actual fact. We could very nearly as well buy the freight annually as to own this canal which we already own.

Now, let us come to the next proposition. A question was asked of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARD] whether this was not a standard 12-foot canal, and he said "Yes." Now, he did not intend to mislead you, but he did not know the facts. Here is the situation: These two canals at the north end and the south end are common, and the Government, where they are one canal, maintains them at both ends, and where the Government maintains them they have a depth of 12 feet. But for the 22 miles between there is a depth of 9 feet. I will read from the report of the engineers to prove that, so that we will be sure that I am not misquoting. I am quoting from the authority upon this subject, so that we may be sure that I am stating it just as it is and not otherwise.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I concede that the gentleman is right about that. I correct what I said about the depth being 12 feet; but the depth is equal to the demands of all the transportation upon it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Now, let us come to the next point. If you buy this canal, you have a 9-foot canal. You have made a lamentable failure of this 12-foot canal. What are you going to do with this 9-foot canal? It is conceded and everybody admits that you will not have any through traffic. You can not have through traffic on a 9-foot canal, because people do not build boats for a depth of 9 feet. All the barges are built for a depth of 12 feet. So that eliminates at once any question of through traffic. Now, can this canal be made 12 feet deep so that you can have through traffic? The answer is no. Why not? Because both ends of this canal are above the water at the two ends.

The canal begins and ends in a lock, and the lock sends you up several feet, so there is no source of water supply at either end. How do you get the water supply? You get it from Lake Drummond. And what is Lake Drummond? Lake Drummond is a little lake west of this canal, which has an inadequate supply of water, so that at times it has not had the water to fill this canal. Not only that, Lake Drummond is in the Dismal Swamp region. It undoubtedly gets the greater part of what water it has from drainage from the Dismal Swamp. These gentlemen tell you that that is a rich farming district and that rapidly the district is being drained and farmed, and the drainage is being carried away. What will become of Lake Drummond then?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I hold in my hand a map from the Geological Survey Office brought here for the purpose of showing the House that Lake Drummond is inexhaustible.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is inexhaustible to the extent that it is a lake which does not go dry, but it is admitted and the testimony is uncontradicted that at times the water has been insufficient for this canal. You can not get any more water, and if it will not supply a 9-foot canal, it certainly can not supply a 12-foot canal. And more than that, I am very much afraid that if we buy this canal, as the Dismal Swamp region is drained we will be in the position of owning a canal the only objection to which is that it has not any water or any water supply. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I asked the engineers who came before the committee, "Suppose Lake Drummond is insufficient? What are you going to do?" Their reply was, "You can pump the water up into the canal." Do you want to buy a canal into which you have to pump the water?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman state that that was never done?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think they did say it had been done.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I am in possession of information on that subject, and I state positively to the House that there is nothing in that proposition; that it never has been done.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I simply state that it is my best recollection that within a day or two before the conferees the engineers stated that that would be the only way to supply the water for that canal; that it would have to be pumped into the canal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not a fact that the engineers stated that water could be supplied to the canal by pumping?

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. General Jervey has sent me a telegram stating that if it should need any additional water it could be connected with Elizabeth River at its top without difficulty and at an inconsiderable expense. I have General Jervey's telegram in my possession.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The engineers said it would not be very expensive to pump water, but I do not believe there is anybody in this House who is going to buy a canal into which we would have to pump water.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if it is not a fact that water has to be pumped into many of our canals at times in order to keep them in operation?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not know any of them. I hope I will never hear of such a canal. I never heard of it. Why, all along the Erie Canal, across the State of New York, at every considerable place, again and again we have to discharge the surplus water. We do not pump water into that canal. The gentleman who interrogates me comes from New York and he ought to know what the fact is about that.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman knows that the engineers also stated that it was a common practice to pump water into some of the largest canals.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. But it has never been pumped into this canal.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I never heard the engineers state that, and if it was so it would not add to the attractiveness of the canal to have to pump water into it.

Mr. KINDRED. May I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Gentlemen, let us make no mistake. The Government has done nothing except acts of kindness to the territory embraced by this canal. We made a very bad investment in order to help them out. That investment is a very highly losing venture.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will recall that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], in a preceding Congress foisted this Albemarle Canal onto the Government. We did not have influence enough to prevent the purchase of it. But do not let us make another mistake by adopting the suggestion of the other gentleman from North Carolina now.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much is the annual cost of the upkeep of this canal, if we should finally buy it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I understand it would be about $30,000 a year.

Mr. SNELL. Thirty thousand dollars a year to keep it up?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; and then there would be $30,000 interest on the capital invested. But do not let us lose sight of the fact for a moment that there is no possibility of through traffic, that it must be simply local traffic, and that this traffic has dwindled until to-day it is infinitesimal.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon my motion to instruct the conferees to insist upon their disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to instruct the conferees to insist on their disagreement to the Senate amendment, and on that he demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the negative should prevail, would that, under the precedents, be equivalent to an instruction to the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry. Would not a motion to instruct the conferees to concur in the Senate amendment take precedence?

Mr. STAFFORD. The proper parliamentary motion is that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have moved the previous question on my motion. I moved the previous question before the other motion was made.

Mr. GARNER. Under the rule they have the right to make the motion to concur.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think that motion would take precedence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to concur would take precedence.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I have already moved the previous question upon my motion. They had the right to make that motion up to the time that the previous question was ordered, but the previous question has been ordered. They are too late.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the motion for the previous question is pending. I do not think we have voted on the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the previous question was ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. WARD of North Carolina) there were—ayes 87, noes 29.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina demanded the yeas and nays and then withdrew the demand.

So the motion of Mr. DEMPSEY was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 11: East River, N. Y., in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] wants 10 minutes for another matter, and I think we may need the hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time be extended to 1 hour and 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, what is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. DEMPSEY. To extend the time 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman made a motion with reference to the Senate amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I move that the House conferees be instructed to insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 11.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a substitute motion for that of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York that he does not think the motion to instruct a proper motion at present. This is not in conference; we have finished the conference report and are now considering Senate amendments. The question is whether the House will disagree to the Senate amendment and have a further conference.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer a preferential motion.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand that the Speaker holds that the motion of the gentleman from New York is not in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggested that it was not a proper motion.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The suggestion of the Chair is that the motion should be that the House further insist upon its disagreement, and I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House further insists upon its disagreement.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. But, Mr. Speaker, I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he recognized the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is a preferential motion.

Mr. OLIVER. It is understood that we have a discussion on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in recent issues of trade and financial papers reference has been made to an alleged negotiation of the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co., a British corporation, to secure very large holdings of oil property in the United States. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time two of such extracts from the newspapers.

The Clerk read as follows:

COSDEN & CO. MAY BE TAKEN OVER BY ROYAL DUTCH SHELL—MERGER TALK BASED ON VISIT OF ROYAL DUTCH FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES HERE, DEPARTURE FOR EUROPE OF COSDEN OFFICIALS, AND LONDON BUYING OF STOCK.

Possibility of Cosden & Co. being merged into Royal Dutch Shell group is being discussed in oil-trade circles. Return of several representatives of the foreign oil combine to Europe, after visiting oil properties here, scheduled departure of some Cosden executives for Europe next week, as well as London buying of Cosden stock recently, lend color to the talk.

Ownership of Cosden would undoubtedly work in nicely with Royal Dutch plans in this country, as Cosden has one of the largest and most modern refining plants in the world. It is particularly desirable because of the large amount of gasoline. Its refinery can produce upward of 20,000 barrels of gasoline daily at capacity.

In addition, Cosden has a substantial crude-oil production of its own—about 12,000 barrels daily, net—connected by its own pipe lines with its 40,000-barrel refinery.

WHAT'S BEHIND ACTIVE STOCKS?—95—COSDEN & CO.

Cosden & Co. was incorporated on July 9, 1917, as an oil producing, refining, and distributing unit. The company acquired by the issuance of its bonds and preferred and common stocks the securities of the older concern of Cosden & Co. and of the Cosden Oil & Gas Co. Recently the present company has been connected with rumors involving a merger with the Royal Dutch Shell group. As of December 31 last, refineries, pipe lines, miscellaneous equipment, oil lands, leases, gasoline plants, and tank cars were carried at a valuation of $66,673,557. This compared with an outstanding capitalization consisting of $6,998,000 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock and 1,003,910 no par shares of common. Bonded debt includes $5,628,000 15-year convertible sinking-fund series A and B bonds and subsidiary issues aggregating $1,500,000. Current assets at the end of 1921 stood at $9,924,683, against current liabilities of $4,687,949. Profit and loss surplus amounted to $24,302,950, which included $10,386,120 as the unrealized portion of surplus from appreciation in the value of oil reserves.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in addition to securing the holdings of the Cosden Co.—oil holdings—negotiations, I understand, are under way to secure the largest refinery in the State of Illinois by the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co. I take this opportunity to call public attention to the matter, because it has been the policy of the Government of the United States in recent years to avoid the merger of American companies of large holdings in oil, either of producing or of refining companies. This policy of the United States should be adhered to quite as strictly with respect to the Royal Dutch Shell Oil Co. absorbing oil companies in the United States. This is so far as our domestic policy is concerned. In this connection it is not out of place to say that it has been the policy of the British Government—and the Royal Dutch Shell Co. is a British oil company—to look with disfavor on American oil companies extending their activities in oil fields controlled by or under the influence of the British Government. I have taken occasion to call the attention of the State Department and other departments of the Government to the alleged negotiations that are said to be going on by the Royal Dutch Shell Co. to secure these large American holdings in oil. Our own interests are better conserved, I think, by retaining in so far as it is possible to do so the control of large oil companies within the United States. I believe I am right in saying the British Government did not hesitate when American oil companies sought to extend their activities in oil fields over which the British Government exercised an influence to show that it did not look with favor on the activities of American companies or American citizens seeking to develop the oil resources in countries under their influence.

It seems to me we should be as jealous of our oil products and our oil interests as is the British Government of those interests in lands it controls. I simply call the attention of the House and the country to this matter, because I think every department of this Government should be on notice as to the negotiations I have referred to.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Did the gentleman receive a reply from the State Department and would he mind telling us what it was?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The State Department is looking into the matter.

The Government of the United States I take it will protect, so far as it is consistent with our friendly relations with other countries, the interests of this Government in this important matter. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SANDERS of Indiana). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think there is some confusion as to who has the floor. The gentleman from New York yielded to the gentleman from Kansas 10 minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] offered a preferential motion. The reason I ask is to ascertain whether we are now proceeding under the hour's limit or if both gentlemen are entitled to an hour?

Mr. DEMPSEY. My understanding is that the universal practice is that the chairman is entitled to the time on his motion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman from Alabama made a motion to concur. I only desire to clear up the parliamentary situation.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it is the universal custom for the chairman to control the time.

Mr. WINGO. If there is any doubt about it I would like to have the floor for a while to talk about Muscle Shoals.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair has the impression that the unanimous-consent request obtains.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is the uniform practice that the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill has control of the time. It is true another Member may offer a preferential motion, but that does not deprive the chairman of the committee of the control of the floor and he can move at any time the previous question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, I did not desire to deprive the gentleman from New York in any way, but I wanted to know if we are under debate for one hour or for two?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is under debate for 1 hour and 10 minutes under the unanimous-consent request made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, referring to amendment No. 11, providing for reducing the depth of the project on the East River, N. Y., from 40 feet to 35 feet——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I desire to say, not to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois, to the House that I want to be absolutely fair and yield half the time to those opposed and to those who are in favor of this amendment. As yet no gentleman has made any application, and I will follow very soon after the gentleman from Illinois, and then ask for a vote.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman expect to complete this bill to-night? How much time is he going to take on the Cape Cod Canal? Why not cut it short?

Mr. OLIVER. May I have the attention of the gentleman from New York? I think he is entirely fair.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? Do I understand the gentleman intends to close debate on this?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No gentleman has applied for time.

Mr. KINDRED. I have applied for time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have just said the project for the improvement of the East River provides for a depth of 40 feet and the amendment of the Senate provides for a reduction of that 40 feet to 35 feet, and the opinion of the War Department, and the Navy Department also, is to the effect that 35 feet is all the depth that will ever be needed. The original project is estimated to cost $71,500,000. The reduction of the depth from 40 feet to 35 feet will reduce that cost to $38,000,000, or a saving of $33,500,000. This project runs through Hell Gate and around to the navy yard, and the only purpose of the project as originally contemplated was to enable battleships to go around through the East River to the navy yard and up to Long Island Sound.

As a matter of safety the project was considered a very important one, but everybody, even when the project was originally adopted, believed that the 40-foot depth was more than was necessary, and now the expert testimony and advice of both the Navy Department and the War Department, through the Engineers and the Chief of Engineers, is to the effect that 35 feet is the maximum depth required. There is no reason why the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] should not be adopted. The preferential motion made is to adopt the Senate amendment and by its adoption we will save to the Treasury of the United States $33,500,000 and we will not in any way embarrass the proposed improvement. The battleships for which this improvement was said to be intended will have ample water depth at 35 feet to accommodate them at mean low tide, and while the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], as chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I believe, is in favor of carrying out the project of the original depth, there is no reason now why his advice should have any weight, because it accomplishes nothing if his advice is accepted except to make this outlay of $33,500,000 on the Treasury of the United States and thereby add $33,500,000 to the burden of taxation on the people of the United States without doing one dollar's worth of good toward the navigation of the East River. Many of us believed when this project was originally presented that it was impractical——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman remember how many there were?

Mr. MADDEN. Many believed it to be impractical and still believe it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Only a few.

Mr. MADDEN. And still believe it is impractical, and even if it were practical that it is an unnecessary expenditure of money.

Now, if expert advice is of any value—and a good many of you gentlemen here have followed it on more than one occasion—I am not always sure that expert advice is valuable, because I have had to differ from it on many occasions—but in this one case the expert advice agrees with my judgment, and I am glad to follow it. It not only agrees with my own judgment but with my own practical experience, based on a thorough investigation of the project now before us.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. A good many of us do not understand what this amendment does. I would like to know definitely.

Mr. MADDEN. The amendment provides for changing the depth of the project in the East River from 40 feet to 35 feet at mean low tide, and it means, further, that a saving to the Treasury of the United States of $33,500,000 will be made without injuring in any way the possibilities of navigation.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SANDERS of Indiana). The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-six Members are present—there is not a quorum.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and thirty-four Members are present.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to allow five minutes to the gentleman on the other side.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the gentleman will allow me 10 minutes. It is almost impossible to discuss this item in five minutes. When I made the motion to concur I had hoped that reasonable time would be allowed for discussion. I question whether I can present the matter in less than 10 minutes. My remarks will be confined to this particular amendment, and I hope to lay before the House information that may prove helpful in deciding the matter at issue.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The feeling over here is that it is very late, and that we ought to divide the time so far as we have used it.

I have yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I think we should yield 10 minutes in order to close the debate.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the gentleman will agree with me that it would be rather unusual not to allow more time for the discussion of an amendment of this importance, and I hope that 10 minutes will be yielded.

I have no special interest in the fact that I am the author of the motion to concur, but I believe that the Senate side of the question should be presented, so that the House may be fully informed when the vote is taken. I again ask that the gentleman allow 10 minutes in which to present this question to the House.

Mr. DEMPSEY. In view of what has transpired, and in view of the fact that I went over there simply to try to agree with the gentleman as to time——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this the proper time or place for a discussion of personal matters, but if it is desired, I will be glad to make a public statement to the House about it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I spoke to the gentleman only in the most kindly spirit.

Mr. OLIVER. I appreciate the gentleman's statement now, and had he approached me before in that same spirit and manner nothing would or could have occurred to cause the slightest misunderstanding.

Mr. DEMPSEY. When I went over to consult the gentleman I did so with no purpose other than to try to be as helpful as I could be.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and usually find myself in agreement with the reports of this committee. In this instance, however, I feel the House conferees are in error in urging that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 11. My belief is it would be a wiser course for the House to adopt the pending motion to concur in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has correctly stated that concurrence in the Senate amendment will involve a saving of not less than $33,000,000. Some have estimated that the saving may exceed that amount, but every estimate fixes the minimum saving at not less than $33,000,000.

It may be interesting to review for a moment just the reasons why Congress authorized the original project of a 40-foot channel, and which the Senate now seeks to modify. Having been on the Naval Affairs Committee at the time this matter was considered, I am fairly well informed as to the facts. The Secretary of the Navy was alone responsible for the authorization of the 40-foot channel, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], the present chairman of the House committee, based his argument at that time for a 40-foot channel absolutely on the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Navy. There was little opposition to the adoption of the project, as recommended by the Secretary, because we were then at war, and the Secretary felt there might be urgent need for the deeper channel below the navy yard, although no study of the situation had been made by either Army or Navy engineers at that time. All of us appreciate that no matter how cool we may have appeared to be during the war, we did not always act wisely nor provide in an economical way even for necessary things. After the war was over, at the request of Congress, the officials of the Navy and War Departments gave further study to the 40-foot channel in East River, as originally authorized in 1918, and we now find the officers, as well as the official heads of these services, in complete agreement that the original 40-foot project is unnecessary and urging its modification, as provided for in Senate amendment No. 11.

To refresh the recollection of Members of the House as to what the original project provided, let me say that it authorized a 40-foot channel from Upper New York Bay by the navy yard to a point known as Throgs Neck. Now, the Senate amendment seeks to modify this original authorization in this, that the 40-foot channel shall extend only from Upper New York Bay to the navy yard, and from the navy yard to Throgs Neck the channel shall be 35 feet.

The Army engineers were requested by a resolution from the Rivers and Harbors Committee to study and report on this channel, and the present recommendation of the Army engineers is the result of a most careful study of the matter, both from a commercial and military standpoint. The action of the Senate in modifying the original project is based altogether on this late report of the engineers. The report is dated December 20, 1921, and known as Document No. 3.

The House will find it to be a thorough and illuminating report, and I feel sure that no Member who has had time to read the report can do otherwise than agree that the Senate has acted wisely in following the recommendations of the Army engineers, and thus saving to the Government not less than $33,000,000. The Army engineers in their report state that the Secretary of the Navy was consulted about the proposed modification, and that the Navy Department concurs in their findings and recommendations. I quote some excerpts from the engineers' report, as follows:

> For commercial purposes a depth of 35 feet would appear to meet all reasonable demands, and as this depth will satisfy naval requirements, the advisability of reducing the project depth of 40 feet to 35 feet is thus suggested in the interest of economy.
> Estimates submitted show that the 40-foot project throughout would cost $33,500,000 more than the proposed project 40 feet deep to the navy yard and 35 feet thence to Throgs Neck. Consideration of economy would therefore suggest the proposed modification, if the improvement would then fairly meet the purposes for which it is required. These are twofold—commercial and naval. The former will be adequately served by the improvement contemplated in so far as it is possible at this time to foresee future needs, and the Secretary of the Navy has stated that such a project will fulfill all naval requirements.

The report further sets out a letter from the Hon. Gordon Woodberry, as Acting Secretary of the Navy, bearing date of October 22, 1920, in which he fully concurs in the findings and recommendations of the Army engineers. The Secretary of War, Hon. John W. Weeks, on July 12, 1922, wrote a letter to Senator WESLEY L. JONES, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, strongly urging the modification of the original project, so as to provide a channel of 40 feet in depth extending from Upper New York Bay to the navy yard and 35 feet in depth from the navy yard to Throgs Neck. I will ask for permission to print this letter as a part of my remarks.

Now, certainly all must agree that the House and Senate in matters of this kind have always followed the recommendations of Army engineers and naval officers, and since the recommendations of the Army engineers and naval officers have been supplemented by strong letters from the Acting Secretary of the Navy and from the present Secretary of War, there can now be no justification for a refusal on the part of Congress to modify the original project as thus recommended, and which the Senate has done.

My information is that the New York Senators have acquiesced in the Senate amendment modifying the original project. I am further informed that the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, to which this matter was referred, before taking action gave notice to the Governor of New York and the mayor of the city of New York, inviting them to appear and show cause, if any, why the recommendations of the Army engineers should not be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DENISON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like five minutes more.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. OLIVER. After this notice was sent, no one appeared before the Senate committee to take issue with the report of the Army engineers.

Mr. KINDRED. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is documentary proof to the contrary.

Mr. OLIVER. I will be very glad to have the gentleman state it.

Mr. KINDRED. We will present that later. The gentleman has unintentionally fallen into an error with regard to that.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have only stated what my information was on that subject. May I ask whether the governor or mayor made any objection to the Senate committee?

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. DEMPSEY, chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, telegraphed to Governor Miller and to Mayor Hylan, of the city of New York, and to the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey and received telegrams from Mayor Hylan and from the chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey opposing the changes made by the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask whether they submitted the report of any capable engineer in support of their protest?

Mr. KINDRED. This was in reply to the telegram.

Mr. OLIVER. I assume that the telegrams expressed only the individual views of the gentlemen who sent them, and certainly nothing was submitted that could be considered as an answer to the full and well-considered report of the Army engineers, on which the action of the Senate was based.

Mr. KINDRED. Let me say that the telegrams received from the chairman of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey is very significant, because it is entirely nonpolitical and nonpartisan.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly nothing could be more nonpolitical and nonpartisan than the advice of Army engineers and naval officers, supplemented, as in this case, by a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy under the preceding administration, and by a letter from the Secretary of War at the present time. The Navy Department under Secretary Daniels, the War Department under Secretary Weeks, and the Army engineers were and still are in full agreement that the action of the Senate in modifying the original proposal is wise, and will result in saving to the Federal Treasury not less than $33,000,000.

From this report and the official correspondence it will be seen that there is now no commercial or military reason for providing a channel greater in depth than 35 feet from the navy yard to Throgs Neck, and it seems to me that no Member of this House could justify his action in the face of this overwhelming proof should he now vote for a continuation of the original project, which will involve not only an additional but useless expenditure of more than $33,000,000. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has well said that we must not vote this $33,000,000 burden on the people of the country simply because the gentleman who is now chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House desires it or may personally believe it necessary.

In 1918 when the gentleman from New York spoke for the 40-foot project his argument was based entirely on what the Secretary of the Navy recommended, and the action of the House was taken solely because of the advice of the Secretary of the Navy. Now, since this advice has been withdrawn, and Army and Navy officials, as well as officers in these services, state that it is not necessary to provide a 40-foot channel from the navy yard to Throgs Neck, but that the original project should be modified in this respect, certainly all facts or arguments justifying the original action of the House have disappeared.

In view of these facts there seems to me but one course now for the House to follow, and that is to adopt the pending motion to concur in the Senate amendment. I hope that the House will take this action. [Applause.]

Under leave granted to extend my remarks, I wish to set out the letter written by Secretary Weeks on July 12, 1922, to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, which letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 12, 1922.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Supplementing my letter of May 31, 1922, in reply to your letter of May 24 asking certain questions in regard to the merits of the pending river and harbor bill (H. R. 10766) now before your committee, I desire to invite attention to the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, recommending a modification of the project for the improvement of East River.

The project heretofore adopted for this improvement provides, among other things, for a channel 40 feet in depth extending through East River from Upper New York Bay to Throgs Neck. The part of this project which provides for a through channel 40 feet in depth was adopted by the river and harbor act of July 18, 1918, partly as a war measure with a view to providing a second deep channel into New York Harbor which could be utilized by the Navy in time of necessity. The estimated cost of the project at that time was $36,900,000, exclusive of amounts expended upon previous projects. Since 1918 additional surveys and investigations have been made, and experience in the conduct of the work indicates that due to the difficulties of the work and rise of prices the work will now cost approximately twice as much as was previously estimated. Consideration is given in the document above referred to (Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, 67th Cong., 2d sess.) to the reduction in the project depth from 40 feet to 35 feet in the through channel east of the navy yard. Based on present prices, the cost of completing the through channel 40 feet in depth is estimated to be $71,500,000, while the cost of completing a channel 40 feet in depth up to the navy yard and 35 feet in depth east of the navy yard is $38,000,000, a difference of $33,500,000.

On account of the swift currents, rocky bottom, narrow and tortuous channel, and congested traffic conditions it is highly improbable that any vessel drawing as much as 35 feet would attempt to use the channel. Moreover, the channel is crossed by a number of bridges having a clearance of 135 feet above high water, which is insufficient for most, if not all, vessels drawing more than 35 feet to pass under without lowering their masts and funnels. The commercial statistics for the calendar year 1920 show that the deepest draft vessel entering New York Harbor drew between 35 and 36 feet, and that the deepest draft vessel leaving the harbor drew between 38 and 39 feet, and that out of 5,338 vessels entering and leaving the harbor only 8 drew 35 feet or more. At high tide, even with the 35-foot project depth, there would be over 40 feet of water through this channel, which would be sufficient for any vessel entering or leaving New York Harbor in the calendar year 1920, if other conditions were such as to make it possible for such vessel to pass through this channel.

The adoption of the 40-foot channel was favored by the Navy Department at the time it was adopted in 1918, but as shown by a letter published on page 5 of the Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, the Navy Department is now satisfied with a channel 40 feet in depth leading up to the navy yard and a 35-foot channel from there on through East River.

The conditions, therefore, which tended to favor the adoption of the 40-foot channel in 1918 have materially changed, and in view of the great saving which will be effected by the modification of this project so as to provide for 35 feet east of the navy yard and the sufficiency of such project for all present or prospective commerce, I recommend that this project be modified accordingly. An item reading substantially as follows, inserted in section 2 of the pending bill, will accomplish this result:

"East River, New York, in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 3, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session."

Very sincerely,

JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED].

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, as one of the minority members of the conferees I desire to state in the briefest possible way that in my opinion, coming as I do from the banks of the East River, the waterway in question, that the amendment of the Senate proposing to change the depth already authorized of 40 feet to 35 feet is both contrary to the great idea of national defense and to the proper protection of the great port of New York, and also contrary to the idea of real economy.

In the first place, if I may, I want to point out to you that this change to a 35-foot channel instead of a 40-foot channel, as already authorized, applies to the East River from Brooklyn Navy Yard to Throgs Neck. That part of the harbor of New York is just as important, commercially and from the standpoint of naval defense, as any other part of the harbor of New York.

When the matter is considered from any angle I am sure that the present patriotic Congress will follow the example of the Sixty-fifth Congress which, backed by the recommendation of the then Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, adopted this proposition, and that the present Congress will not be so foolish, from the standpoint of a little economy, as to throw down the proposition of proper national naval defense for the city of New York.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this proposition for a 40-foot channel through Hell Gate first came to this body in 1917. We passed what we supposed was a direct mandate to the engineers to get 40 feet and to get it immediately. The engineers construed that as being a mandate to get 35 feet at once and 5 feet more at some uncertain time in the future.

Now, let me say that there has been no difference in the attitude of the engineers at any time upon this question. Finding that they construed the act contrary to the intent of Congress, as I believed, I had the honor individually to introduce an amendment in 1918 to provide for 40 feet. We had a vote on the 16th day of April, 1918, and it was carried 140 to 14 by this House, and that is the last time the House has had an opportunity to express itself upon the question.

Now, at that time the Secretary of the Navy—and his finding was concurred in by the Secretary of War—recommended that this be done not alone for the Navy, not alone for war purposes, but that it be done for economic and commercial purposes.

Now, let us see what is the history of the country with regard to 40-foot harbors. Charleston Harbor has an authorized depth of 40 feet. Norfolk has 40 feet. San Francisco for years has had a 40-foot channel entrance, and in this very bill which we have before us for discussion at this moment San Francisco is provided with a second 40-foot channel. The Columbia River has an entrance depth of 46 feet. Boston has an authorized depth of 40 feet. Now, this being the situation, it being recognized that 40 feet is the necessary commercial as well as war depth, why should the city of New York, the metropolis of this great Nation, lose its depth of 40 feet and be cut down to 35 feet?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the report of the Army engineers a statement with which I wish to inquire whether the gentleman takes issue, that only 5 per cent of all the ships entering New York Harbor exceed 35 feet in draft? And further in that report reference is made to the fact that by reason of the current it will never be utilized by the large ships drawing more than 35 feet, but that they will seek the way through the Ambrose Channel.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh well, the fact is that when you want to make a point, if you are expert you can find a reason. The fact is, these engineers who tell you that story in this particular report have indorsed, recommended, and urged the adoption of 40 feet at every one of the harbors I have enumerated, and many of them are very small harbors indeed. On the other hand, this is not alone the metropolis of the country, but the engineers said that if a battle is to be fought in this country the wealth of this country is centered north of Long Island, and they believe that this is the strategic point for the fighting of a battle, and if they give us 40 feet it will double the effectiveness of our fleet for the purpose of defense, because Montauk Point and Ambrose Channel are 252 miles apart.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD), there were 71 ayes and 63 noes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for tellers. Those in favor of tellers will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-three Members have arisen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The House votes to concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the contract dated July 29, 1921, executed by the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co., and transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War and printed in House Document No. 139, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, is hereby ratified on condition that such company files with the Secretary of War its consent in writing that paragraph 8 of such contract be amended to read as follows:

"8. The payment of the amount herein agreed to be paid, or any part of same, to the said canal company is to be upon the express condition that the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co. waives, in writing, any and all claims of any nature whatsoever that it may have against the President, the Director General of Railroads, or the United States, and upon such release the Director General of Railroads shall release the company from any claim or demand against the company growing out of Federal control."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment, with an amendment as follows——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DEMPSEY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed by the Senate amendment strike out the word "paragraph" in line 7, first paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "paragraphs 5 and," and after the first paragraph insert the following paragraph:

"5. The company offers to sell the canal to the United States for $9,000,000, as follows: $3,000,000 in cash, payable when Congress ratifies this agreement and upon delivery of deeds of conveyance as provided therein, and the assumption of the United States of the payment of the bonds mentioned in paragraph 2, including interest coupons maturing on and after January 1, 1922"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the Speaker rule that the gentleman from Texas is entitled to a division?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this question arises in this way: The Cape Cod Canal is a canal which saves a long distance between New England and points south of New York on the south Atlantic seaboard. It not only saves a long distance, something like 67 miles, but the point around the end of Cape Cod is exceedingly dangerous. I think more lives and more property are sacrificed in that perilous journey than at any other point on the Atlantic coast. It has long been recognized therefore than an inland waterway should be provided, and it is a part of the intercoastal waterway which is being provided the whole length of the Atlantic coast.

I think all who have studied the question admit that the Cape Cod Canal should be Government owned and Government operated. Why? Because, in the first place, there can not be any debate or dispute about the question that we must have this inner, safer, and shorter route. Why must the Government own and operate it? Because the depth of the canal to-day is only 25 feet, and that is not sufficient depth, and the canal in other ways is not adapted to the needs of modern commerce. So to make it useful and serve the purposes for which it was designed it is absolutely essential that the additional depth and width should be obtained and that it should be made a sea-level canal. The canal has not proved a profitable venture in private hands, and we can not hope, much less expect, that the canal will be made what it should be made, a sea-level canal with the requisite depth as the result of private enterprise. So the only way to obtain what is absolutely necessary to obtain is through the Government taking over and owning this canal.

So when the conferees met there was no division of opinion as to the advisability of acquiring this canal. The question which arose, and the sharp question, the question which was debated and the question which was in dispute, was what should be paid for this canal. You are aware that the Senate amendment provided for $11,500,000.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had reported in favor of a like amount. In determining the amount there were a variety of considerations to be taken into account. First the natural question was—the Government wants to be fair, the Government wants to be reasonable, the Government does not want to acquire the canal at half price, less than an equitable fair price, and so, as bearing upon that question of what is equitable, and what is fair, and what is just, and what is reasonable, the first inquiry was—What has this canal cost the present owners?

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of War under an act previously passed by Congress made a very thorough investigation of this project and made an offer of $8,250,000 for it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Which was refused and a subsequent Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of Commerce entered into an existing contract at $11,500,000. We are not talking about the dead past, we are talking about the present. The contract which exists to-day is for $11,500,000.

Mr. MADDEN. They had no authority to make a contract that would bind the Government.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think that is fairly debatable, if the gentleman will permit me to say so. I think they considered that they had been authorized by Congress to make the contract, and that all that remains is for Congress to carry out what they understand Congress directed them to do.

Now, that is my understanding of the state of the legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman read what the law provides?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would be glad to have the gentleman tell the House later what his view is. I may be wrong, but that is my understanding. That is my viewpoint and my understanding. Three Secretaries have inquired into this matter——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I understand that this amendment appropriates $9,000,000 in the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Am I correct in my understanding that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House reported not long ago for an appropriation of $12,000,000——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Eleven million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. How did it happen that they are willing now to take $9,000,000, $2,500,000 less than the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were willing to give them?

Mr. WINSLOW. If the gentleman will permit me to answer that inquiry, which I would have put to the chairman later on, I would have asked him, How does he know that they are willing to take $9,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is there any evidence——

Mr. DEMPSEY. We have no knowledge of what their attitude may be on that subject. We have to guess, and our inference upon the facts and discussion is that we hope that they will take the $9,000,000. We believe that is what they ought to have, and they ought not to have any more. I do not mean to go into the question of the carefulness of the examination made by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of which my distinguished friend from Massachusetts is chairman. We believe they were actuated by the highest motives and made a very painstaking and careful investigation and made a finding on the result of their investigation, but——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. One committee or the other must be $3,000,000 out of the way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is on the value of the canal.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for one question? Does the gentleman approve of bringing in a matter of this kind with such a large appropriation on a conference report and have it go through the House without any consideration whatever?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will say in answer to the gentleman from New York there are very few questions which have had the careful and painstaking consideration and repeated examination that this question has had. The gentleman can find, if he will take the time to do it, volumes of testimony, volumes of opinions of expert after expert on this subject.

Mr. SNELL. Have there been any hearings held by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We have not held hearings.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any information before the House itself?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why, yes; there must be information before the House.

Mr. SNELL. Where is it?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is in the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,

Mr. SNELL. Why should the committee bring this matter before the House and ask us to take snap judgment in a matter like this?

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman pleases, we did not do this. The question was of modifying it or leaving it out.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman had the choice of rejecting it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is the regular way for the Senate to propose an amendment, and in proposing this they were fully within their rights. Nothing unusual has been done.

Mr. SNELL. I am not saying that, but I am asking information as to what is the best thing for the House to do.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Senate has added an amendment to the House bill and——

Mr. SNELL. There is no discussion about that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is just the ordinary, usual procedure, and we come here after reaching a compromise which we believe is upon a reasonable and fair basis as to something about which we are fully advised and which we earnestly believe should be done.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman answer me two questions?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the length of this canal?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is 8 miles long.

Mr. BUTLER. And has the gentleman any figures to give us as to what it will cost to develop it for commerce?

Mr. DEMPSEY. About $9,000,000 after what we are expending now.

Mr. BUTLER. That will be $18,000,000?

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is the outside figure; there have been several estimates, but I am dealing with what the highest estimate is.

Mr. BUTLER. I am much obliged.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is not the gentleman in error about that? If it is to be made a lock canal, as the engineers say it must be, it will cost $16,000,000. I am quoting the testimony that it will cost approximately $16,000,000 more if it is made a lock canal, and they say it must be made a lock canal or it will not be successful.

Mr. DEMPSEY. My understanding is that the figure I have given is the outside figure. I have examined the question.

Now, while I am waiting to have that looked up further and find the data on that question, I want to address myself to this question of price. The Secretary of War, as has been said, a long time ago offered $8,950,000. That sum was increased to the sum provided in the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to $11,500,000, and that is the sum proposed by the Senate now.

Now you ask, "How did you reach the $9,000,000 sum?" We reached it in this way: The Government employed Price, Waterhouse & Co. to determine what the cost of this canal to its owners was, and they reported that it was something between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. Now, we acquire under this bill not alone the property upon which Price, Waterhouse & Co. reported but also some land and some additional things which go with the canal, which would make the value in excess of $9,000,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just one question there?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman think that the value of anything is necessarily determined by what it cost to build it? Is not that proposition a constantly losing proposition?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman asked a question. I want to answer it. The Government of the United States is getting very much the best of the bargain on the basis the gentleman refers to. The reconstruction value of this canal is at least twice what we are going to pay for it. If we started out to build a canal to-day—and we would have to dig one unless we acquired this—it would cost $18,000,000 instead of $9,000,000.

We are not paying them the replacement value, but the cost value in very cheap days, when it did not cost half as much as it does to-day. We would be willing to pay them more, in fairness and justice, except for one thing. This canal has not been a profitable canal. It will not be a profitable canal in its present state. It will not be a profitable canal unless it is improved. And so we say to these gentlemen, "You are selling us something which is of great value to us, to be sure; you are selling something which we would have to construct if we could not acquire it; but if you can get back, under the circumstances, just what it has cost you, that is a fair and reasonable price."

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In a moment. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say——

Mr. TINCHER. Then are you going to yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; before I stop.

I want to emphasize the fact that I do not believe any man who values human life, any man who believes in saving and preventing the wanton and unnecessary destruction of property, will for one moment entertain any belief except that this canal is a necessity. Everybody who has examined the question, everyone who is familiar with the loss of life, knows that this coming winter, unless this canal is taken over and operated, many lives will be lost and much property will be destroyed. Every man who believes in the intercoastal waterway must of necessity believe in this, the most important link in it. Every man who believes in shortening the routes of commerce and in saving transportation costs—and transportation costs constitute an important factor in the cost of living to-day——

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Every man who believes in shortening the distance between New York and New England believes in the acquisition of the Cape Cod Canal.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. How much will that be shortened?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Sixty-seven miles.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Eight miles through the canal will shorten the distance between New York and New England to the extent of 67 miles?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. Cape Cod runs out into the ocean almost in a narrow, straight line for a distance, I should say, of 125 or 150 miles. Now, in order to get from Boston to New York, for instance, unless you have this Cape Cod Canal, you have to go to the extreme end of this long, narrow point. If you have the Cape Cod Canal, you have a canal 8 miles long right through the inner part of the cape, so that a distance of 67 miles is saved by not going out to sea and coming back again.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I am very familiar with the geography of it, and I hope every Member of the House will fully understand the geography and the importance of bringing together the two sections of the country.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Did the gentleman's committee bring before it any Government officials and ask them to testify respecting this matter?

Mr. DEMPSEY. We had the statements of Government officials before us, submitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. TINCHER. I know that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce presented a bill to the House, and worked for 11 days on it, and had hearings on the subject. I think that could be a basis for us to act upon; but I want to know what information the conferees obtained in a small matter such as one requiring the authorization of the expenditure of $9,000,000. I want to know what they know about it. There is a proper way to legislate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Suppose they can not get it for $9,000,000. What harm is done? Is there any harm for the administrative officers of the Government to get it for $9,000,000?

Mr. TINCHER. Did the conferees have any transaction with the owners of the canal, or any communication with the owners of the canal?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will say to the gentleman that one of the conferees did go through everything he could find on the subject, and he read about it not only in the daytime but at night, and he read the hearings carefully, and found that they had been very elaborate; and he honestly believes, if the gentleman from Kansas will permit to say so, that he acts with all the evidence fully in mind, and——

Mr. TINCHER. Is that the way to treat the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce after they have had 11 days' hearings on a measure? Is it a fair way to legislate for one member of the committee to read hearings and then bring in a matter of this importance?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman may be assured that the House conferees did not seek this bill. They did not go out of their way to invite the Senate to send this to us. We are not to be blamed or criticized in any way, so far as I can see. The Senate placed this amendment on the bill, and we had, necessarily, if the gentleman from Kansas will permit me to say, to consider it; and in considering it we did what is ordinarily done by a committee. It is the ordinary way of legislating. We are sorry if we have offended the gentleman from Kansas, but we do not know how we could have avoided it.

Mr. TINCHER. I am not a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at all, and therefore I am not offended on that score; but I do not believe in that kind of parliamentary practice.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. If the House votes down the motion to recede, will it then be in order to make the preferential motion to further insist?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses to recede and concur, then it can further insist.

Mr. MADDEN. If the House refuses to recede?

Mr. BUTLER. If the House refuses to recede and concur, that is equivalent to further insisting.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether a negative vote on the motion to recede and concur is not equivalent to a motion to further insist on the disagreement of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this Cape Cod Canal has a long history. Sometime about 20 years ago Mr. Belmont and some of his associates undertook to build the canal. They built it for commercial purposes. They found they were not successful in the enterprise after they had built the canal. When the war came on they came over here and stated to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House that they had begun this enterprise for commercial purposes; that they had not succeeded; that it was a public institution, and they thought the Government ought to take it over. Then authority was granted to condemn under some war act, and condemnation proceedings were begun. Testimony was taken. Expert witnesses were placed on the stand in behalf of the canal owners. No witnesses whatever were placed on the stand for the Government. A tentative judgment was rendered for about $16,000,000. That judgment was certified down for payment. The Attorney General of the United States refused to recommend payment. Later on the matter was sent back, and the owners of the canal were willing to scale it down to $12,500,000. Then came further hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with a recommendation of $11,500,000, and now comes the conference report with the recommendation that we offer $9,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman suppose that we can do better yet? The price seems to be coming down. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I believe we ought not to pay a dollar; that we ought not to buy the canal at any price. [Applause.] In the first place, if you buy the canal you simply buy an opportunity to invest a lot more of the people's money. You can not operate the canal in its present condition. It will cost millions of dollars before the canal can be made navigable for ships of any consequence. There are 3,000 acres of land that go with the canal. Why it is there we do not know. We do not need the land, but everybody knows that if we buy this canal at any price we shall simply be starting out on a new project to make a new levy on the backs of the taxpayers of America.

The owners of this canal would not offer it to the Government of the United States if they were making money by its operation. This is another Dismal Swamp Canal, a larger project, to be sure, to cost more money, with more demands on the Government Treasury through this expenditure than there would be if we bought the Dismal Swamp Canal. You remember that you refused to do that this afternoon. Why not refuse to do this? Now is the time, and the way to get at this thing, gentlemen, is to vote down the motion to recede. If you vote down the motion to recede, then that is equivalent to a rejection and a further insistence upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment. If this question is going to be considered, let us consider it on its merits when we have the time to do it. Let us consider it some day when the House is in session with no expectation of immediate adjournment. Do not let us pass a bill like this, appropriating from the Treasury of the United States an immediate expenditure of $9,000,000, with the prospect of expending $50,000,000 more. To-day there is a bill pending on this subject which has been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That bill can be considered on its merits. There will be plenty of time to discuss it. But I do not believe any bill, this or any other in connection with this Cape Cod Canal, has any merit. We ought not to buy the canal. We ought not to impose further burdens on the backs of the American taxpayers at a time when everybody is pleading for Government economy. We have had to reject many meritorious needed improvements, many worthy activities of the Government, because we have not the money with which to meet the obligations. Now, why incur an obligation that is unnecessary to incur? This is not a necessity. It is not an immediate, urgent need, if it is a need at all. So why not wait and give the people a chance to think it over? Let them understand that this thing is pending. Let them make up their minds and you will hear from the people of America in opposition to the purchase of this canal and to the investment of the money of the American people in every other similar project. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], but before doing so I wish to say that the gentleman from Illinois said the people would have time, if they would wait, to consider this matter.

I hold in my hand hearings begun in 1919. This is 1922. So there have been three years of hearings. I also call the attention of gentlemen who may overlook it to the fact that a jury awarded $16,000,000 for this canal.

Mr. MADDEN. That was without any testimony on the part of the Government.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no; they had an abundance of testimony. We do not try cases before juries without testimony. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my position in respect to this bill is rather unusual. I am a resident of Massachusetts, where the canal exists and is operated day and night all the year around, winter and summer. I am chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has given 11 days to hearings and listened to the best type of witnesses that the country can afford, and has given three or four days to consideration of the bill in executive session, and has reported out a bill providing for the payment of a different sum of money than that recommended by the conferees.

This Cape Cod Canal business is an old proposition that dates back 100 years or more. I do not propose, however, to argue the merits of the Cape Cod Canal. It is not to the point with me for the moment. Two former Secretaries of War, the present Secretary of War, the present Secretaries of the Navy and of Commerce, in their official capacities, acting under authority granted by Congress, have made a trade with the Cape Cod Canal Co. for $11,500,000. The committee of three members of the Cabinet, to whom I have referred, came before our committee, and every one indorsed the project and every one approved the amount. We had engineers of the Army and a great number of witnesses, the most credible that we could find who knew anything about the subject. They all indorsed the project, and those who pretended to know anything about the cost and the value agreed in respect thereof. So we of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce find ourselves aggressively on the defensive in this matter. I hate ever to be on the defensive in anything, but I have to be this time. But I am not crowded against the wall. Do not think that.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has prepared a bill. We have printed elaborate hearings. We have heard many fine witnesses. Some of you may agree with us as to the merits of this project and some may not. That does not matter. We had arranged to have our bill considered by this House in a full and orderly manner, and we had withheld it for a good many weeks back when we might have forced it on the calendar if we had chosen to do so, because we wanted to give ample time for the discussion of the problem, which is rather involved and which ought to be described fully and clearly at the proper time. Now comes the committee representing this House in conference on this river and harbor bill. The three Cabinet Secretaries have agreed to $11,500,000. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have agreed to the same amount. The Senate committee of the United States have agreed to the same amount. The Senate has agreed to the same amount. Automatically, up to the time of the conference, those who represented the Senate must have agreed to the amount, because of the fact that they brought the bill into the Senate and then the Senate passed it, so that we now thin it down to the views of the members of the conference committee of this House who, with a superior burst of knowledge, covering as much as six or seven hours, or it may be less, of investigation of the whole subject of this great river and harbor bill, including the Cape Cod Canal, come before you and say they are so supreme in their judgment that you must set aside the opinions of all these other bodies and agencies which have determined that another amount is the proper amount. Now, in behalf of my committee—I say "my committee" because I love it and am a member of it, but I do not own it, because every man on that committee is a free agent—in behalf of my committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I say I do not like to have what is virtually a mushroom committee, as affecting this Cape Cod matter, come up here overnight and push us out of the way. We want you to consider the Cape Cod Canal as a matter worthy of consideration. Our friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], although he does not like the project, says that it is entitled to full and proper consideration.

When we are now to pass on the merits and arguing as to whether we ought to undertake to buy this canal for $9,000,000 instead of $11,500,000, I must question the wisdom of the selection of $9,000,000 as a right price to pay for this property, when the Secretaries have decided, subject to the approval of the Congress, that the higher figure is a proper figure. In the early part of the afternoon the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] very frankly and very properly, I am sure, said they had had no conversation whatever with the people who owned the canal, as to price or anything else.

The conferees did not ask the owners whether they would sell for $9,000,000, $11,000,000, or $7,000,000; they jumped and guessed $9,000,000. Why did they not guess $8,000,000 or $5,000,000, or any other old thing?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will tell the gentleman why——

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman [Mr. DEMPSEY] is a clever lawyer; he is skillful and wise. I admit it. He knows that any man can make figures mean anything if they are not explained or questioned. He has not told the whole story. He can say that two and two make four, and that is true, but it may be four horses or four apples. He has not told it all; he can not tell it all in an hour, if he ever could tell it. [Laughter.] I maintain that the House ought to take up the project itself and the proposed legislation for what it is worth and without whining or complaining. I do think the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee's efforts as represented by the hearings are worthy the consideration of Congress as contrasted with the snapshot judgment of five men who possibly never knew there was a Cape Cod Canal until the beginning of this week. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say to the gentleman that I can not avail myself of the five minutes. I understood the gentleman was to yield me——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Gentlemen on this side are very loath that I should yield any more time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then the gentleman can keep it. I will be kind to the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. I do not care to discuss the matter now.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I renew the parliamentary inquiry as to whether a negative vote on the motion to recede is tantamount to a rejection?

The SPEAKER. It is tantamount to a further disagreement to the Senate amendment. The question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 1, noes 109.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees Mr. DEMPSEY, Mr. FREEMAN, Mr. RADCLIFFE, Mr. MANSFIELD, and Mr. KINDRED.

VALIDATING CERTAIN APPLICATIONS FOR ENTRY ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report under the rule on the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for entry of public lands.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
I. L. LENROOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 12 authorize the issuance of patents in eight additional cases, all of which have the approval of E. C. Finney, Acting Secretary of the Interior, as shown by his letters set forth in Senate Report No. 833 on said bill (H. R. 10419).

The amendments numbered 8, 9, 10, and 11 change words from the singular to the plural.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the waterways of the United States and the State of New York in particular.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on a bill I have introduced abolishing the Railway Labor Board and settlement of railway disputes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ABOLITION OF RAILROAD LABOR BOARD AND TO PROVIDE MEANS FOR THE SETTLEMENT OF RAILROAD LABOR DISPUTES.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill (H. R. 12650) to amend the transportation act of 1920 by repealing Title III, establishing the Railroad Labor Board, and reestablishing in the place of the board the plan of mediation, conciliation, and voluntary arbitration provided by the so-called Newlands Act for the settlement of disputes between railroad companies and their employees.

I did not favor the establishment of the Railroad Labor Board, in the first place, when the transportation act was under consideration by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the House of Representatives. I am convinced that the policy of a Government tribunal attempting to fix wages of employees of any business or industry under private operation is entirely wrong in principle, and the Railroad Labor Board has failed to accomplish the purpose for which it was created; that is, to settle railroad labor disputes. Its decisions have been ignored by both the railroad management and the employees' organizations, and I believe the activities and the very existence of the board have served to widen the gap between the railroad companies and their workers. The board has simply offered an opportunity for the expression of the views and the spreading of propaganda by the champions of both sides of the labor question, thus adding fuel to the flames, increasing the bitterness, and resulting finally in the recent strike with its great losses and inconvenience to the public.

LABOR BOARD IGNORED IN SETTLEMENT.

The settlement which has been finally reached between many of the railroad companies and the shopmen was the result of private negotiations and is a voluntary agreement in which the Railroad Labor Board took no part and was entirely ignored.

For some time past the transportation brotherhoods and many of the important railroad systems have been establishing regional boards of adjustment for the settlement of railroad labor questions, and I believe that these boards, together with the efforts of mediators and conciliators who would be available under the provisions of a law similar to the Newlands Act, offer the best possible means of dealing with the railroad labor problem under existing conditions.

RAILROAD MEN WANT BOARD ABOLISHED.

The legislative representatives of the railroad engineers, firemen, conductors, and trainmen have recently united in formally urging upon Congress the desirability of repealing that part of the transportation act which created the Railroad Labor Board and reestablishing the provisions of the Newlands Act in its stead. They declare the Newlands Act to have been the most effective method that has ever been devised in this or any other country for the adjustment of railroad labor disputes. I was much impressed by the recent testimony of Mr. Edgar Wallace, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, before our committee during the recent consideration of the bills to prevent coal profiteering. Mr. Wallace called attention to the fact that the only industries in which there have been labor disputes seriously threatening the public welfare since the war, namely, the railroads and the coal mines, were the industries which the Government controlled during the war and in which the Government attempted to fix prices and wages. He said that the Government's activities, instead of preventing disturbance, had caused disturbance, and that the workers, in looking to the Government for their wages, will hold the Government responsible for any disagreeable circumstances that arise in their life because of the wages they fail to get.

GOVERNMENT GETS BLAME.

The blame is put on the Government, and I doubt if the Government itself can stand under these circumstances—

He said—

I repeat that the fact is that when the owners of the industry and their men were let go untrammeled, each recognizing the other's rights, they had no such disturbances, and the sooner we get back to that condition the sooner we will have eliminated the periodical disturbances.

I agree with Mr. Wallace. I do not think that the reestablishment of the Newlands Act will be an absolute guaranty against strikes, but I do not know of any better plan by which the Government can do its best to prevent strikes and labor disputes on the railroads. In the last analysis the success of any Government intervention in disputes of this kind will depend upon the confidence which the parties to the dispute have in the Government's disinterestedness and fairness, and in the justice of the Government's attitude. Compulsory arbitration does not seem to me to be advisable or practical. It has been the history of labor disputes that one side or the other always feels that compulsory arbitration, so called, works an injustice, and unless arbitration is agreed to in full confidence and good faith, its decision will not settle the question at issue, and perhaps only make things worse. It is impossible to make men work by law without imposing some kind of involuntary servitude which would be contrary to the fundamental principles upon which this country was founded. In order to get effective, productive work out of men they must be convinced that they are receiving fair treatment and just wages.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BE NEUTRAL.

It seems to me that if the Government had not already been involved in the recent railroad labor disputes on account of the decisions of the Railroad Labor Board, the efforts of the President in trying to arrange for a settlement by arbitration or some other means would have been much more successful. Under a law such as the Newlands Act the Government takes the position of a neutral authority representing the entire public, which should always be the position of the Government.

It is with great gratification that I note that the railroad companies and their workers are getting together now and reaching agreements by which they may cooperate to serve the public. I believe that recent developments mark the return to the old days when the railroad managers and the representatives of the men who run the trains and keep them in condition met face to face and thrashed out all differences as to wages and working conditions. I would like to call attention to a statement by W. H. Finley, president of the Chicago & North Western Railroad, who said:

SETTLEMENTS BEING MADE.

Our shopmen have asked us to meet their leaders, and we will proceed to make an individual settlement with our men. I think it is a good thing that the roads are now making individual settlements. It puts these matters back where they belong, between the persons most interested, the roads and the men who work for them.

I believe that these agreements would have been reached long ago if it had not been for the existence of the Railroad Labor Board, because both sides to the railroad labor disputes would then have realized that there was no place to which they could "pass the buck" and would accordingly have assumed the responsibility themselves.

The Pennsylvania and New York Central systems are now rapidly making agreements with their employees, and others will follow their example. It seems to me that the Railroad Labor Board has not only been a trouble maker in the past, but in the future will be a useless expense to the Government and the taxpayers.

We are trying to get our wage problems and working conditions out of the hands of politicians—

Says W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Congress should help the railroad executives and workers to get together and stay together in the interests of the public service by promptly abolishing the Railroad Labor Board.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8073. An act for the relief of Kineo Trust Co.;

H. R. 10874. An act to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes;

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one month on account of urgent business.

REPORTS OF THE GOVERNORS OF PORTO RICO AND THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER. The reports of the governors of Porto Rico and the Philippines, transmitted some time ago, are ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the stabilizing of the circulating medium.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] at the Ohio Republican State convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an address of Representative FESS, chairman of the Republican State Convention, Columbus, Ohio, August 22, 1922.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF SIMEON D. FESS, CHAIRMAN OF THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION, COLUMBUS, OHIO, AUGUST 22, 1922.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the convention, I accept the honor you tender me as temporary chairman to preside over the deliberations of this convention, in which, in pursuance of the law, we are met to draft a platform of principles upon which the campaign is to be conducted. This platform of principles will be viewed from two angles, Federal and State. I choose to address myself to the national problems and leave it to others more familiar than I to speak of the State problems.

Less than 18 months ago a Republican President took up the administration of the affairs of the Government, supported by a strong Republican majority in both Senate and House. The country was extremely fortunate in the type of leader it exalted to the head of affairs. The President at once sought the counsel of the leading minds of America and surrounded himself with a Cabinet that does not suffer in comparison with any Cabinet of our history.

The problems inherited from the world's greatest convulsion were such as never greeted a President before. The readjustments of dislocations and interruptions—industrially, financially, socially, and governmentally—presented problems never before offered for solution. The complications at the outset were so great that they were bewildering. These were both foreign and domestic.

The war, which literally involved the entire world, notwithstanding the decisive part we played in it, ended with somewhat strained relations with almost every country, including those with whom we had been associated, growing out of an agreement in Europe that the United States was to be a part of a supergovernment under a proposed League of Nations, which this country refused to ratify, but which it decisively rejected.

The Wilson administration refused to end the war except upon condition of our entering the European league, even after his repudiation in the elections of 1918. Actual war had ended in November, 1918, with the armistice. Peace was restored between the Central Powers and our associates upon the ratification of the treaty, including the League of Nations provision. Trade and diplomatic relations were consequently at once resumed between the European countries, but not between the Central Powers and the United States.

A Republican House and Senate undertook to end this intolerable situation of the existence of technical war, with all its complications of broken-off diplomatic and trade relations while our former associates had resumed such relations, and passed a resolution ending technical war as actual war had been ended. This resolution met defeat by a presidential veto, and thus was presented the necessity of peace as the first problem to the new administration.

Our relations had been strained with Great Britain over Mesopotamia, with Panama and Costa Rica, with Colombia, with Mexico, Russia, and Japan. One by one these disputes were taken up. Our differences with Great Britain were in due time composed with honor and satisfaction to both parties. The same result was reached with Colombia, Panama, and Costa Rica.

The way was opened and the terms clearly defined upon which adjustment with Mexico can be reached. That country has been informed that no recognition of the Obregon government can be made until the rights of American citizens are respected, as outlined in the communication. The same thing can be said of our relations with Russia. No international agreements will be entered into with any country that will not respect the sanctity of private contract.

The one outstanding dispute which would not compose was with Japan, involving ominous Pacific problems, including the Yap Island episode, in which Japan relied upon the Versailles treaty for her contention. It was this situation which led the President to induce Japan to agree to include in the agenda of the arms conference oriental and Pacific questions.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, the arms conference is now history. Its record is made up and is open to the world. It had before it two sets of great problems—first, relief of burdens from an increasing armament due to a foolish rivalry in navy and army; and secondly, oriental problems, including those of China and the islands of the Pacific. You know the skillful as well as wise diplomacy necessary to secure consent even to discuss the latter problems, some of which had been claimed by treaty obligations.

I ask you to look at the record of that conference. It was in session three months. It represented the great powers of earth. It took up the question of limitation of armament on the sea. At the very first meeting, in the presence of the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of this Government, the proposals 1, 2, 3 were submitted, without argument or generalization, but by a concrete program, submitted for adoption or rejection. In due time all these were accepted by all the nations, and rivalry on the sea is at an end. It then took up the Pacific problems in all their ramifications, resulting in complete agreement, conceding to our Nation her contention on the Yap Island, and a cancellation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which had been a source of deep concern for 20 years.

The influence of the President led Japan to agree to go into conversations with China to discuss the Shantung provision of the treaty which could not have been brought up in the open conference, since it was protected by treaty obligations. But through the urgency of the American Government these two countries entered upon the discussion, and finally ended in a treaty signed by both nations returning Shantung to China, thus correcting the greatest wrong committed by the Versailles treaty.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, there in the Capital of the Republic sat for three months representatives of the powers of the world. One by one these questions were proposed, discussed, and voted on with our Government calling the roll of the world. We note every proposal submitted and voted upon in the plenary conferences had been submitted by some one of the American delegation. Every proposal voted upon was adopted. But the most significant of all facts is that not a single proposal received a single adverse vote from any nation. Here, by unanimous agreement, armament on the sea is limited, rivalry on the sea is ended, use of poisonous gas is abolished, the submarine is limited under international law. The magna charta of China is guaranteed. The "open door," for which we have ever contended, agreed upon; our rights in the Pacific admitted; treaty provision for adjustment of Pacific problems arbitrated; Shantung restored to China; Anglo-Japanese alliance canceled; all in all an achievement pronounced by European opinion, no less than Lloyd-George and Paul Hymans, a recent president of the League of Nations, as the greatest work for world peace in the history of the world. It was all done without show or noise. It is with pardonable pride that out of this caldron of almost universal warfare, with every relation more or less strained by both actual war and the unhappy confusion to follow after the war, this Nation has emerged with its sovereignty untouched, its independence intact, its rights all conserved, its disputes generally composed, its rivalries allayed, its friendships with all nations strengthened, its moral leadership universally conceded, the wrongs of China corrected, and the way opened for composure in the Orient. I challenge the record to produce a greater achievement in the history of diplomacy. Ohio Republicans in convention assembled will not overlook the fact that this record has been achieved under the leadership supplied by our beloved State in the person of our own Warren G. Harding. Washington inaugurated constitutional government; Jefferson, through the purchase of Louisiana, took the first step in national expansion; and Lincoln preserved the Union. To these three great events we now add a fourth in this recent step toward world peace.

May I also call to your attention the fact of the universal agreement that one of the greatest accomplishments of that international body was the abolition of the use of poisonous gases. This convention will not overlook the fact that this great result so far-reaching in its humanitarian call was due to the leadership of a man who now sits upon this platform, the next Governor of Ohio, Carmi A. Thompson.

Brilliant as has been the handling of our diplomacy so sorely disturbed by the war, the administration has been equally successful if not so brilliant in its conduct of home affairs. The President called Congress into special session one month after he was inaugurated. The peace resolution to end the war so as to resume diplomatic and trade relations was taken up, passed, and signed by the President. Thus the intolerable situation which had persisted for over two years was ended without the loss of any American rights involved by the war. On the other hand, provision was made for adjusting disputes with Germany through a commission to be made up of a member chosen by the United States, another by Germany, a third by a neutral country to be agreed upon. Only 10 days ago Germany displayed her belief in America's fairness by suggesting that instead of the third being chosen from a neutral he be left to the choice of the United States. Our own distinguished Justice Day of the Supreme Court will be the one chosen.

The ordinary work of every session of Congress is to pass the supply bills, making available the necessary funds to run the Government. These must all be enacted before the beginning of the fiscal year July 1. At its best this is a stupendous work, but the war which built up a war establishment that cost the enormous sum of $27,000,000,000 in 1918 and $19,000,000,000 in 1919, and which was reduced to $4,066,000,000 last year, has made this part of the work of Congress tremendously burdensome. Next year we have the charge reduced to $3,977,000,000. This sum, which is three times larger than the cost of the Government before the war, represents the minimum for some time to come.

This war placed fixed charges upon the Treasury of two and a quarter billion dollars which were unknown before the war. We have near a billion on interest on the public debt, near $400,000,000 for sinking fund to care for the public debt, almost $500,000,000 for care of disabled soldiers, and additional charges for shipping, and still other charges that will total two and one-quarter billion. That leaves only one and a half billion to care for the demands of the Government, which is close to the normal cost.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, this Congress, charged by the enemy as a "do nothing" body, took up one supply bill after another, considered each in the closest detail, and had the fourteenth or last one before the President by the end of the fiscal year, an achievement not made by the Democrats any year of the 10 years they controlled the House. While these supply bills totaled nearly $4,000,000,000, they showed a saving over the last year of Democratic control of $15,000,000,000, which fact indicates the difficulty over appropriations in ordinary times.

The President found a debt, which in 1916 was less than $1,000,000,000, increased to $25,000,000,000 with an annual interest charge larger than the total cost of running the Government before the war. He found an annual expenditure four times what is was in 1916, due to a persistent war machine not yet dismantled. He found an overpadded pay roll which had leaped in the Capital from 37,000 in 1917 to 119,000 in 1919. He had witnessed an orgy of waste and extravagance that bewildered the citizen accustomed to economic administration. He saw duplication of effort and wild speculation in legislation.

This Congress at once responded to the wishes of the President in respect to his program of economy. It was outlined and steps taken to put it in operation.

(1) Dismantle the war machine.
(2) Establish at once a national budget system.
(3) Cut every appropriation to the bone.
(4) Guard against all duplication and consequent waste.
(5) Defer all legislation not emergent that carries heavy outlays on the Treasury.

In accordance with this program the work of dismantling began. We reduced the Army from the recommendation of Baker of 576,000 men to 150,000 men. We reduced the Navy from 193,000 men to 86,000 men. On the two arms of defense we saved the people over $1,000,000,000 annual expense. These establishments to-day cost us for the Army, $256,411,169 and for the Navy, $294,336,577, making a total of $550,747,746. The pay roll in Washington has been reduced from 119,000 to 73,000. It is estimated that over 122,726 persons were dropped from the pay roll throughout the country. These vast reductions were made possible by the inauguration of a business budget plan.

During the Sixty-sixth Congress a Republican Congress sent to President Wilson a complete Budget bill for his approval. This was promptly killed by his veto, since it could not be passed over his veto, lacking the two-thirds vote required to do it. Immediately after the inauguration of Harding the bill was reintroduced and passed. It was signed by the President and took effect at the beginning of the fiscal year. For the first time in our history the greatest business on earth—the Government of the United States—is conducted as a well-regulated business concern. Here are 14 separate appropriation bills instead of coming from as many different committees each rivaling the other to see how much money could be gotten out of the Treasury. Under the new plan they all come from one committee, which views all the claims in the entirety, compelling the outgo to be somewhat determined both by the needs and, secondly, the income available. For the first time in our history we see the President call together the bureau heads for cooperation in the work of elimination of duplication and waste. We see about the consultation table these heads, with the Budget Director and perhaps the chairmen of the Appropriations Committees of House and Senate, all acting under the law which makes the Executive responsible for the estimates and a penalty attached to any Government officer who creates without authority a deficit. An independent audit is created to insure decision free from influence from whatever source. Here in the application of the business budget principle is the explanation of the remarkable success in a national balanced Budget. This law will take its place in the history of constructive legislation as one of the most far-reaching acts in this generation.

Strict adherence to the program of economy as outlined has enabled the administration to make the enormous savings. As an example of irresponsible demands before this system was adopted, the estimates made in 1920 and 1921 by the Wilson administration were cut by a Republican Congress by the amount of $2,950,000,000. These savings gave the basis for tax revision for which the President asked at an early date. The war-time taxation system was partially abolished and otherwise revised. We repealed the excess-profits tax, the most unscientific system. This was done against the Democratic opposition in both House and Senate. We also reduced the high surtax in the House from 65 to 32 per cent, which was placed at 50 per cent in the Senate. We also repealed the transportation tax in the interest of cheaper transportation. We also repealed the nuisance taxes. In the tax measure we saved the people $835,000,000 annually on their tax bill, a saving greater than the total cost of the Government in 1912. This measure was resisted in House and Senate by Democratic opposition.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I believe you will agree with me that the financing of this administration is one of the most signal accomplishments of our national existence.

Our national public debt on May 3, 1919, was $25,916,874,096. This debt on June 30, 1922, was $22,963,381,708. The reduction amounts to $2,953,492,388. Under Republican administration we do not only live within our income but this country has actually reduced its debt nearly $3,000,000,000. Only two countries in Europe, Britain and Denmark, have been able to balance their budgets.

President Harding found a floating debt of $3,000,000,000, that is, an unfunded obligation to the banks due every six months, a hand to mouth policy which tied up at least $7,000,000,000 of commercial credit, which ought to be released and made available for productive industry. The Harding administration immediately changed the policy and financed the obligations in a series of 1 to 3 years maturity. At first these ruled 5¾ per cent. Today they are readily taken at 4½ per cent, and annual savings of $37,000,000 of interest. This policy also relieves the money market, so that credit facilities are much improved and Government securities in great demand. Liberties which were 15 per cent discount are today all above par. Interest rates are lower, rediscount rates reduced from 7 to 4 per cent. Investments are stabalized, and all business on a sounder footing, in spite of the disturbances in transportation and the coal industry.

This administration found agriculture prostrated through the rapid liquidation from the peak of war prices. The overstimulus of an unlimited foreign demand had advanced prices far above normal, and when the war suddenly ended the demand ceased, and our supply could not be sold even at prices far below the cost of production; financial obligations could not be met and for a time it appeared that bankruptcy faced the first industry of the land. Some immediate relief was imperative. The administration took up the question of farm rehabilitation, assembled the best minds on agricultural science for conferences in Washington. Congress created the agricultural inquiry commission to gather data upon which relief legislation might be enacted. Note the accomplishment. The War Finance Corporation was revived temporarily to assist financing the farmer. The agricultural export aid bill authorized this corporation to loan one-half billion dollars to European merchantmen upon safe security on condition that it was to be expended in the purchase of American agricultural products. This revived an export market. The emergency tariff bill was enacted protecting agriculture from foreign competition.

Two separate measures were enacted to amend the farm loan act to further provide credit facilities by (1) enhancing the sale of farm loan bonds to insure a necessary loan fund, and (2) increase of $25,000,000 to be added to the amount already permitted for loan purposes. The cooperative marketing bill which permits the principle of collective bargaining in agricultural distribution was enacted into law.

The Federal reserve act was amended to permit agricultural interests the same representation on the board as the industrial and financial already provided in the law.

One hundred and forty million dollars were authorized as Federal aid to road building. In addition to these measures there were enacted two protective measures strongly urged by the agricultural interests—the packer regulation law and the grain futures law.

Here is a program of legislation pronounced by no less an authority than William Jennings Bryan as the most important agricultural relief legislation yet enacted into law. Republicans do not hesitate to quote the "Commoner" on a statement of fact. I commend this statement to the Democratic propagandist who parrotlike repeats the nonsense that this Congress has done nothing.

The cessation of the great convulsion, with its train of industrial complications, was bound to disclose the dangerous results of general business inflation which would most seriously avert the industrial problem and especially augment the suffering of the workers of the country through an enormous unemployment which had reached the 5,000,000 figure by the time Harding was inaugurated. The hopeless condition in Europe, debt ridden for generations to come, economically deranged through a demoralized fiscal system, with such complete breakdown as to lead to an exodus to get from under the load, pointed to an inevitable flood of immigration that would not only vastly increase the unemployment here but would further complicate the administrative problems of the Government. Congress at once enacted legislation further limiting immigration to 3 per cent of the nationals now in the United States. Subsequent events demonstrate the importance of this legislation.

The President called Congress into special session to proceed upon the revision of the tariff law, so as to reduce the unemployment by encouraging American enterprise in the investment in productive industry of American capital at a reasonable profit in the employment of American labor on such scale of wages as to insure an American standard of living. The administration wisely pursued the policy of profitable enterprise here at home in order to insure steady employment as the best possible governmental policy toward American labor.

This administration as rapidly as conditions would permit emerged from the former policy of Government operation so as to open the way for private enterprise upon the basis of efficiency, so as to increase the product and decrease the cost, which is in the interest not only of both capital and labor but especially of the public. The tariff measure is now completed, awaiting final action, which will not be long delayed. This act will be in the interest of American labor, since there is no American labor if American enterprise is displaced by foreign competition, which the tariff legislation seeks to relieve. I warn you now on the character of campaign by our opponents against this legislation already opened. They are making ridiculous charges of increased cost of living due to this legislation. You will recall the campaign against McKinley and his defeat after the passage of the McKinley bill in 1890, when the Democratic organization sent out their tin peddlers to show the effect of the law. Yet that law started the tin industry, which in time produced not only our own needs but made us the greatest exporting nation of the product. Keep this in mind when you hear these threadbare free-trade mouthings of our Democratic orators.

Among the problems inherited from the war the care for the disabled soldier, numbering among the hundreds of thousands, costing annually nearly one-half billion dollars, was very urgent. President Harding found a disorganized administration of this service, with little coordination of the War Risk Bureau, Public Health Service, and Vocational Education Board, each of which had to do with the disabled man. The delay and indecision due to this lack of unity became a source of almost universal complaint. This administration took up the problem, created the Veterans' Bureau, centralized all this service under one head, with remarkable success in expediting these cases demanding Government attention.

The doubling of the American electorate by the admission of women to the privilege of franchise emphasized the importance of certain remedial legislation. The Women's Bureau was accordingly created by this administration to study the problems and look after women in industry. The maternity bill was drafted and enacted into law in fulfillment of promises made in the platforms of both the great political parties. It is the first act of the humanitarian program the women of America have requested to be placed on the statute books.

Two items of legislation demanded by the moral forces of the country were the antinarcotic act and the antibeer act, both of which were written into law by general unanimity.

During the war we loaned Europe nearly $10,000,000,000, which with unpaid interest amounts to more than $11,000,000,000. Much agitation has been heard for the cancellation of these loans. This administration, recognizing the justice of these obligations, gave no heed to this agitation, especially in the light of our demanding no territory nor indemnity while our associates gathered in from all quarters these spoils of war, created a Foreign Debt Commission with authority to put the debt in the form of bonds that it may be financed, and thus end the idle talk about cancellation of the debt. This commission is now at work in Europe.

Fellow Republicans of the convention, you have heard from Democratic orators and have read in Democratic organs that this Congress has done nothing. That propaganda was decided upon in the city of Washington soon after Congress met in special session in 1921. It was decided that criticism of President Harding would be unwise and unnecessary in 1921 and 1922, since he is not running for an office. War conditions, it was agreed, would persist, and that would permit an issue. We can safely ascribe the situation to inaction of Congress. That policy was decided upon at an early day. Ever since that time this propaganda has been worked overtime. We in Washington learned at the time of the decision and have naturally been watching the progress such propaganda is making. At first some headway was made until a catalogue of accomplishments of the Harding administration was published. Then the tactics changed and attacks began to be made upon the President over the shoulders of his Cabinet. At first it was Weeks, then Mellon, then Hughes, than Hoover, and now it is Daugherty. People will not overlook the fact that these attacks are centered not so much against the Cabinet but the head of the Nation responsible for the Cabinet. But the real issue they will attempt to make will be the existence of war dislocations and consequent dissatisfaction which will be laid by the Democratic orators to Congress for alleged inactivity.

Fellow Republicans of the convention, the inevitable waste of war is readily conceded by all our citizens. The hopeless inefficiency, the extravagance and mismanagement of the Wilson administration are known to all and admitted by most of our people, even tacitly by the Democrats in their charge that we have not corrected the evils. For this record and the effort to surrender this Nation to a league of supergovernment, the Democratic Party was repudiated in a fashion never known in the history of American politics. Republicans in control by an overwhelming vote to take steps to correct these conditions were inclined to overlook this wastefulness of the Wilson administration, mark it off as so much loss to war, so far as possible forget it, or at least refrain from disturbing their opponents by further recital of the unfortunate details of mismanagement.

This we would do in this campaign were the Democratic Party leaders decent enough to admit the fact and to accept the situation. But when Democratic desperation in seeking an issue extends to the charge that these conditions, hopeless as they are, and created by their own inefficient management, and which can not possibly be cured overnight, when they charge that these conditions are due to the Republican administration, it becomes necessary for us to refresh the minds of the people on the facts, even if we must again refer to the nauseating condition of the miserable mess they left us. If that mess has not been cleaned up within the time we have been in control it is simply because the task is beyond human ability to do it. Our opponents will make no headway in their senseless charge that Congress has done nothing when made in the face of the facts as they exist. No well-informed man with the sense of self-respect, and desirous of the good opinion of his fellow men, will seriously make such a statement. If the facts were not of record, such statements might serve as campaign material; but the record is an open book, the facts can be read by all who want the truth, and will be gotten to the people in due time, when the author of such senseless utterances will be made to look like 30 cents, especially when confronted by the voter who is appealed to for support on such flimsy statements.

Fellow Republicans, I mentioned some of the outstanding events of this reconstruction Congress. Those repeated are but a few of the many measures which make up the stupendous volume of legislation enacted this session. By the end of the last fiscal year—June 30, 1922—this Congress had already placed upon the statute books 398 separate laws, or 1¼ laws for every legislative day during the entire session. If we add to this list the bills which had passed the House but not yet acted upon by the Senate it would make 2½ bills for each day during the session. No congress in our history has enacted either the volume of legislation or the number of valuable constructive bills when measured by the importance to the country.

A mere recital of what the situation was when Harding took office in comparison, or, rather, in contrast, with what it now is, is sufficient. The administration found the Nation at war, to-day it is at peace. It found its relations with both our former enemy countries and our associates, as well as some neutral countries, seriously disturbed. To-day, outside of Mexico and Russia, our differences are composed and our diplomatic and trade relations resumed. It found the world hopeless under the cumulative burdens of war. Since Harding took the helm the Nation has set the example for limitation of arms on land and has led the world into an agreement to end rivalry on the sea.

It found the Pacific regions and the Orient restless under rival suspicions, but before the end of the first year the Harding administration had composed these differences and had set up the machinery for international adjustments in the future. It found a public debt of $25,000,000,000. To-day we see it reduced by the enormous figure of $2,953,000,000. It found a seriously disturbed fiscal situation due to heedless extravagance. To-day we see inaugurated a business budget system, and as a result in the first year a saving which will amount to at least $2,000,000 per day every day since the inauguration of Harding. It found a floating debt of $3,000,000,000 tying up at least $7,000,000,000 of commercial credit, ranging at high rate of interest, on a hand-to-mouth policy. Within a short time the Harding administration had financed the debt at a saving of at least $37,000,000 interest and released the enormous assets for commercial purposes. It found money in hiding, emerging only when tempted at high rates of interest. To-day through a wise Treasury administration in which the policy of the business man rather than the speculator is adopted, money is easier, rates are lower, investments increased, and all kinds of legitimate business revived. It found Government securities ranging as low as 15 per cent discount. To-day under this administration all Libertys are either at or above par. Harding found agriculture prostrated through rapid liquidation. Through a specific concrete program of rehabilitation agriculture is again normal or as nearly so as conditions through which we came will permit. He found all industry paralyzed with 5,000,000 men out of employment. To-day industry is rapidly approaching normal and unemployment steadily disappearing. Outside of the unhappy disturbance in the coal and transportation industries, industrial conditions are most promising. Symptoms of agreement in the coal industry are noticed and the adjustment of transportation disputes will come soon as the public welfare demands it. When these adjustments are reached, we will very soon enter upon a period of prosperity which, in my judgment, will eclipse anything in our experience in times of peace. Industrial unrest is passing and the last hope of Democratic success is fading. Republican administration of the finances, its policy of encouragement of enterprise, its readjustment of foreign disputes, all are conducive to this end.

Above and beyond all other good fortune which has come from Republican influence and control as now directed, current events in Europe compel our people's gratitude for their escape from that seething caldron of rival jealousies. We are not in this vortex, thanks to a Republican Senate which refused to surrender and permitted the American people to render its verdict, and we announce again to the world that we will not enter it. Harding found a nation still in a state of war two years after war had ceased, because his predecessor chose to make entrance into the European league a condition of peace. To-day we are at peace with the world, notwithstanding the continuance of war in many quarters over which that league has jurisdiction. Never before has the Nation occupied such a position of independence and strategy to exert a wholesome influence for peace, and that position has been secured without endangering our own independence or our sovereignty.

Ladies and gentlemen of the convention, this record of achievement has materialized because Republican legislation is constructive and not destructive. It is for the public weal rather than for class interest. It looks to the encouragement of business rather than the intimidation of either employer or employee. Republican policy aspires to the maintenance of the open door to opportunity to work at the best possible wage, rather than to be placed in open and unhindered competition with a lower-wage-scale country. These facts, known to the administration, will be made known to the people at large. In the light of this record we challenge our opponents to show a better. Upon this record we will go to the people for their verdict.

No American citizen who loves his country need offer an apology for the position America holds under our leader. No administration ever faced such problems, and no former President ever had such foreign complications. No Congress ever came into power with a greater program to be carried out. No Congress ever enacted such a volume of legislation. No administration ever put on the statute books as great a percentage of the pledges made in the campaign. Republicans invite the sharpest scrutiny of this administration. We are standing upon a great record. The achievements are many and simply wonderful. Never before did the Nation occupy such sublime position of leadership in the world. Arthur Balfour rightly spoke, upon leaving America, when he said, "Up to this time we called ourselves equal but no longer; America now leads the world." To the brilliant foreign policy which gives us this position we invite our opponents and challenge them to reject it. To the wonderful accomplishments at home, which I need not further recite in detail, we challenge any leader of any party to undo any act we have thus far placed upon the statute books.

Fellow Republicans, I have confined what I had to say to the national situation, leaving to others to speak on the State record. I wish to felicitate you, the representatives of the Republicans of a great State, upon the prospect this year under the leadership both at Washington and Columbus.

I speak from some experience, and wish now to state for your encouragement that Republicans will control by a very substantial majority both the House and Senate in the Sixty-eighth Congress. While our majority in the House will most likely be reduced, in the Senate it will be increased. Recent surveys lead me to the belief that we will add Republican Senators from the States of Wyoming, Montana, Utah, Nebraska, Missouri, Ohio, and Rhode Island. Whatever may happen in other States, the people of Ohio will not allow any semblance of repudiation of the national administration under the leadership of a great son of Ohio. The people of this State will also continue the Republican Party in power in the State by decisive majorities.

It will be history only repeating itself. The Republican Party was born to prevent the extension of slavery throughout free territory. It was at once called into power to preserve the Union from disruption through secession. In that struggle it struck the shackles from the limbs of an entire race. This mission fulfilled, it took up the work of reconstruction of the Nation, and continued in power for a half century with but two interruptions. In 1912, through an unfortunate rift in our ranks, our opponents came into power and at once inaugurated the "new freedom" which opened the Pandora box, with all its possible consequences. At the end of four years of this régime the "he kept us out of war" persuaded the people to continue the régime four more years. Eight years of this leadership was far too much. As the Republican Party was called to abolish slavery, preserve the Union, and reconstruct the Nation's fortunes in an early day, and later to build up the American system of industry, and preserve the sound-money principle as against the policy of 16 to 1, and still later to arouse the national conscience on the importance of obedience to law and order, so in 1920, by the most overwhelming vote ever cast in the history of elections, the American people again turned to the Republican Party to remove the wreckage of war, rebuild the broken fortunes of the people, restore constitutional government, and renew allegiance to the pledge of American independence and national sovereignty. This mammoth task is not yet entirely completed. No citizen who knows the situation will be willing to contemplate the impossible suggestion that the people just emerging from this fatality would entertain for a single moment the proposal to return the management to the party responsible for the conditions now burdening them. As in all other instances in the past 70 years, when such crises are pending Republican leadership is kept in control. Fellow Republicans, I again thank you and extend my congratulation upon the promise of great success all down the line, as indicated by the Republican interest displayed in the recent primary election and now demonstrated by this convention, remarkable for its militant enthusiasm and unanimity.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair by mistake referred the bill (S. 3611) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to abrogate a contract lease of water power on the Muskingum River to the Committee on Military Affairs. Without objection it will be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, September 18, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

687. A letter from the Secretary of War transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Pawcatuck River, R. I. and Conn.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

688. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy, and the War Department Supply Division, of typewriters and adding machines that have been exchanged during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1922, as part payment for new labor-saving devices; to the Committee on Appropriations.

689. A letter from the Acting Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, transmitting a statement as of June 1, 1922, giving in detail the total number of positions at a rate of $2,000 or more per annum; to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MOORES of Indiana: Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers. H. Report No. 1237. A report on proceeds from sale of useless papers in Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, Navy, State, and War, and the Smithsonian Institution. Ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOCHT: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 2040. An act to provide for compulsory school attendance of children, to provide for the taking of a school census, to create the department of school attendance and work permits for the administration of this act and the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, within the District of Columbia; with amendments (Rept. No. 1238). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KLINE of New York: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 12648. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Brooklyn Museum the silver service which was presented to the cruiser Brooklyn by citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1239). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FAIRCHILD (by request): A bill (H. R. 12683) to form national unions and creating, as part of the Department of Labor, a commission for enrollment of workers, unions, and employers of labor, defining the powers and duties of said commission, prescribing its officers, clerks, and agents, their salaries and compensation, and providing penalties for the violation of this act; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 12684) to provide home care for dependent children; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 12685) to provide for the recovery of damages for mental anguish in the absence of bodily injury against telegraph companies for negligence in receiving, transmitting, and delivering messages; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LANGLEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 378) to create a commission to consider the proposal of a central building for art and industry in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. TILSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 379) to extend for three months the provisions of the dye and chemical control act, 1921; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 68) changing the enrollment of House bill 7456; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRITTEN: A resolution (H. Res. 432) regarding world's peace and industry; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 12686) for the relief of Irene Brand; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 12687) granting a pension to Della E. Hudson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOGAN: A bill (H. R. 12688) for the relief of Annie O'Neill; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 12689) granting a pension to Eva Gray Copeland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McARTHUR: A bill (H. R. 12690) granting a pension to Alice M. Older; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MALONEY: A bill (H. R. 12691) granting a pension to Sabina Kearins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 12692) granting a pension to William K. Wythe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12693) granting an increase of pension to Arthur N. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12694) granting an increase of pension to Walter S. Thomas; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12695) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Ross; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REECE: A bill (H. R. 12696) granting a pension to Oscar Sheffield; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12697) granting an increase of pension to Joseph A. Lillard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 12698) granting a pension to Mabel Ortz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ADDRESS BY COL. C. R. FORBES (S. DOC. NO. 260).

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, this morning Col. C. R. Forbes, Director of the Veterans' Bureau, delivered an address to a conference of district managers, a copy of which I hold in my hand, being a résumé of the work of the Veterans' Bureau. It is so comprehensive and suggestive of what has been done and ought to be done that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type; and I believe also it ought to be made a public document. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks that a certain paper which he holds in his hand may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, and that it also be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF COL. C. R. FORBES, AT DISTRICT MANAGERS' CONFERENCE, SEPTEMBER 18, 1922.

Gentlemen, I welcome you to the second annual conference of district managers and officers having charge of the medical and rehabilitation work of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

I have observed your work very closely since our last conference. I have been mindful of my promises to you, and I have remembered your promises to me. I can not say that in every instance you have fulfilled your part or our agreement, and it may be that all I hoped to do has not been possible. I do not, however, attribute to you any neglect of duty nor charge you with any negligence toward the program, and I do sense your confidence that anything I may not have been able to accomplish did not materialize for a good and sufficient reason. Such failures as have occurred, I believe, should have been expected in the normal process of development.

Decentralization has taken place since our last conference. You have had at least six months to put into effect those policies which have been promulgated and transmitted to you in part at the last conference and in part subsequently by letter or by formal orders, regulations, or bulletins.

It has, no doubt, occurred to you on numerous occasions and has been brought also to your attention by many who are interested in this big problem that with decentralization the importance of our task in the field has increased proportionately. Many have been the obstacles arising in the practical applications of central office working instructions to field conditions, and numerous have been the criticisms fired at you from all sides for what was apparently a failure to get your organization into effective working shape and produce results immediately. Most of the problems you have approached in a satisfactory way. Some of the criticisms have been met by an enlightening explanation and some still remain to be answered. These conditions, however, are a part of the job, and while they necessarily entail concern and worry, your director assures you of his willingness that you share this official grief in proportion to your increased responsibilities. Your reward will be that comfort which comes from a job well done; your budget precludes the sordid one you may have in mind. When I reflect on the worries that attend the administration of this work, I often recall the inspiration that came to me when I read the following little squib by a homely corn-fed philosopher, whose name has gone but whose words remain:

"Any work of importance carries with it a certain amount of worry. The man who has lived his life with a single purpose of avoiding all worry has lived a shirker's existence; it is because we are men and are doing worth-while things that we feel concern, and the man who has nothing to worry about is of little importance in this scheme of things—and usually realizes it."

And so one measure of relief which you can afford yourself will be to follow strictly the principles laid down by the central office and to see to it that you do not modify the program, alter a procedure, or deviate from instructions without appropriate authority from the director.

A rigid adherence to this policy will at least obviate certain additional worries sure to come if central office instructions are not observed—and there will be no reward for this worry.

You must keep before you at all times the fact that the director will be held responsible by the President for the successful operation of the manifold functions of the bureau and for the proper administration of all institutions having to do with the care, treatment, or training of the disabled ex-service man.

It is your duty to inform the director wherein your opinion may differ with the principles of any rules or regulations promulgated. I believe you appreciate that your director seeks such suggestions and criticisms and also that he is grateful for the advancement of any ideas which give promise of being potential incentives to sounder principles or better methods. The bureau has been markedly helped by suggestions offered from the field and developed into rules of action for general observation through the organization.

There are some things about which I know no more than I do concerning the Jewish alphabet, but I am conscious of a firm conviction of one thing—that the degree to which the Veterans' Bureau can operate profitably and successfully will be in direct proportion to the extent that a harmonious and helpful exchange of ideas is developed and maintained among those employees having charge of the various activities. There can not be one set of rules for one district and another set for another district. Uniformity of action in all coordinate field agencies is vital to the ultimate success of this organization. This principle is axiomatic.

Sound organization and economical systems of operation are elemental principles observed by all successful industries. In the large businesses of the country the home office sends to the field agencies, through strikingly uniform means, rules and regulations for the guidance of field activities. Such instructions invariably emanate from the home office only after careful study and mature consideration, and field agencies are held strictly accountable for a rigid adherence to such instructions. Were this not true the field offices would soon develop individual practices which could never be tolerated in an organization whose scope of activity is nation-wide. It would naturally follow that any leniency shown by one field office would become known in another section of the country, and the patrons of the organization not receiving the favored consideration would become dissatisfied at the discrimination. And so it is with our work—absolutely uniform treatment of beneficiaries of this bureau must be practiced from Maine to California and from Florida to Washington.

And I do not propose that my active and intense interest in this work shall cease until the entire organization has become a successful and smoothly operated machine and this great institution of the Government is so functioning that irregularities and mistakes shall have reached the proverbial irreducible minimum.

Now for a word about the great rank and file who are handling the infinitude of detail involved in creating and maintaining the millions of records of the United States Veterans' Bureau. I try to think of all of us as constituting a big family which has the interest of the ex-service man at heart and the interest of each other member of the family before him at all times. We can not be successful if we disregard the interest of those with whom we are daily in association. We can not be calloused to the needs of those for whose service the family was created. We can not be an organization of big business if the principles which actuate our motives are not founded on sincerity, truth, energy, and personal forcefulness, or if we are either openly or covertly disloyal, or if we have disloyalty within our ranks, or if we harbor hatred or malice. I am sorry to say, gentlemen, that our district and subdistrict offices are not entirely free from evidences of these weaknesses.

It is right that every man should seek advancement, and it is, indeed, a credit to a man if his ambition and desires lead him to look beyond his present responsibility. But let me warn you against attempting the gratification of such ambition or desires if their accomplishment must be at the expense of a deserving fellow workman. It is, indeed, uncharitable and unmanly to further one's own personal ends by taking or permitting others to take unfair advantages.

Within this bureau there are many opportunities for the recognition of loyal and competent service, and district managers and chiefs of sections should see to it that promotions are made for efficiency and that increases are recommended purely on the basis of loyalty, devotion to duty, and productive accomplishment. If you will study the problem from a business point of view entirely you will never treat superficially the earnest eagerness of the employees within whom the great evolutionary force may be working and you will in so far as it is humanly possible take into account the loyal interest as evidenced.

Have no hesitancy in seeking advice and suggestions of your coworkers. Do not become imbued with the fancy that your personal qualities, your personal thoughts, or your personal convictions alone are an adequate basis for the determination of a solution to an important problem. Remember that sound judgment and genius, too, if you please, are not confined entirely to those who have the advantage of position and, further, that some of the most remarkable advancements the world has seen have come from the ranks of the industries of the North, of the South, of the East, and of the West. It matters not whether a man or a woman comes from lowlands or from the highlands, whether from rich or poor antecedents, from the halls of the great universities, from the stuffed classroom of the night school, or from the little red schoolhouse on the hill, each may have potentialities of inestimable value—and each individual should be given his opportunity.

In reporting to this office district managers must not charge an error to a subordinate; they alone are responsible to me for the proper management and strict discipline of their offices and of the fulfillment to disabled men of the Government's obligation, as prescribed by legislation, as I in turn am to the President.

I feel strongly on these matters which I have just mentioned, for I have seen in several of the districts instances of merit unrecognized and of the retention in positions of trust of men of questionable ability—both, I am sorry to say, to the detriment of the work. It is paramount duty that we owe to our fellow creatures, and more especially to those with whom we labor side by side, to recognize loyal and effective industry, and it is almost of equal importance that we weed out the incompetents and the otherwise unfit. Political and selfish purposes are not to be served at the expense of deserving employees of this bureau.

For some time I have been turning over in my mind two questions of probable value in promoting the operation of the district offices. I desire that you consider each one carefully and offer your thought as to their practicability, and in the event of your concurrence with the general suggestions, that you outline in each instance both the scope and the limits which should be applied.

First, it has been suggested that while such conferences as the one in which we are now engaged are productive of excellent results, and while the exhaustive inquiry of the traveling committee likewise has much to do with bettering methods, yet neither of these gives the district manager that personal, intimate conception of what is being done in other districts that I think might prove to be another factor of intensive instruction that would be helpful to those in charge of field work.

I am therefore considering the proposition of arranging some type of rotating supervision between district managers, or of periodical visits by district managers to other offices, by which they will have an opportunity to exhaustively study the actual working detail and methods of other field offices and to indulge in an exchange of ideas with each other in the field. I have withheld presenting this to you before for the reason that previously I have not felt that the district offices were provided to a sufficiently desirable extent with chiefs of administration qualified in all respects to carry the load of responsibility during such absences of the district managers, but I believe now that this objection has been removed and that the question is at least feasible of consideration.

The other matter is the question of amplifying the responsibility placed upon the chief of administration by the present organization field chart. In cases which have been brought to my attention I find that chiefs of divisions often resent observations made by others of but coordinate responsibility, and with some propriety question the authority of the chief of administration to exercise any interest in their particular field. I would like the candid thought of the district managers as to the desirability of fixing on the chief of administration in addition to his prescribed duties those of executive officer. It is important that this weakness be overcome at once and thus remove a source of all too common discord. In many districts I know that your concurrence in this suggestion will but put the stamp of general approval on what has been already informally delegated by a number of district managers.

CLAIMS.

Since our last conference I have visited almost all the district offices, many of the subdistrict offices, most of the hospitals, and a large number of the schools and training centers. I find that there is an extremely zealous disposition on the part of those in authority to render the service expected of them and to honestly administer the ex-service men the best treatment that can be afforded within the limitations imposed by law.

I am delighted to commend you on this. I have told you from time to time that the ex-service men must have the benefit of the doubt, that you can not always settle a case by pure "affidavitism." Wherever it is found that a claimant is physically unable to appear before an examining board, the bureau must go to him. Put yourself in the man's place, were you unable to travel any distance to a district or subdistrict office. If you were incapacitated to the extent that to travel would aggravate your disability, and this aggravation did occur, would you consider yourself responsible for the aggravated condition, or would you feel, quite properly, that the burden of proof was against the Government? And would you not charge the Government with neglect and responsibility in the event of an aggravation or death? Keep in mind that many thousands of men have been ordered for examination. And consider also the Government's responsibility in cases that may not have resulted from military service but on which we have ordered men up for examination. With these things in mind, exercise the most careful judgment in ordering men for examination as opposed to sending the examining officer to the man.

I am opposed to the correspondence method of adjudicating claims. "Insufficient evidence" and "no service connection" mean little to thousands of men. "Additional affidavits" is just about as nebulous to thousands of others. Many most worthy cases have been neglected and delayed or have died a premature death because of the long tortuous channel of correspondence resulting from stereotyped phrases not understood by the average claimant. This is particularly unfortunate where beneficiaries are involved whose education handicaps them in understanding carelessly written letters and in preparing such written evidence as is called for.

There is such a thing as becoming "hard-boiled." There is such a thing as being influenced unduly by a previous rating, but it is essential to fair treatment that each and every case be regarded in a fresh light, no matter how often reviewed. A peculiarly trying and exacting duty devolves upon your board of appeals and your board of review, and the members of these bodies must constantly be inspired to the most earnest and sympathetic consideration of cases brought to their attention.

INSURANCE.

There is another phase of the bureau's duties to ex-service and service men and women that I must bring to your attention, and that is the duty of the Veterans' Bureau to see that every ex-service man and woman is fully advised as to his or her insurance rights and privileges under the war risk insurance act as amended, so that the real good intended by the passage of the war risk insurance act and amendments can be accomplished.

I purposely do not mention those now in the service for the reason that the rights and privileges of the act are being ably explained by the War Department, Navy Department, and Marine Corps, but when we realize that upward of 4,500,000 individuals applied for yearly renewable term insurance and that there are approximately only 600,000 now continuing their insurance, it seems reasonably certain that after making allowance for claims awarded that a large proportion of the remaining 3,500,000 who have allowed their insurance to lapse either do not know their rights and privileges or if they do they are not aware of its real advantages; therefore, gentlemen, in order to pay the debt the Veterans' Bureau owes to the ex-service men and women it is important that we take steps to advise these individuals to the fullest extent permissible under the law of their rights and privileges and to explain the advantages to be obtained by reinstating and continuing their insurance.

This is one of the bureau's problems. Therefore it is my problem and equally your problem, and the bureau is open to suggestions as to better methods for distributing literature and the complete dissemination of information so that the most isolated case will receive proper attention.

FINANCE.

You will all be interested to know that action has been taken to accomplish prompter payments of bills submitted by the field offices to Washington and steps are being taken looking toward the ultimate decentralization of compensation disability award payments. Decentralization of payment of training allowance pay has been authorized, but some delay will be experienced, due to the fact that the manufacture of special equipment can not be made before September 15. It is probable, however, that the training allowance payments after October will be made through the district offices. With these facilities at your command it is expected that further complaints about delayed payments will be practically eliminated.

LEGAL.

Though legal advisers have been designated in the various districts, the officers of the various districts should appreciate the fact that the general counsel is legal adviser for the whole bureau and not merely for the central office. Consequently, legal problems on which there is any doubt in the minds of administrative officers of the various districts may be and should be submitted to the general counsel for opinion.

The general counsel and his associates give careful consideration to problems submitted to them, and their decisions are rendered in the belief that they are correct. Nevertheless, both the general counsel and his associates are men of open minds, and if it is honestly believed by the district managers that the opinions expressed by the general counsel are in any respect erroneous, the general counsel is perfectly willing to give the matter reconsideration. Requests for reconsideration should not be made in a controversial spirit, but wholly for the purpose of getting at the correct solution of the problem.

PERSONNEL.

For the benefit of members of this conference who were not present on the previous occasion or who due to some oversight may not have had the fact emphasized to them, I want to reiterate forcibly that in the selection of personnel and their treatment during the period of employment, chiefs of divisions must always bear in mind that ex-service men and women invariably have the preference, other conditions being equal. Bear in mind, however, that this general rule should never operate to retain in the employ of the bureau an ex-service person who has manifested an incompetency that can not be overcome or has otherwise evidenced his unfitness. It is, however, intended to favor those men and women who, by their military service, have earned the right to this consideration. Political pressure is a matter which should not be permitted to affect the handling of personnel questions. Oftentimes Senators and Members of Congress plead the cause of undeserving employees without a real knowledge of all the circumstances, but when informed as to the true facts promptly withdraw their recommendations. You will also find that in many instances when you explain to the Members of Congress that the salary appropriations, as reflected to you in the Budget, do not admit the taking of the action which they request, their insistence will change to commendation.

MEDICAL.

One might estimate the task of the Veterans' Bureau as service to an ex-soldier who could qualify at one time or another for all the benefits provided by law multiplied by the number of applicants.

All benefits being based on physical disability means, as I have so often emphasized, that almost every act of the bureau is based on a medical opinion; our mistakes and our successes depend primarily on the quality of our medical service, and 95 per cent of the work of the bureau and its huge expenditures are undertaken on the advice of our doctors.

There are about 11,700 medical and dental men engaged in our work, 2,200 of them giving full time, 900 in hospitals, and 10,700 in district work, of which 8,260 are dental and designated examiners and attending specialists on fee basis. Each man has devoted from 6 to 30 years to his profession, and 97 per cent of them saw service in the World War. These men understand and are understood by the disabled ex-service men far better than any other class of men who come in contact with them.

The mistakes of the past were largely due to failure to appreciate the fundamental medical importance of our problems and also to a tendency to overrule or even ignore the doctor's honest opinions by assumption of an authority which the law never contemplated. Some of these acts were errors of the heart and may be forgiven, but enormous abuses in this respect not only of the letter but of the spirit of the law occurred in the beginning and occur now to some extent, for which there is no excuse and which perhaps cause irreparable harm to the character of thousands of young men by helping to destroy their self-reliance and their natural ambition to succeed through their own efforts.

In facing the future let us resolutely determine not to commit the errors of the past and to go forward in our improved programs guided by the light of our experience and the aid of all concerned in relief for our disabled veterans.

WHAT IS THE REAL BUSINESS OF A VETERANS' HOSPITAL?

It is to produce a certain output in health for each man, plus a decision, whenever possible, on his employment objective and his need for training before he leaves the hospital.

This means a radical change in the organization of our hospitals, including programs for educating specialists for the medical and other personnel, all of which have been approved; standardization of all elements that make up our concept of a hospital, namely, human energy, brains, and harmony of action, toward which the American College of Surgeons has offered without cost all the facilities of that great organization. This will make possible the success of my plan for the dehospitalization of certain patients.

As I have already mentioned, I have been deeply impressed with the fact that the great majority of our chronic hospital cases are ambulant, that many of them would be happier and more content at home, and that by strengthening the vocational facilities of the hospitals, in order that each man can have his need for training promptly determined, and then by as many changes in trade and other tests as necessary have his employment objective settled, all while in the hospital and under careful medical supervision, his problem can be solved. This will permit of a final decision in each case as to the best place outside of the hospital, perhaps the home, in which to continue treatment and training until rehabilitated, and without loss of compensation. This should be a great saving in time to the man and money to the Government. It may be found that some hospitals can be actually converted into special training schools.

RATING IN THE FIELD.

Another matter that has come to my attention in connection with rehabilitation is that the subdistrict office is usually also the best place in which to determine in one operation a man's employment objective and need of training. One good, sensible and even average doctor in each suboffice, and many already have such, working in harmony with the training section, as they all now do in the field, can secure a far better picture of a man's needs with the records and the man himself before them and near his own home town than the district office can ever hope to do. This suboffice opinion can be made legal simply by approval of the district manager. Another short cut to efficiency in this part of the work might be, after all the legal questions have been cleared, to route such cases direct from the claims section to the suboffices. This statement to the suboffice should also include an opinion as to percentage of compensability, if not a training case, whether hospitalization or outtreatment is needed, and whether the assistance of outside agencies is required.

Such procedure should prevent the too frequent conflicts aroused in a man's mind by he being told one thing by one doctor and another thing by another and obviate much of the just criticism of our work in this respect. This, it seems to me, leads us to the real, the actual, decentralization in its truest sense.

DEHOSPITALIZATION.

I have in mind, gentlemen, a matter which I have discussed with the President and to which I have given long hours of study and that is the dehospitalization of men who have proceeded to their homes and are receiving out-patient treatment, and during their period of disability be not reduced in compensation. Between 65 and 70 per cent of our cases are ambulant. About 40 per cent of these ambulant cases could be discharged from hospitals and returned to their homes, provided, however, that the environment of their homes will be conducive to a recovery.

Too much institutionalism, to my mind, is harmful. The man loses courage, his morale is destroyed, and he entertains an unwholesome fear of going out into the world and attempting the great struggle. The man's courage must be strengthened, his mind occupied by helpful inspiration, and he must be stimulated to a determination to recover and return to active work. Hospitalization when unnecessary is an insidious and dangerous treatment, often robbing a man of that most valuable of human traits, self-reliance. It will deteriorate ideals and deaden ambition. A man should mingle with normal fellow beings and absorb from them strength and courage and an outlook on life which well and happy men possess. As soon as possible get the disabled out in the sunshine, near to nature or industry, as the individual disability may suggest as being most helpful, but in all events take them away from those surroundings which will inevitably sap real manhood. Industrial history has never been made by men who are content to accept anything approaching the domiciliary treatment to which many of our ex-service men are, I fear, rapidly becoming subjected.

REHABILITATION.

I have been much interested in our rehabilitation work, and I have been following closely the number of men who have gone from our schools to be welded again into the fabric of the industrial personnel of our Nation. I have watched their progress and I have sought the best advice obtainable on an employment program.

You are to-day operating an employment unit within your district, the purpose of which is to provide employment for all rehabilitated ex-service men and women. That this division of our work will be a success goes without comment. The great industrial centers of the country have responded most generously and are absorbing into their activities many men who have been trained under Government supervision.

No one knows better than you gentlemen the high proportion of ex-service men of foreign birth who speak our language feebly and are utterly innocent of any knowledge of English. It is my earnest desire that all ex-service people so handicapped be carefully instructed to correct this fundamental weakness, and I look to see the time fast approaching when men rehabilitated by the United States Government will be not only skillful workmen in their respective trades or persons of real accomplishment in those vocations for which they have prepared but will be creditable monuments to the instruction in English which is being given.

I conceive it to be an obligation of the Government that while in employment we should maintain an observation of the rehabilitated man's progress, not only to stimulate him in his chosen field of work but to advise him in all matters which have to do with his health. Their passing from training back into industry must not mean that the Government has discharged its entire responsibility. It must be remembered that a man received training because of a disability and a vocational handicap incurred in the line of his military duty; and until a rehabilitated man has safely embarked upon his new endeavor with surroundings that are apparently conducive to his happiness and welfare—and not until then—has the Government discharged its debt.

CORRESPONDENCE.

One of the features of the work of the bureau which can and must be improved is correspondence. I do not like to cite to you elementary principles of a subject with which your forces should be thoroughly informed, but such numerous and repeated instances of gross failure to treat letters with care and thought are brought to me that I am constrained to discuss somewhat the treatment of mail. I recall one instance of a correspondence clerk who said in his letter to a prominent man, "of course, to a man of your intelligence." I have on numerous occasions been severely criticized by the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives because of letters from bureau officials utterly ignoring specific questions asked and replying to a serious communication with a stereotyped phraseology or even with a form letter. Such gross mistreatment of mail may not have resulted from any vicious intention, but it was certainly an evidence of the grossest indifference or culpable ignorance.

I want you to take back to your people some thoughts that must be observed with a fidelity to both the letter and the spirit of instruction. Every person dictating a letter must always remember, first, that there is nothing personal in his work, that he is representing the United States Government, and the tone of his letter should be quiet and factive, never conveying the impression of impatience or contain the slightest possible ground for inference of discourtesy. The receipt of a caustic or quarrelsome letter under no circumstances justifies a reply in like tenor. There is much truth in the old saying that "A man who reads his letter when his feelings have grown cool would like to have a kicker come and kick him, as a rule." Do not give reasons or explanations unless they are requested. To do so gives rise to a purposeless correspondence in addition to reflecting on the intelligence of the addressee. Do not hesitate to say no if that is the answer, and, having said no, do not attempt to suggest an alternative aimed to circumvent your own no.

It is highly important that correspondence be kept moving. It is almost equally important that all letters and textual matter be prepared in a workmanlike manner. An irregular, ununiform, botched appearance generally indicates an indifferent consideration of the subject being handled, and gives rise, with justification, to a question as to the accuracy of statements contained. It is my belief that some thought by this conference might well be spent on making suggestions that will obviate these weaknesses mentioned and be conducive of improvement in the quality of letters emanating from the various offices of the bureau.

BUDGET REPORTS.

I want to emphasize the importance of keeping within the budget allotment for the administrative expenses of each district. This can be done only by budgeting the district as a whole, the district office, and every suboffice and school within the district. Allotments must be made quarterly with a current check of expenditures against allotments. After an allotment is received there should be set aside a surplus which will amount to a reserve to meet emergencies. The district manager who operates under a budget and can not allocate his funds in such a manner that they are elastic enough to cover any reasonable emergency without calling upon the central office for a fresh allotment is not on top of his job and fails to appreciate the advantages of a budget. I want a personal report from each of you as to savings which you will make on your allotment. I will look forward to these reports, because I am a firm believer that efficiency and economy go hand in hand.

Of scarcely less importance is the matter of consolidated monthly progress reports. The purpose of a progress report, especially in an organization like the Veterans' Bureau with offices scattered over the country, is to enable each executive from bottom to top to tell his superior what he accomplished, and if there be arrearages what steps are taken to wipe them out. If the district manager does his full duty in requiring reports from his subdistrict managers and subordinates, he knows exactly the size and distribution of the training, hospital, dispensary, compensation, and insurance load which he must administer within his district. The parts of his program which are showing progress are known as well as who deserves the credit. Also he knows where the district's program is falling down and where to center his energies. The mild and indifferent manner in which certain executives of this bureau in the past countenanced wrong conditions can be stopped by intelligent use of progress reports and going after every wrong condition as soon as it is brought to light. More results and less excuses are demanded from every district manager, and he in turn must demand no less from each subdistrict manager and executive.

There has been serious complaint about the work involved in submitting reports of progress to the central office. While suggestions as to the improvement of that form of report are always welcome and nonessentials must be cut out, the essential facts must be reported. No effort has ever been made to ask for all the important facts regarding the operation of a district, but good administration demands that the director know and follow the trend, progress, and success of the fundamental duties for which he is made responsible by act of Congress.

The fact that this bureau will disburse more money this year and next year than any other department of the Government means that it receives more careful scrutiny by the appropriating committees of Congress and on the floor of both Houses than any other department.

The administration is demanding efficiency and economy in Government. One-fifth of the total outlay of the Government, exclusive of that of the public debt, will be made through this bureau next year. Responsibility, therefore, for one-fifth of the cost of Government, its efficiency or inefficiency in the administration of funds, rests in the hands of you who are attending this conference. I charge you now with knowing and measuring the services rendered from day to day and month to month, and seeing to it that each dollar counts.

As I stated above, I can keep in personal touch with essential facts only. Much information which the district managers must have, vital to the bureau's success, can not reach the director's office. The periodic survey of the district and subdistricts to make sure that there is full use of educational facilities afforded by schools and factories in the community and those which the bureau provides, full utilization of Government hospitals in the district which have empty beds available and maintained at a high overhead cost, contracts with the best private hospitals, prompt and satisfactory employment of rehabilitated trainees, complete cooperation with the civic, social, and veterans' organizations of each community, all interested in the welfare of ex-service men, illustrate my point.

It is safe to say that in a project so large as ours the success or failure of each district depends upon the ability of its executive to keep before himself the fundamental facts as a basis for decision and action.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, I want this conference to mean much to you all and I want each of you to write me personally, setting forth your impression of the conference, and particularly as to the discussions which have been the most interesting to you. I want you to have ever in mind that you are representing your Government in the greatest undertaking of its kind which history has known. Be careful in your deliberations, be strong in your well-considered and well-founded convictions, be honest with your fellow man, and, above all, do not turn a disabled man or woman from your door until his story has been heard and sympathetically and intelligently treated.

Do not discharge your duties in a perfunctory manner nor cease your day's labor without the inner conviction that you have started some man or men on the road to contentment, success, or happiness, and do not ease up on your endeavors to bring back the great opportunity to those whose wounds and ills resulted from the service given that our Nation might live on forever.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following report, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
I. L. LENROOT,
H. L. MYERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; also that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11 to the said bill and concurred therein; that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, further disagreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DEMPSEY, Mr. FREEMAN, Mr. RADCLIFFE, Mr. MANSFIELD, and Mr. KINDRED were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

THE TARIFF—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order.

The point of order made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is as follows:

I wish to make a point of order against the report. I think the conferees have exceeded their authority in the matter of authorization to the President to proclaim the so-called American valuation.

The RECORD shows that the House bill adopted what is known as the American valuation as the basis for its ad valorem duties, and gave no authority to the President to change the duties prescribed in the bill. The Senate bill adopted what is known as the foreign valuation as the basis of ad valorem duties and conferred upon the President the power to increase or decrease them 50 per cent if found necessary in order to equalize the difference in the cost of production in this country and in foreign countries.

Under the Senate bill, paragraph (a), section 315, and with respect to ad valorem duties, the effect of establishing a foreign valuation necessarily required the President to use that plan in reaching his conclusions. But paragraph (b) of section 315 enlarged his power and permitted him to use the American valuation upon two paragraphs (27 and 28, of Title I, of the tariff bill) if he found that such valuation was necessary in order to make the duties measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

The conference bill, in so far as the basis of valuation to be employed by the President is concerned, tremendously increases his power. It authorizes the President to use in his modification of duties the American valuation upon the entire dutiable list.

It must be obvious that if the only matter of difference between the two Houses had been the authority conferred upon the President in section 315 to modify duties, the conferees would have had no jurisdiction to agree upon a bill which gives the President the authority to use American valuation in dealing with the entire dutiable list. If, therefore, the conferees acted within their jurisdiction, there must be found some other difference between the two Houses, the settlement of which gave them the right to make the radical change in the authority of the President which their report discloses.

As already stated, the House bill adopted American valuation and the Senate bill foreign valuation as the basis for ad valorem duties. It is in this difference, if at all, that the jurisdiction of the conferees to make the change respecting the powers of the President must be found. Disregarding for the moment the sections giving authority to increase or diminish duties under certain conditions, it will not be questioned that the conferees could lawfully have agreed that the American valuation should apply to certain of the paragraphs in the dutiable list and the foreign valuation to other paragraphs. Nor can it be doubted that the Senate conferees would have been within their jurisdiction had they receded from the Senate amendment to the Senate bill with regard to valuations, and accepted the House plan of valuation. Furthermore this could have been done even though the Senate percentages of duties had been retained throughout.

It is commonly believed that if this course had been pursued the duties actually to be paid would, in many instances, be much higher than would be paid under either the Senate or the House bill, and this may be true even though paragraph (b) of section 315 of the conference bill forbids an increase in the rate; but in ruling upon a point of order the Chair can not take judicial notice of that fact, if it be a fact. For aught the Chair knows from the record upon which its ruling must be founded, if the proposed enactment becomes a law the foreign valuation of any given article may be as high or higher than the American valuation of the same article. As a Senator I may entertain a certain belief upon that matter and vote accordingly, but as the Presiding Officer of the Senate, acting in a judicial capacity, I am without knowledge upon the subject.

With these preliminary observations, which seem to the Chair indisputable, we approach the vital inquiry which may be thus concretely stated: In order to reach a settlement of the differences respecting the plan of valuation, could the House conferees rightly say to the Senate conferees, "We will recede from the American valuation plan, accept the foreign valuation plan, and accept the authority of the President to modify duties, provided you will agree to extend the authority of the President so that he may employ our plan upon the whole dutiable list whenever he finds it necessary in order to equalize the difference in the cost of production in this country and in foreign countries"; and could the Senate conferees, acting within their lawful powers, accept the proposal?

The Chair appreciates the consequences which follow an affirmative answer to this question, but these consequences inhere in the nature and extent of the difference between the two Houses relating to the plan of valuation. If the Senate conferees could accept American valuation as a whole—and this is not denied—it seems clear that they could accept a qualified and limited use of that plan by the President. Moreover, if the Senate conferees had accepted American valuation throughout and made no change whatever in section 315, the Chair is of the opinion that the President would have had precisely the same power that he will have under the conference bill.

It is quite impossible to separate valuation from presidential authority in this measure, and the Chair firmly believes that the change which the conferees have wrought in the bill, so far as the question we are discussing is concerned, was within their jurisdiction and that it must be dealt with by the Senate in its acton upon the question of agreeing or disagreeing to their report.

The point of order is overruled.

The question is upon agreeing to the report of the conferees.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to lodge an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. UNDERDOOD and Mr. WATSON of Indiana called for the yeas and nays and they were ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], I vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] are necessarily absent. If present they would each vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator who presented the conference report will wish to speak. I desire to say a few words before the debate closes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have assumed that all points of order should be settled before we proceed to the consideration of the report itself. I should like to ask at this time whether any other points of order are to be made. If they are to be made, I wish that would be done before I proceed to lay before the Senate the changes that were made in conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not contemplate making any other point of order, and I do not know of any Senator on this side of the Chamber who does.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, I think it is due the Senate that it should know just what changes were made by the conferees and have those changes explained.

The ad valorem rates in the House bill were based upon American valuation. The Senate bill based its rates upon foreign valuation. The Senate bill made a considerable reduction in rates compared with the rates of the House bill, with the exception of duties on agricultural products, in which there was an increase in rates.

As the bill came to the conferees, the first matter to determine was what was in conference. Inasmuch as the duty collectible on an American valuation would seldom be the same as the duty collectible on the foreign valuation, it is evident that every ad valorem rate was in conference, and the only question in conference was the spread between the two. It was agreed by the conferees that where the American valuation basis upon a given article would bring in a given duty and the Senate rate on the foreign valuation of the same article would bring in the same duty, there was nothing in conference and that the duty would be the same whether the Senate rate on foreign valuation was accepted or whether the House rate upon the American valuation was accepted; and, inasmuch as the House finally agreed to the foreign basis of valuation in all such cases, it necessitated the House receding from its rate upon the American valuation basis and accepting the Senate rate upon the foreign valuation.

It was also conceded that where there was a spread in duty collectible between the rate fixed by the House on an American valuation and the rate fixed by the Senate on the foreign valuation, the conferees could agree upon a rate that would produce either the higher or the lower duty or any intermediate duty. It may be said that in most instances the conferees adopted that rate which would produce a lower duty than that provided in the Senate amendments. So that, upon the whole, the bill comes out of conference with duties lower than those provided in the bill as it left the Senate.

The 7 cents per pound duty which passed the Senate on long-staple cotton had to be surrendered before any agreement could be reached; and as 10 cents per pound had been allowed as a compensatory duty for the quantity of long-staple cotton entering into manufactures of cotton, the surrender of the duty on long-staple cotton necessitated the elimination of the 10 cents per pound duty on all such manufactures.

The bill as it passed the Senate provided for 33 cents per pound on the scoured contents of wool. After a prolonged discussion by the conferees, and in order to secure an agreement, it was necessary to reduce this rate to 31 cents per pound, and this necessitated the lowering of the compensatory duties on woolen manufactures to correspond with this reduction upon the raw material.

The House bill as it came to the Senate left the dye-licensing provisions of the emergency tariff act unchanged. The Senate amendments repealed the dye-licensing provisions of the emergency tariff act, and substituted therefor what is known as the Bursum amendment. The House members, it may be said, were intensely adverse to the Bursum amendment, and the only way that we could reach an agreement was to abandon the Bursum amendment and allow Title V of the emergency tariff act, which related to the licensing of the importation of dyes, synthetic organic drugs, and synthetic organic chemicals, to remain in force one year, with the privilege of extension another year in the case of articles specified in paragraphs 27 or 28 of the bill if the President deemed it necessary to protect American industries.

One of the strange things in legislation occurred at this point. It will be remembered that the House bill, in repealing the emergency tariff bill, was careful to retain that portion of the emergency tariff bill which placed an embargo upon dyes and chemicals, and which was indefinite as to the time of its life. Then when the matter came back and the conferees had agreed that that might remain in force, but limited the time to one year with the privilege of extension for another year, the House, which had agreed to its indefinite limitation, changed front completely and instructed its conferees to strike out that provision entirely, which was done.

Subdivision (b) of section 315, the elastic tariff provision of the bill, was by Senate amendment restricted to dyes and chemicals and other similar coal-tar products provided for in paragraphs 27 and 28 of the bill. Section 315 gave the President authority to increase or decrease the rates of duty fixed in the bill 50 per cent, and if this 50 per cent was not sufficient to measure the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad of any coal-tar product provided for in paragraphs 27 and 28, the President could adopt the American valuation basis and increase or decrease the rate 50 per cent, but in no instance could he give a rate of duty under either subdivision (a) or subdivision (b) that would more than equal the difference between the cost of production at home or abroad. The House Members were rather insistent upon the American valuation plan as the basis for the imposition of all ad valorem rates of duty. Some concession had to be made to meet the divergent views of the two Houses. It was therefore provided that the right to apply the American valuation basis by the President might be extended to all articles provided for in Title I of the act, which is the dutiable list. It is fair, however, to say that this extension of the right to apply the American valuation will probably be never called into effect upon any articles except in the case of coal-tar dyes and chemicals and synthetic drugs and chemicals. The change of the terms of the bill as reported to the Senate by the Senate amendment which provided that the President can only increase a rate of duty in an amount sufficient to measure the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad limits the necessity of using the American valuation system, unless in possibly a few cases of toys and in the case of the coal-tar products. There is a bare possibility, I say, that it may be used in the case of some toys, but I can conceive of no case in which it could be called into effect other than in the matter of coal-tar dyes and chemicals and synthetic drugs and chemicals; and it must be remembered right here that the President can not even go to the American valuation rate in any case under subdivision (a) if the rate fixed by the bill would give a rate of duty that would more than equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, because as the bill passed the Senate the power of the President is limited either under subdivision (a) or subdivision (b) to a duty which will equalize the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. It must also be remembered that whenever the President goes to the American valuation he is prohibited from increasing the rates 50 per cent. He can not increase them any more than the increase that would follow the change from the foreign valuation to the American valuation.

I believe, Mr. President, that the bill as reported by the conferees does in fact, in almost every case, provide a duty sufficiently high to measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. Therefore the power given the President will not be called into effect except, as I have stated, upon some dyes, and possibly upon some toys, unless it be the power and the duty to lower duties which are given in the bill so that they will not more than equalize the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

Having disposed of the woolen and cotton rates, the conferees took up the subject of sugar. As the bill came from the House it provided for a duty equivalent to 1.60 cents per pound on 96 degree Cuban sugar. The Senate amendment fixed the duty at 1.84 cents per pound upon Cuban sugar 96 per cent pure. There was in controversy, therefore, only the difference between 1.60 cents and 1.84 cents per pound, or twenty-hour hundredths of a cent per pound. The conferees could not go below 1.60 cents nor above 1.84 cents. They finally agreed to a duty of 1.76 cents on 96 degree Cuban sugar, which was a considerable reduction below the Senate amendment.

The last items requiring much consideration by the conferees were those relating to shingles and molasses, and especially blackstrap molasses. At one time it seemed as though we must refer those minor subjects back to the House and the Senate. After considerable discussion, and yielding on both sides, it was agreed that blackstrap molasses of less than 52 per cent sugar should carry a duty of one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon and that shingles should remain on the free list. It must be remembered, however, that this one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon will carry with it a reduction on such molasses imported from Cuba, because there is a differential of 20 per cent in favor of Cuban imports, and I believe that all the imports of blackstrap are from Cuba.

Another subject of very serious discussion was the item of potash. The bill as it passed the House imposed duties upon potash for five years, as follows:

Two and one-half cents per pound for the first two years after the passage of the act; 2 cents per pound for the third year; 1½ cents per pound for the fourth year; and 1 cent per pound for the fifth year.

The Senate placed potash upon the free list. The difference between the two Houses could only be settled by a compromise, either placing potash on the free list or fixing a duty somewhere between the free list and the House rates, and the compromise was the imposition of a duty of 1¼ cents per pound for a period of three years after the passage of the act, and thereafter potash was to be free of duty.

But here again we find one of those strange matters sometimes met in legislation. The House had provided in the bill as it passed the House for a very much higher duty than the conferees agreed upon, and when the matter came back to the House by an overwhelming vote they instructed their conferees to put the whole thing upon the free list. As that was what had been done by the Senate in the first instance, of course we had very little difference of opinion and readily agreed to place the article upon the free list.

It is the opinion of the actuary of the Treasury that the tariff bill as agreed to in conference will yield about $400,000,000 in revenue during the first 12 months it is in operation.

I asked our experts to go over the bill carefully and to prepare a statement showing the principal reductions and increases in the bill as agreed to in conference. Of the whole number I think there are some 28 items in which the Senate conferees agreed to increases in compromise with the House and over 100 instances in which the rates were lowered below the rates fixed in the Senate.

I ask that the Secretary read the changes for me, as I am feeling somewhat fatigued, and that they be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type. When the reading is completed I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD a statement showing for specified articles the specific rates and the equivalent ad valorem rates under the Dingley law, under the Payne-Aldrich law, under the Underwood-Simmons law, and under the proposed law, so that at a glance we will have a comparison of all of those laws, not only on the specific basis but on the ad valorem basis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

PRINCIPAL DECREASES IN RATES MADE BY THE CONFEREES FROM THE RATES PROVIDED IN THE BILL AS IT PASSED THE SENATE.

SCHEDULE 1.—CHEMICALS, OILS, AND PAINTS.

1. Citric acid reduced from 18 to 17 cents per pound.
2. Barium hydroxide reduced from 1¾ to 1½ cents per pound.
3. Casein reduced from 4 to 2½ cents per pound.
4. Chalk or whiting or Paris white, dry, ground, bolted, or precipitated, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.
5. Coal-tar intermediates reduced from 10½ cents per pound and 75 per cent American value to 7 cents per pound and 55 per cent American value for two years and thereafter 7 cents per pound and 40 per cent American value.
6. Finished coal-tar products reduced from 10½ cents per pound and 90 per cent American value to 7 cents per pound and 60 per cent American value for two years, and thereafter 7 cents per pound and 40 per cent American value.
7. Edible gelatin, valued at less than 40 cents per pound, reduced from 7 cents per pound and 20 per cent to 3½ cents per pound and 20 per cent; if valued at 40 cents or more per pound, reduced from 15 cents per pound and 20 per cent to 7 cents per pound and 20 per cent.
8. Gelatin, glue, glue size, and fish glue not specially provided for, valued at less than 40 cents per pound, reduced from 1½ cents per pound and 25 per cent to 1½ cents per pound and 20 per cent; if valued at 40 cents or more per pound, reduced from 15 cents per pound and 20 per cent to 7 cents per pound and 20 per cent.
9. Linseed oil reduced from 3½ to 3$\frac{3}{10}$ cents per pound.
10. Coconut oil reduced from 4 to 2 cents per pound.
11. Soya-bean oil reduced from 3 to 2½ cents per pound.
12. Hydrogenated oils and fats reduced from 5 to 4 cents per pound.
13. Lemon and orange oil reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.
14. Plasters of all kinds and court plaster reduced from 25 to 20 per cent.
15. Potassium chlorate and perchlorate reduced from 2 to 1½ cents per pound.
16. Perfumed toilet soap reduced from 50 to 30 per cent.
17. Medicinal soap reduced from 20 to 15 per cent.
18. Potato starch reduced from 2 to 1¾ cents per pound.
19. Dextrine, made from potato starch or potato flour, reduced from 2½ to 2¼ cents per pound.
20. Thorium salts reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

SCHEDULE 2.—EARTHENWARE AND GLASSWARE.

21. Crystalline flake graphite reduced from 2 to 1½ cents per pound.
22. Earthy or mineral substances not specially provided for, if not decorated, reduced from 35 to 30 per cent; if decorated, from 45 to 40 per cent.
23. Surgical and scientific glassware reduced from 75 to 65 per cent.
24. Illuminating glassware reduced from 75 to 60 per cent.
25. Plated or cased glassware reduced from 70 to 60 per cent.
26. Table glassware, blown, cut, or decorated, reduced from 65 to 55 per cent.
27. Glassware not specially provided for, blown or cut, reduced from 65 to 55 per cent.
28. Manufactures of glass not specially provided for reduced from 60 to 50 per cent.
29. Stained or painted glass windows, not specially provided for, reduced from 60 to 50 per cent.
30. Manufactures of marble, breccia, onyx, alabaster, and jet, not specially provided for, reduced from 60 to 50 per cent.

SCHEDULE 3.—METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF.

31. Ball bearings reduced from 10 cents per pound and 55 per cent to 10 cents per pound and 45 per cent.
32. Iron or steel tubes, not specially provided for, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.
33. Flexible metal tubing or hose and iron or steel tubes or pipes suitable for use as conduits for electrical conductors reduced from 35 to 30 per cent.
34. Spiral nut locks and lock washers of iron or steel reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.
35. Aluminum table, household, kitchen, and hospital utensils reduced from 15 cents per pound and 60 per cent to 11 cents per pound and 55 per cent.
36. Table, household, kitchen, and hospital utensils composed wholly or in chief value of copper, brass, steel, or other base metal, not specially provided for, reduced from 50 to 40 per cent.
37. Saws reduced from 30 to 20 per cent.

38. Lithographic plates of stone or other material, engraved, drawn, or prepared, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.

39. Metal trouser buttons (except steel) and nickel bar buttons reduced from one-twelfth of 1 cent per line per gross and 20 per cent to one-twelfth of 1 cent per line per gross and 15 per cent.

40. Steel trouser buttons reduced from one-fourth of 1 cent per line per gross and 20 per cent to one-fourth of 1 cent per line per gross and 15 per cent.

41. Metal buttons, not specially provided for, reduced from three-fourths of 1 cent per line per gross and 20 per cent to three-fourths of 1 cent per line per gross and 15 per cent.

42. Penknives, pocketknives, clasp knives, pruning knives, budding knives, erasers, manicure knives, and all other knives having folding or other than fixed blades or attachments, were reduced as follows: If valued at not more than 40 cents per dozen, from 2 cents each and 60 per cent to 1 cent each and 50 per cent; if valued at more than 40 and not more than 50 cents per dozen, from 5 cents each and 60 per cent to 5 cents each and 50 per cent; if valued at more than 50 cents and not more than $1.25 per dozen, from 12 cents each and 60 per cent to 11 cents and 55 per cent; if valued at more than $1.25 and not more than $3 per dozen, from 20 cents each and 60 per cent to 18 cents each and 55 per cent; if valued at more than $3 and not more than $6 per dozen, from 30 cents each and 60 per cent to 25 cents each and 50 per cent; if valued at more than $6 per dozen, from 40 cents each and 60 per cent to 35 cents each and 55 per cent.

43. Table, butchers', carving, cooks', hunting, and similar knives with handles of mother-of-pearl, shell, ivory, deer, or other animal horn, silver, or other metal than aluminum, nickel silver, iron, or steel, reduced from 20 cents each and 45 per cent to 16 cents each and 45 per cent; with handles of hard rubber, solid bone, celluloid, or any pyroxylin or similar material, reduced from 10 cents each and 45 per cent to 8 cents each and 45 per cent; with handles of any other material, if 4 inches in length or over exclusive of handle, reduced from 10 cents each and 45 per cent to 8 cents each and 45 per cent; any of the foregoing knives without handles, with blades 6 inches or more in length, reduced from 10 cents each and 45 per cent to 8 cents each and 45 per cent.

44. Scissors and shears reduced from 4 cents each and 45 per cent to 3½ cents each and 45 per cent.

45. The following table shows the rates imposed upon scissors, shears, and clippers by the bill as it passed the Senate and as agreed to in conference:

Article.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
Steel laid scissors and shears and blades thereof valued at—
Not more than 50 cents per dozen.	4 cents each and 45 per cent.	3½ cents each and 45 per cent.
More than 50 cents and not more than $1.75 per dozen.	20 cents each and 45 per cent.	15 cents each and 45 per cent.
More than $1.75 per dozen..	.....do.....	20 cents each and 45 per cent.
All other scissors and shears and blades thereof valued at—
Not more than 50 cents per dozen.	4 cents each and 45 per cent.	3½ cents each and 45 per cent.

50 cents to $1.75 per dozen..	.....	15 cents each and 45 per cent.
Over $1.75 per dozen.....	.....	20 cents each and 45 per cent.

46. The following table shows the rates imposed on razors and parts thereof by the bill as it passed the Senate and as agreed to in conference:

Article.	Senate amendment.	Conference report.
Razors and parts thereof:
Razors valued at less than 75 cents per dozen.	20 cents each and 50 per cent.	18 cents each and 45 per cent.
Razors valued at 75 cents and less than $1.50 per dozen.	30 cents each and 50 per cent.	25 cents each and 45 per cent.
Razors valued at $1.50 and less than $3 per dozen.	35 cents each and 50 per cent.	30 cents each and 45 per cent.
Razors valued at $3 and less than $4 per dozen.	40 cents each and 50 per cent.	35 cents each and 45 per cent.
Razors valued at $4 or more per dozen.	50 cents each and 50 per cent.	45 cents each and 45 per cent.
Safety razors, and handles and frames.	10 cents each and 30 per cent.	10 cents each and 30 per cent.

47. Watchcases and parts of watches reduced from 50 to 45 per cent.

47a. Enamel dials for watches or other instruments reduced from 3 cents per dial and 50 per cent to 3 cents per dial and 45 per cent.

48. Clocks and clock movements reduced from 50 to 45 per cent.

49. Sewing machines and parts thereof valued at not more than $75 each reduced from 25 to 15 per cent; valued at more than $75 each reduced from 40 to 30 per cent.

50. Cream separators valued at not more than $50 each were transferred to the free list. They were dutiable under the bill as it passed the Senate at 25 per cent.

51. Shovels, spades, scoops, scythes, sickles, grass hooks, corn knives, and drainage tools, and parts thereof, reduced from 35 to 30 per cent.

52. Needle or liquidated antimony reduced from three-fourths to one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.

53. Gold leaf reduced from 60 to 55 cents per 100 leaves.

54. New types reduced from 25 to 20 per cent.

SCHEDULE 4.—WOOD AND MANUFACTURES OF.

55. Porch and window blinds, baskets, chair seats, curtain shades, or screens made wholly or in chief value of bamboo, wood, straw, papier-mâché, palm leaf, or compositions of wood, not specially provided for, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent; if stained, dyed, painted, polished, grained, or creosoted, reduced from 50 to 45 per cent.

56. Manufactures of wood, not specially provided for, reduced from 35 to 33⅓ per cent.

SCHEDULE 5.—SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

57. The rate upon 96° Cuban sugar is reduced from 1.84 cents per pound to 1.765 cents per pound. The rate imposed upon 96° sugar imported from other countries is reduced from 2.3 cents per pound to 2.206 cents per pound.

SCHEDULE 7.—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS.

58. Fresh beef and veal reduced from 3½ cents to 3 cents per pound.

59. Fresh lamb reduced from 5 to 4 cents per pound.

60. Lard compounds and lard substitutes reduced from 5 to 4 cents per pound.

61. Cream reduced from 22½ cents to 20 cents per gallon.

62. Oatmeal reduced from 90 to 80 cents per 100 pounds.

63. Mixed feeds reduced from 15 to 10 per cent.

64. Cereal breakfast foods reduced from 25 to 20 per cent.

65. Apricots, prepared or preserved, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

66. Maraschino cherries and cherries prepared or preserved reduced from 45 to 40 per cent.

67. Citrons and citron peel, candied or otherwise prepared or preserved, reduced from 5 to 4½ cents per pound.

68. Figs, prepared or preserved, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

69. Dates, prepared or preserved, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

70. Peaches and pears, prepared or preserved, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

71. Pineapples, candied, crystallized, or glacé, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

72. Plums, prunes, and prunelles, prepared or preserved, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

73. Jellies, jams, marmalades, and fruit butters, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

74. Fruits in their natural state or in brine, pickled, dried, desiccated, evaporated, or otherwise prepared or preserved, not specially provided for, and mixtures of two or more fruits, prepared or preserved, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

75. Nursery or greenhouse stock, not specially provided for, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.

76. Grafted or budded fruit trees, cuttings and seedlings of grapes, currants, gooseberries, or other fruit vines, plants, or bushes, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.

77. Almonds, not shelled, reduced from 5 to 4¾ cents per pound.

78. Almonds, shelled, reduced from 15 to 14 cents per pound.

79. Almond paste reduced from 15 to 14 cents per pound.

80. Potatoes reduced from 58 to 50 cents per 100 pounds.

81. Potato flour reduced from 3 to 2½ cents per pound.

82. Tomato paste reduced from 45 to 40 per cent.

83. Vegetables, not specially provided for, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.

84. Sago flour, tapioca flour, and tapioca flake or pearl were transferred to the free list by the conference agreement. The bill as it passed the Senate imposed a duty of one-half of 1 cent per pound on sago flour and tapioca flour and three-fourths of 1 cent per pound on tapioca flake or pearl.

SCHEDULE 10.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

85. Hemp and hemp tow reduced from 2 to 1 cent per pound.

86. Hackled hemp reduced from 4 to 2 cents per pound.

87. Sliver and roving of flax, hemp, ramie, or other vegetable fiber, not specially provided for, reduced from 25 to 20 per cent.

88. The bill as it passed the Senate imposed a minimum duty of 30 per cent and a maximum duty of 40 per cent upon single yarns, in the gray, made of flax, hemp, or ramie, or a mixture of any of them. The conference agreement reduced the minimum duty to 25 per cent and the maximum duty to 35 per cent.

89. The bill as it passed the Senate imposed an additional duty upon threads, twines, and cords composed of two or more yarns of flax, hemp, or ramie, or a mixture of any of them, when bleached, dyed, or otherwise treated, of 6 cents a pound. The conference agreement reduced this additional duty to 5 cents a pound.

90. The bill as it passed the Senate imposed a minimum duty upon threads, twines, and cords composed of two or more yarns of flax, hemp, or ramie, or a mixture of any of them, of 40 per cent. The conference agreement reduced this minimum duty to 30 per cent.

91. Cordage, wholly or in chief value of hemp, reduced from 3 to 2½ cents per pound.

92. Floor coverings, not specially provided for, reduced from 45 to 40 per cent.

SCHEDULE 14.—SUNDRIES.

93. Boots, shoes, or other footwear, the uppers of which are composed wholly or in chief value of wool, cotton, ramie, animal hair, fiber, or silk, or substitutes for any of the foregoing, whether or not the soles are composed of leather, wood, or other material, reduced from 40 to 35 per cent.

94. Straw hats known as harvest hats, valued at less than $3 per dozen, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.

95. Matches, imported otherwise than in boxes containing more than 100 matches, each, reduced from 1 cent to three-fourths of 1 cent per thousand matches.

96. Wax matches, window matches, etc., reduced from 45 to 40 per cent.

97. Matches, per gross of 144 boxes, containing not more than 100 matches per box, reduced from 12 to 8 cents per gross.

98. Natural leaves, plants, shrubs, herbs, trees, and parts thereof, chemically treated, colored, dyed, or painted, not specially provided for, reduced from 65 to 60 per cent.

99. Furs dressed on the skin, excepting silver or black fox furs, not advanced further than dyeing, reduced from 30 to 25 per cent.

100. Catgut, whip gut, oriental gut, and manufactures thereof, not specially provided for, reduced from 50 to 40 per cent.

101. Gas, kerosene, or alcohol mantles, not specially provided for, reduced from 50 to 40 per cent.

102. Manufactures of amber, bladders, or wax, not specially provided for, reduced from 25 to 20 per cent.

103. Works of art, statuary, sculptures, etchings, and engravings, not specially provided for, reduced from 25 to 20 per cent.

PRINCIPAL INCREASES IN RATES MADE BY THE CONFEREES OVER THE RATES PROVIDED IN THE BILL AS IT PASSED THE SENATE.

SCHEDULE 1.—CHEMICALS, OILS, AND PAINTS.

1. Amyl, butyl, and propyl alcohol increased from 3 to 6 cents per pound.

2. Fusel oil increased from 2 to 6 cents per pound.

3. Methyl or wood alcohol increased from 10 to 12 cents per gallon.

4. Bleaching powder increased from one-fifth to three-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

5. Magnesium chloride not specially provided for increased from one-half to five-eighths of 1 cent per pound.

6. Soap not specially provided for increased from 5 to 15 per cent.

7. Unperfumed toilet soap increased from 10 to 30 per cent.

SCHEDULE 2.—EARTHENWARE AND GLASSWARE.

8. Dead burned and grain magnesite increased from four-tenths to twenty-three-fortieths of 1 cent per pound.

SCHEDULE 3.—METALS AND MANUFACTURES OF.

9. Printing presses, lawn mowers, and machine tools and parts of machine tools increased from 15 to 30 per cent.

10. Metallic magnesium and metallic magnesium scrap increased from 10 to 40 cents per pound.

11. Bronze powder increased from 12 to 14 cents per pound.

12. Tinsel wire increased from 5 cents per pound and 10 per cent to 6 cents per pound and 10 per cent.

13. Lame or lahn made wholly or in chief value of gold, silver, or other metal increased from 5 cents per pound and 20 per cent to 6 cents per pound and 20 per cent.

14. Bullions and metal threads made wholly or in chief value of tinsel wire, lame or lahn increased from 5 cents per pound and 35 per cent to 6 cents per pound and 35 per cent.

SCHEDULE 4.—WOOD AND MANUFACTURES OF.

15. The bill as it passed the Senate placed logs of fir, spruce, cedar, or western hemlock upon the free list. The conference agreement restores these classes of logs to the dutiable list at the House rate of $1 a thousand feet, board measure. However, it is provided that such logs shall be free of duty if imported from any country which has, at no time during the 12 months immediately preceding their importation into the United States, maintained any restriction upon the exportation of such logs from such country.

16. The bill as it passed the Senate placed cedar, commercially known as Spanish cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, Japanese white oak, and Japanese maple, in the log, upon the free list. The conference agreement restores this class of logs to the dutiable list at 10 per cent.

17. Split bamboo increased from 1 cent to 1¼ cents per pound.

SCHEDULE 5.—SUGAR, MOLASSES, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

18. Blackstrap molasses was placed upon the free list. The conference agreement restores blackstrap to the dutiable list at one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon, but limits the class of molasses that shall be dutiable at this rate to molasses testing not above 52 per cent total sugars.

SCHEDULE 7.—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND PROVISIONS.

19. Cream powder increased from 6 to 7 cents per pound.

20. The bill as it passed the Senate placed coconuts upon the free list. The conference agreement imposed a duty of one-half of 1 cent each upon coconuts.

21. Coconut meat, shredded and desiccated, or similarly prepared, increased from 2½ to 3½ cents per pound.

22. Soya beans increased from four-tenths of 1 cent per pound to one-half of 1 cent per pound.

23. Cabbage seed increased from 8 to 10 cents per pound.

24. Onion seed increased from 10 to 15 cents per pound.

SCHEDULE 10.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

25. Matting made of cocoa fiber or rattan increased from 7 to 8 cents a square yard.

26. Mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan increased from 5 to 6 cents per square foot.

27. The bill as it passed the Senate placed surgical catgut upon the free list. Conference agreement imposed a duty of 40 per cent upon surgical catgut.

28. Violins, violas, violoncellos, and double basses increased from 45 per cent to $1 each and 35 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I stated, I requested the actuary of the Treasury Department, together with other experts of the committee, to carefully go over the rates fixed by the conferees and now in the bill and to make a comparison of the rates in the Dingley, Payne-Aldrich, and Underwood-Simmons laws and the pending tariff bill. I can say, generally, that on agricultural products there is an increase over any of the laws, but not on all agricultural products by any means. It may be that after looking more carefully into it we will find more of them that are under the previous laws than over. That is also true of wool, upon which the farmer receives a higher rate of duty than ever before. But the ad valorem duties on the manufactured products, I think it will be found, are less than they are in any one of the previous protective tariff laws. Of course they are all greater, as a rule, than the present Underwood-Simmons law. I ask that this comparison may also be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type that it may be easily read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Comparison of the rates in the Dingley, Payne, Underwood, and pending tariff acts upon certain articles.

	Dingley (1908).		Payne (1911).		Underwood (1914).		Pending (1921).

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall discuss to some extent the conference report, and then I desire to make some general observations with respect to the tariff bill itself.

It was generally known when the bill was in the making that the organized and special interests whose influence dominated and controlled the formulation of its policy naturally expected some rebuffs and upsets both in the House and Senate, but that they confidently relied upon the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to correct such errors, so regarded from their standpoint, by nullifying, overruling, and setting aside any action regarded by them as prejudicial to their interests and plans. It was and is known that the rules governing conference reports of both Houses, especially of the Senate, powerfully lend themselves to such a consummation, particularly in the case of tariff bills dealing with hundreds and even thousands of different items.

The record of the conference report on the bill is a startling verification of the confidence of the special interests whose plans had in part been thwarted by the two Houses, and impressively uncovers and discloses the dangers to the integrity of popular legislation which lurk in the conference system as now interpreted and applied. The arbitrary and usurpatory course of the conferees, their disregard, not to say contempt, of the known will of the two Houses, and their apparent subserviency to the will of the special interests, can best be illustrated by their action with respect to three or four outstanding matters of vital importance in the bill. With respect to two of those outstanding matters, namely, potash and the dyestuffs embargo, the House has already acted, and in that action administered to the conferees a severe and cutting rebuke. I refer to those two matters now only as instances showing the disposition of the conferees toward the House on the one hand and the special interests on the other hand.

Mr. President, the action of the conferees with reference to potash shocked the country and led to such a revolt on the part of the agricultural interests as has rarely been seen in connection with legislation. It precipitated a sharp conflict between the agricultural interests of the country and a few producers of potash in the far western States. The manufacture of potash is an industry that did not exist in the United States before the war. It was brought into existence by the fact that the war summarily and completely cut off our only source of supply of an absolutely essential element in the production of certain crops. There was in the country a certain amount of reserve potash which helped out the situation for a time during the war. The amount the new industries were able to produce under the stimulus of the war, with an absolute monopoly, was probably less than one-tenth of the normal demand of the country. It was produced at heavy cost. It was manufactured. The foreign supply upon which the country had always relied was inexhaustible.

It was in a foreign country, but there it did not have to be manufactured. It lay upon the surface of the ground just as sand lies upon the surface of the land, and could be produced at practically no cost except the cost of transportation.

When the war closed these domestic hothouse industries which had sprung up to supply the necessary demands that had been cut off practically suspended operations.

It was and it is absolutely impossible for them to manufacture the product in competition with a product that does not have to be manufactured but which has already been made in unlimited and exhaustless quantities by the hand of God. Not only that, but such raw materials as enter into the manufacture of potash as have been found in the United States were found in the far western States, far distant from the place of its use, and the enormous rail transportation cost to the point of consumption was so great as to add to its cost to the consumer an additional burden, an additional cost, a cost itself almost equal to the entire cost of the foreign product delivered in this country.

With these two factors—factors that could not be removed—against the competition of potash manufactured in this country in favor of potash placed in the soil upon the surface of the earth by the hand of Providence, it was clear that there could be no competition unless the Government of the United States should see fit to impose upon potash, in addition to a transportation cost equal to the entire foreign cost of the article, a protective duty of enormous and unreasonable proportions.

The industry here is now moribund; it is one of those unprofitable industries of which no principle of economy can justify the maintenance, especially when it has to be maintained by more than doubling the cost of the product to the consumer. Notwithstanding these facts, the domestic manufacturers of this product were persistent. If they could get the high rate of duty demanded, which was about $50 a ton, they could at least sell the supply of the product they had on hand, and possibly with that advantage over the foreign producer they might continue, to some extent, in competition. They were unusually insistent. The largest operators, I imagine, were located in the State of Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The largest amount is produced in California.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said I imagined they were located in Utah. If my imagination is wrong about that, the Senator from Utah may correct me in his own time. They were located, anyway, in two or three Western States. There was a most strenuous effort on the part of certain Senators in this body, representing the States where the potash is manufactured, to retain a high duty upon that product, notwithstanding the burden such a duty would place upon the farmers of the United States and the resulting increase in the cost of living. That question was brought to test in the Senate. Despite the activities of the interests that were demanding the proposed high duty, the Senate by an overwhelming majority voted to put potash upon the free list. So the matter went to the committee of conference.

I do not undertake to say what influences in the conference stubbornly resisted the action of the Senate, but I do undertake to say that members of the conference representing the Senate argued and argued successfully against the action of the body which they themselves were appointed and commissioned to represent; and, whether it be true or not, the impression prevails that the conferees were led to restore the duty on potash in contempt of the action of the Senate by the insistence of some of the Senate conferees, and upon the statement largely, which also had been heard to a greater or less extent in the Senate at the time it took the adverse action, that there was a German and French combination to control the price of this product when sold in the American market—a conspiracy among the producers of the product in those two countries against the United States. That suggestion was exploited in the newspapers. The interests that come here to get subsidies from the Government always provide for newspaper publicity, but the Congress of the United States has rarely acted upon the unconfirmed statements which are published in the newspapers as a part of a propaganda.

Mr. President, here is an instance of the truth of what I stated in my opening observation, where the interests, having been thwarted in their plans by the action of the Senate, confidently looked to the conferees to overrule that action and to grant them what they demanded. Here is an instance where the special interest and its lobby were so much stronger than the influence of the American farmers, as demonstrated and certified by the action of the Senate, and subsequently, when this matter was carried back to the House, as demonstrated and certified by the action of the House, that the interest of the farmers of this country, backed by the verdict of the Senate, was disregarded and the wishes of the special interests concerned were heeded.

After the conference had acted restoring the duty it was announced that this action was taken upon certain assurances given to the conferees—by whom I do not know; whether by a Senate conferee in disregard of the action of this body or by a House conferee I do not undertake to say—to the effect that there was a German and a French combination in this industry, because of which the Senate conferees had decided to yield and allow a duty to be placed upon this product.

I have before me, Mr. President, a cablegram received from the German potash syndicate, dated September 14, 1922, sent in reply to a question asked by Mr. Houston. Here is the cablegram of the syndicate:

Syndicate herewith energetically denies the report circulated in European and American press regarding understanding between syndicate and Alsace for world market or eastern market or intention to increase potash prices in United States.

Before the war it was well known that Germany, which then included Alsace, practically controlled the production of potash, and it was charged that it was a monopoly in that country; but, notwithstanding that, the prices of potash were moderate in pre-war times, and, so far as I ever heard, there was no complaint on the part of the farmers with respect to it.

Mr. President, I wish, in connection with my remarks, to incorporate in the RECORD, without reading, a statement furnished me by Mr. Houston with reference to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

(Re amendment No. 1520.)

Tariff bill placing a duty of 1½ cents per pound, or $30 per ton of actual potash, or $15 per ton on muriate of potash, the kind most used in agriculture.

A. In so far as this amendment was based on any alleged or proposed combination between German and French potash producers, the amendment is the result of mere rumors having no basis in fact.

Notwithstanding the repeated references to this in dispatches of the Washington correspondents of some of the New York newspapers, no combination or working agreement exists between these producers. The bitter competition between them ought to be sufficient proof of this. They have been cutting prices on each other ever since 1919, and the present low price is the result.

For over 50 years, during which the Germans had a complete monopoly of potash production, they kept prices down because the industry is so overdeveloped that only through large sales can interest be earned on the invested capital. Large sales are only possible when prices are low. This policy can not be changed now.

B. The present price of muriate of potash is $32.95 per ton at seaports of east coast of United States. The $15 duty would bring this to $47.95 per ton.

American potash works stopped producing when the price of muriate of potash fell to $100 per ton. They evidently can not produce for $47.95 per ton. The proposed duty would not result in reopening these works.

C. What would be the result of the duty? It would lay a burden of more than $18,000,000 on agriculture. It would help the sale of stock of the speculative potash promotions. The stocks of two of these speculative companies are now actively traded in on the New York curb market. Neither of them has produced any potash.

Many of the potash promotions in Nebraska, Utah, and California have tried to sell their properties to the European producers without success. Having failed in this, their only hope is to unload them on the American public. Any tariff on potash would help them do this.

Mr. SIMMONS. Here, Mr. President, was a provision which the conferees, overruling the action of the Senate—and, so far as reports show, the movement to overrule the action of the Senate came largely from the Senate conferees—placed in the bill which would have meant millions if the House had not repudiated it in a manner that ought to be a warning to future conferees, although if the House had not repudiated it the Senate, as soon as the papers came to it, would have been equally as swift in repudiation of it. It was a proposition to impose upon the farmers of the United States a new burden of many million dollars a year, which burden would have been concentrated in a few States of the Union, for there are only a comparatively small number of States where potash is an essential ingredient in the cultivation and production of crops.

I would not have referred to this matter so much at length but for the fact that it illustrates better than probably anything else in this bill except the dye embargo the dominance of the special interests in the making of this bill, and illustrates better than any other item in this bill the fact that the special interests rely upon conference committees to give them what the two Houses or what one or the other of the Houses may not be willing to give them. It is in the conference reports that this organized syndicated group of special interests get in their most effective work, and it is the subservience of conference committees that often leads to results of such dangerous import.

Why, Mr. President, do these designing interests rely more upon the conference committee's action than they do upon the action of either House? First, the body is smaller. Second, they know perfectly well, and the conferees know, that however obnoxious their action with reference to a specific matter may be, where the bill relates, as a tariff bill does, not only to that particular thing but to hundreds and thousands of other things of more or less importance, whatever their action may be with respect to the particular item that action must be accepted by the two Houses, or their whole action upon all the items must be rejected, for a conference report is not subject to amendment on the floor. It is the reliance, I say, of the special interest upon these facts and it is the significance of these facts, leading to these abuses of power, to this disregard of the expressed will of the two Houses, to this trampling under foot of the action of one or the other of the Houses by the conferees—and frequently by the conferees of the very House that acted—that have become a thing of such great danger in our system of legislation and that ought in some way or other to be remedied.

Mr. President, I do not wish to indulge in any lengthy discussion of the embargo. There the same thing happened in conference in an even more obnoxious form than happened in the case of potash, and probably more than in the case of potash it accentuates the point I have made, namely, that of the advantage given to the special interests, and of the impunity with which the public interests may be disregarded with respect to the specific thing involved.

There was an attempt to continue the dyestuffs embargo. It was written in the House bill as it came from the Committee on Ways and Means. It was strenuously advocated and championed by the Ways and Means Committee upon the floor of the House. One member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House has become recognized throughout the country as the special champion of the principle of embargo as applied to dyestuffs. His activities have been so pronounced and so conspicuous that he stands out and overshadows all the other champions of that measure in the House, just as I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] probably overshadows all other champions of a duty upon potash. This House Member's efforts in behalf of this embargo provision of the House bill were strenuous. The debate was full, as debates go in the House, spirited, able, and as a result the House struck the embargo provision out of the bill.

When the bill came over to the Senate the embargo provision was restored in the Committee on Finance, notwithstanding the action of the House. The influence of the dyestuffs lobby was strong enough to dominate and control the action both of the committee of the House and of the committee of the Senate. They forced this embargo provision back into the bill in the Senate committee after the House had stricken it out in a very impressive way, almost a sensational way, and the bill came upon the floor of the Senate, where another battle was waged against it, a hot and spirited battle. Never before in all the history of legislation since I have been here has there been such a powerful lobby around this Capitol as came here in support of that dye-embargo proposition. They swarmed the corridors, they forced themselves into the private offices of Senators, they hung around the doors of the Senate Chamber, they could not be shaken off, they yielded to no rebuff.

It was an organized lobby, not composed of ordinary professional lobbyists alone, but composed of the highest and most skilled experts in the business—composed of lawyers of great ability, composed of specialists—and their efforts were incessant day and night; but their efforts were not confined to influencing the action of committees and Senators in behalf of this proposition. They sought to build back fires against Members of the body. Flying squadrons were organized, composed of men of the highest talent and skill, not only in the industry but in persuasion—strong public speakers—and these squadrons went from State to State, wherever a commercial or industrial body that had any connection whatever with the subject was in session, and there they sought to secure favorable action and recommendation by all the means that such men employ in order to influence the legislation of the Congress. They prevailed with the Finance Committee; but when the bill came here to the floor, after thorough discussion and deliberation, the Senate followed the course of the House and overruled its committee and struck out the embargo provision by repealing the embargo provision of existing law; and so the bill went to conference, the last resort of the special interest, the tribunal in which it is at so much greater advantage than in the open session of either House, the tribunal upon which it always confidently relies to correct what it regards as the errors of the two Houses and to bring out legislation in accordance with its own plans and wishes.

The conference committee restored these embargo provisions with a time limit. Was not this a clear case of yielding the will of the two Houses, as expressed in as emphatic, impressive, and forceful manner as legislative will possibly can be expressed, and overruling that will of both Houses in order to do what a favored special interest demands shall be done? Such an outrage is, of course, shocking and without excuse. The House acted, however, and promptly disapproved the action of the conferees with reference to dyestuffs and potash and directed its conferees to eliminate them.

Of course, the conferees then corrected both of these things, but only because they were forced to do so. I am now referring to these instances because in the situation upon which I have commented, which is illustrated by these two incidents, there lies serious danger to the integrity of legislation and to the ultimate writing into law of the will of the people with reference to vital matters.

I call it to the attention of the Senate further, Mr. President, because the country believes that these two things, potash and dyestuffs, were linked together in the conference committee and that they formed the basis of a sort of trade in that committee, one side holding potash in its hand and the other side holding dyestuffs in its hand, and that as a result of a compounding of interests these two things, which had been repudiated by the two Houses, were resurrected and brought to life again, and would be living to-day but for the summary action of the House of Representatives in rebuking the conferees for thus trampling upon its will and disregarding its expressed wish with reference to these two matters.

In the same connection and because I think it is a verification of the statements I have been making as to the conference committee's action with regard to potash and the embargo, I wish to call attention briefly to the action of this committee with reference to the power delegated to the President in the so-called flexible or elastic tariff provisions in the bill, giving the President power to increase the ad valorem rates of the bill 50 per cent and to proclaim American valuation. If there is any subject upon which the sentiment of the American people has been thoroughly sounded out, and upon which that sentiment has been given unqualified and unequivocal expression, and nearly always in condemnation, it is the question of American valuation. It was the thing that was closest to the hearts of nearly all the seekers after excessive increases in tariff rates.

I do not know what happened in the later executive or secret sessions of the Finance Committee, but in the open hearings practically everything else for a long time was laid aside, and the committee devoted itself to hearing the seekers after protection who were demanding that their rates be based upon the American valuation and that the rates be fixed on the wholesale selling price of the article in the home market. Nothing, they said, would do but that. They said frequently that a thousand per cent increase would not help them; that they must have the American valuation.

Here again these powerful interests, as always, exerted such influence as they possessed upon the press, and that influence is very great and far-reaching and almost all-permeating. Of course, they could not control the press, but every effort was made to marshal the press of the country in favor of the scheme, and many newspapers were misled and deceived. I do not ascribe motives; I do not impeach actions. The dyestuff propaganda related to one industry. It was promoted by one corporate or syndicated interest. The propaganda in favor of the American valuation basis was organized and carried forward by practically every industry in this country that was a suppliant in Washington for higher and higher and still higher tariff protection. That scheme was held up to view as the panacea of all the troubles which had followed in the aftermath of war. It was the one thing, they said, that would enable them to adjust their prices to the disturbed and unsettled conditions of currency and of trade in the balance of the world.

The House adopted this so-called American valuation scheme, led by the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who started in the fight at the beginning and was with the fight to the finish.

The Senate Finance Committee acted upon this important matter, overruling the House and restoring foreign valuation after there had been a reaction of public sentiment; after the country, upon analysis and consideration, had come to the conclusion not only that "American valuation" was unsound, but that it was one of the most dangerous propositions ever presented to the American people; that it was piling a duty upon a duty, and that the recipient of the duty could increase the duty at any time he pleased by simply increasing the price of the domestic product, and that it meant practically a surrender of the markets of 110,000,000 people to the exploitation of a few thousand producers of these protected articles, with no limit except the sky upon the duty they might ultimately obtain and upon the prices which they might as a consequence exact for their products.

American sentiment was so thoroughly crystallized that when the Senate committee came to act upon the subject it incontinently brushed the scheme aside, notwithstanding the threats which came from the other body of the Congress that if that were done there would be no tariff legislation. The Finance Committee repudiated it, spurned it as a poisonous and economically murderous and dangerous thing, and left it out of the bill. Public sentiment had compelled them to leave it out.

There was a provision placed in the bill at the last hour, however, permitting the President to apply the foreign valuation principle to the products covered in two short paragraphs of the bill, paragraph 27 and paragraph 28, relating to dyestuffs. The Senate was so obsessed with the danger of the American valuation principle that it deliberately denied the President the right to proclaim it, even to meet an emergency situation, except as to dyestuffs. All of us know that there has been and is in the public mind an idea, I think probably well founded, that there ought to be some differentiation in the treatment of dyestuffs and the treatment of other things. By its action the Senate deliberately said, "The power is so dangerous that we strike it out of the bill. The power is so dangerous that when we give the President extraordinary powers with reference to these rates, we will not give him this power except as to one group of products, and we deny it to him upon all the other dutiable articles in the bill."

The special interests had counted heavily upon the exercise of the President's power to enable them to get what they wanted, and the one thing they wanted above all things else was the "American valuation," either in the making of the original rate or in the revising of the rate by Executive fiat. They went before the committee and said, "Strike out these words, only five of them. Strike out the words which limit the power of the President to declare the American valuation to dyestuffs; it can be accomplished by eliminating just five words, 'paragraph 27 and paragraph 28.' Strike them out and it probably will not receive much attention, as little attention is paid to many of the changes made in the conference, and you will at once give us what we have been longing for, what we have been fighting for, what we demand, by giving the President power to proclaim American valuation on any item in the whole dutiable list. It makes no difference to us," they said, "whether that American valuation principle is applied in the making of the rate originally by the two Houses or applied by the President after the rate is made. It is the same thing to us. It is a little bit better in view of the fact that the rates in the bill are made upon the foreign valuation, which is higher than the rates based upon the American valuation would have been so far as figures go. We will get the American valuation in this way, not based upon the rates that ought to obtain and which we had accepted on the American valuation in the House, but we will get that valuation system proclaimed and the higher rates based on foreign valuation applied to it. Thus we will get more than we ask, more than we have ever asked, more than was provided in the provision which the House and the Senate have both indignantly turned down."

Is it not amazing, under these conditions, that the conferees struck out the words and thus gave the President this broad-sweeping power to proclaim, whenever he will, American valuation based on rates fixed on foreign valuation? It is almost inconceivable. How was it accomplished, Mr. President? There sat in the committee the chief champion of this far-reaching and dangerous provision, ceaseless in his efforts, untiring, deterred by no rebuff. He sat there, watchful as he has been through the whole course of the legislation, with his eye fixed upon this one thing. There sat on the Senate committee another with his eye fixed upon another particular thing where the same general situation was presented, where the special interests had been routed in the two bodies, where the voice of the people had been heard and heeded. These men sat there with the voices of the special interests ringing in their ears and with the shouts of denunciation and disapproval of the great body of the American people not heard at all—they could not reach these sacred precincts—and the result was that both of them got what they wanted. This is a part of the potash and dyestuffs proposition broadened immensely, as much wider than the dyestuffs question as the largest ocean is wider than the Potomac River. It embraces them all. Was there ever a more striking disregard by the conferees of the will of the people and the Congress? Was there ever a more abject surrender to the special interests?

This presents a situation which at this stage of the parliamentary course it is hard to adequately reach and deal with. I sought to reach it by a point of order. I believe it is obnoxious to the rules of the Senate. If it is not, no other tariff legislation ought ever to pass the threshold of this body until the rules are reformed. I was overruled. I make no complaint of the Chair. I make no complaint of the action of the Senate. Of course, Senators voted upon it from a political standpoint, as they generally do, forgetting altogether the merits of the question. I know that there was a great deal of unrest and uneasiness and panic in the Republican ranks on Saturday evening when it was stated that the Chair was not ready to announce his opinion, but would render a decision this morning.

I shall say nothing about the political exigencies of the situation. I think if we had more time and it were more certain that a quorum would remain in the two Houses, we might have considered the point of order with a little more deliberation and probably might have solved it better than we have solved it. But let that go, Mr. President. That is the third instance that I wanted to call to the attention of the country, illustrating the all-compelling power of the special interests in the making of the bill, in conference as well as in the House and Senate. I warn you solemnly against the danger that is involved in the concentration of that power in a conference committee, and the bulwark which our rules set up against the overthrow of the action of the conferees when the matter comes back to the Senate.

But there is another point, Mr. President, just as striking. What was the ground upon which the so-called flexible provisions of the tariff bill were incorporated by the Senate Finance Committee? They were extraordinary provisions. No such provisions were ever before written into any tariff bill. No one ever dreamed of curtailing the legislative power and extending the Executive power with reference to taxation to the extent provided in these sections of the bill.

The champions of these powers, which give the President of the United States practically a control of the tariff rates which the people are required to pay and in truth give him the power of life and death over the business interests of the United States, presented a provision which in itself takes away from the Congress of the United States, the legislative body, the full and complete power over the purse strings of the Nation given it by the Constitution, a provision which carves out part of the legislative power of the Government and under cover transfers it to the executive department, and to a bureau of the Government, all of whose members are appointed by the President. In that way, disguise it as may be, we change and impair the original plan upon which our institutions were based and under which we have lived for nearly a century and a half and prospered as no other peoples have ever prospered, the fundamental system upon which the Government was founded, the division and partition of its powers by separating them into legislative, judicial, and executive, with provisions thought to be adequate and which have been adequate up to this time to prevent unreasonable invasion by one department of the Government of another. These so-called flexible provisions strike a deadly blow at the very root of the great balancing principle that underlies and permeates the institutions of this great representative Government, which has become the wonder of the world, and our system of government and its institutions the symbol of liberty and of right and of justice and of equality, the beacon light to every other country and every other civilization that exists in the world. At the basis of it, I say, lies this principle of the separation of the powers of the Government. Keeping that separation unimpaired through the years up to this time, nothing has aroused so much the indignation of the patriot and the statesman who loves his country as a threatened invasion of the rights of one of those departments by another.

But most sacred of all the powers conferred upon the legislative body, and the one which should be most carefully safeguarded now and forever if we are to remain free and our institutions are to be preserved, is the control of the purse strings by the people through their legislative body, not only of the Federal Government but of the States, the control absolutely of the power of taxation, to the end that the burdens laid upon the people may have their assent and approval and to the end that they may know always when that burden is going to be increased and when it is going to be reduced.

That was the power with which the flexible tariff provision of the bill sought to deal. It sought to carve out a part of the powers of the people with reference to taxation and to permit the President, with the aid and help of his departmental bureaus, to add upon the necessaries of life 50 per cent to the duty, 50 per cent to the taxes which the Representatives of the people in Congress had already imposed. It undertook to authorize him to change the basis upon which all the duties in the bill were levied and to substitute another basis that even a Republican Senator from the floor of this Chamber—and I refer to the great and able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]—in speaking about a particular item declared that the mere imposition of American valuation upon that item would add 100 per cent to the duty.

How did the proponents of this bill justify the extraordinary powers which they proposed to lodge in the President, and which when undertaken to be usurped by any king in the olden times resulted in his head being cut off or his throne being taken from him? Our forefathers came largely from Great Britain, where the same principle of legislative government obtains as obtains here. Since the time when one of their kings came to grief because he sought to impose taxes which did not have the sanction of the representatives of the people they have been a free State, practically, with a free and representative popular Government, although they have had a King for centuries. During all those long years, Mr. President, the English people, although they are not bound down, as we are, by a rigid written constitution, have not thought it expedient as a matter of public policy to diminish or in any way to curtail the complete and plenary power of the representatives of the people in the imposition of the taxes which the people have to pay. If this flexible tariff provision is not for the purpose of impairing the constitutional legislative power, then it is not for any purpose.

In law what one may not do directly he may not do indirectly. If there be in the Constitution of the United States an edict against the partition or separation from the representatives of the people of the power of taxation—and there is; nobody ever doubted it—that power may not be filched from the hands of the people by any legerdemain of language or any species of evasion or of subterfuge or by any scheme of indirection whatsoever, however adroit and however well adapted it may be to the accomplishment of an illegal, unconstitutional, and a dangerous end.

Mr. President, I have described the character of this proposed grant of power. Of course, when its advocates came to Congress and asked for it they recognized the gravity of their request; they recognized the danger of the grant of this power. So they framed the best excuse, the best device, the best-laid scheme that the ingenuity of smart, shrewd, cunning, and able minds, bent upon the accomplishment of a dangerous purpose and carrying for them millions piled on millions and billions piled on billions of dollars of profit, could possibly devise. What was that excuse? It was that there was a great emergency following the chaos and desolation of war; that that emergency drew into its vortex all nations and produced a disturbed, unsettled, and chaotic condition in all the world; that we had a situation here of which the imagination of man had never conceived; that it was so fraught with danger and difficulties and complications that it could only be relieved by devising a makeshift, temporary power, and, despite its conflict with the Constitution and the practices of our Government, lodging that power in the President.

We were told that this grant of power was to be short lived; that these conditions would pass away, as all conditions of adversity and panic and chaos which for the moment have obtained in the world in the past have vanished; that the recuperative and reconstructive powers of the human race were so great that they would soon master and overcome all of these difficulties; and that it was only for a temporary purpose that this power was asked; and yet, Mr. President, its proponents did not when they wrote the bill fix in the bill any limitation of time upon the power; but when it came here in the Senate, recognizing the fact that it was defended only as an emergency power, recognizing the great dangers that were wrapped up, concealed, and hidden in it, as well as those that were apparent upon its face, the Senate, in the exercise of its functions and having the hope that this invasion of the constitutional rights of the people should be as short lived as possible, prescribed that all these powers which were to be so plenteously flung into the hands of the President, to the benefit of the special interests, to serve them and burden the people with further taxes, should end on July 1, 1924. We intended that this reptile should not crawl the earth any longer than could be helped. That provision went in on the floor of the Senate. It was absolutely consistent with the plea of the advocates of the measure and with the reasons which they advanced. As I remember, there was not any very great objection to it. Yet that did not please the special interests; that was not what they wanted. That is what the people wanted. We expressed the will of the people when we acted. I know that is what the people wanted; every Senator here knows that is what the people wanted; but that was not what the special interests wanted. It would have been of very little value, possibly, to them if its period of life embraced only a few short months. They wanted it to live as long as this tariff bill lived, and if the conference report shall be adopted as it is now brought in these powers given for emergency purposes, these dangerous powers, these unconstitutional powers, these reactionary, these revolutionary powers, these powers abridging the rights of the people and of the Congress with reference to the most fundamental and vital principle of government, namely, the control of the purse strings, will live as long as this bill shall live.

Again, Mr. President, upon the floor of the Senate two amendments were made to the elastic provisions of this act. I think they were offered on the floor of the Senate by Senator REED of Missouri. The commission is required to give public notice of its hearings and reasonable opportunity to the parties interested to be present and offer evidence. One of these amendments offered by Senator REED and adopted by the Senate provided that "said hearings shall be public." The conference struck out this provision requiring that the hearings should be public. The other amendment required the commission to prepare its findings under this section, and required the President to make such findings, hearings, and testimony public as soon as practicable after the issuance of the proclamation under the provisions of the act. This was stricken out by the conferees, thus eliminating the requirement that after action by the President the findings, hearings, and testimony upon which it was based should likewise be made public. In a matter of this vital importance to the people of the country, involving, it may be, an increase in the tax rate of 50 per cent, or changing the basis of the tax from foreign to American valuation, thereby increasing the rate as much as 100 per cent or maybe more in some cases, the people are certainly entitled to the facts upon which these increases in their taxes are to be justified. The Senate so voted, but the conferees thought otherwise. The people will be curious to know why this provision was stricken out; why this desire for withholding the facts from the people; why this denial of publicity was thought advisable by the conference committee. Secrecy in connection with matters of legislation is always repulsive; secrecy in matters of imposing taxes upon the people is shocking. It is out of harmony with the spirit of our institutions. It is repugnant to every sense of fairness and justice. This action of the conferees is deserving of the severest rebuke and alone would justify the rejection of the conference report.

But, Mr. President, the powers granted to the President, as restored by the conference committee in disregard and in contempt of the action of the Senate and of the rights of the people, embrace evils that go still further. The advocates of speedy tariff legislation said—and the business interests of the country responded to what they said—that what business in this country needed was quick and definite action upon the tariff; that the people should know definitely and finally at once what duties they are going to have to pay. Many of the great advocates of protection said that more important than the rates is to have them fixed and definite and the period of transition between the present law and the anticipated enactment made as short and speedy as possible in order that there may be certainty and no longer doubt.

Is there any sane man who does not know that, with the so-called "flexible-tariff" provision in this bill, there can never be any certainty as to any rates written in the bill; that that uncertainty to the extent of 50 per cent up or down must exist as long as the bill shall last? Any industry or any branch of any industry in this country can bring the question of a rate to the attention of the President, and upon the findings provided in the bill the rate may be changed. In this provision of the bill the Republican majority have written a "flexible" tariff; a tariff that will oscillate and vacillate from day to day, the pendulum swinging up one day and back and down the next day.

The powers given the President in the elastic tariff provisions will not only introduce the element of uncertainty of the tariff in a most aggravated form but the powers conferred upon the President will be capable of making or breaking a particular industry, and a political machine will be created under which any business affected, directly or indirectly, by the tariff would not desire to be out of favor with the administration.

Thus it would create and perpetuate business unrest and uncertainty instead of certainty, and the tariff would become a twofold greater football of politics; and the power of the Executive over business, if exercised to the fullest extent and possibility, would bring about a political influence fraught with intolerable consequences and the utmost danger to the people and the integrity of politics.

The uncertainty in business, so far as the tariff affects business—and it affects it most vitally especially when the duties are so high as they are in this bill—is not to be removed by the enactment of the tariff, as was hoped and urged, but it is to be accentuated and continued during the whole life of the bill.

This bill constitutes, in the hands of the executive branch of the Government, the most powerful political influence that ever was created and organized or existed in any government upon the face of this earth. I am not going to discuss the characters of Presidents. All of our Presidents are supposed to be good men. We have one President to-day; we do not know who will be President to-morrow.

Death comes on speedy wings, and comes when not expected. We do know, however, that with this power to increase a rate lodged in the executive branch, if perchance we have a man in the White House who is willing to take political advantage of that fact, it arms him with a power of control over the industries of the country such as no man ought to possess. Yet this power, lodged in the President's hands originally upon the plea of emergency, to last, according to the Senate's action, at most for only a few months, has, by the action of conferees, in utter disregard of the will of the Senate, been extended to the life of the bill.

In this connection I wish to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to a matter that was called to the attention of the conferees in the discussions in the House upon the motion to recommit the conference report. It presents a very remarkable situation. The Senate had made an amendment to the bill with reference to chinaware, placing a duty of 60 per cent on undecorated chinaware and 70 per cent on decorated chinaware. I wish to read a letter written by Mr. David Walker to the Tariff Commission on that subject. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] had offered an amendment to that paragraph in the bill. This letter is dated September 5, 1922. Mr. Walker says:

SEPTEMBER 5, 1922.

TARIFF COMMISSION,
Old Land Office Building, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: On August 19 Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey, secured the passage of an amendment to paragraph 212 of the proposed tariff bill, which reads as follows (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 19, p. 11615):

"In paragraph 213, on page 37, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following:

"Any of the foregoing articles containing 25 per cent or more of calcined bone, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner, 50 per cent ad valorem; painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner, 55 per cent ad valorem."

The Senator from New Jersey, in support of his statement, stated:

"Mr. President, this amendment can not be objected to. It takes the bone china out of the paragraph, and reduces the rate from 60 per cent to 50 per cent on the undecorated, and from 70 per cent to 55 per cent on the decorated. It has been agreed to under a resurvey by the Tariff Commission, and is a reduction in the present paragraph."

Bone china is imported into the United States from England, and constitutes the most expensive and luxurious china made in the whole field of pottery products, domestic or foreign, and is now to be assessed at 55 per cent while the chinaware for the ordinary home remains in the paragraph at 70 per cent.

Inasmuch as the Senator from New Jersey based his amendment on a resurvey of the Tariff Commission, I would be most deeply indebted for a copy of the resurvey which brought about such a peculiar result, and would thank the commission for a copy to be mailed to me at the above hotel. Thanking you for your courtesy in this regard, I beg to remain,

Most sincerely yours, DAVID WALKER.

I have here the statement of the Senator from New Jersey, which I wish to put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In paragraph 213, on page 37, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following:

"Any of the foregoing articles containing 25 per cent or more of calcined bone, not painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner, 50 per cent ad valorem; painted, colored, tinted, stained, enameled, gilded, printed, or ornamented or decorated in any manner, 55 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, this amendment can not be objected to. It takes the bone china out of the paragraph and reduced the rate from 60 to 50 per cent on the undecorated and from 70 to 55 per cent on the decorated. It has been agreed to under a resurvey by the Tariff Commission and is a reduction in the present paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. To Mr. David Walker's letter the Tariff Commission replied by letter, as follows:

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, September 7, 1922.

Mr. DAVID WALKER,
Care Washington Hotel, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of September 5, 1922.

The statement quoted by you from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 19, 1922, was based on erroneous assumptions so far as the Tariff Commission is concerned. The commission has made no resurvey of the subject under discussion, and, if the quoted remarks were intended to imply that the commission had agreed to or recommended any rates, that suggestion also was erroneous.

Very truly yours,

W. S. CULBERTSON, Acting Chairman.

This correspondence and an examination of the records show that as the result of that amendment the duty on undecorated bone china and on fancy decorated bone china purchased by the very rich and the wealthy was reduced to 50 and 55 per cent, and the ordinary chinaware, used by the masses of this country in their humble homes, was left on the dutiable list at 60 per cent if undecorated and at 70 per cent if decorated. That was called to the attention of the conferees, and they made no change. This let this discrimination remain.

With reference to the part taken in this matter by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] I make no criticism; but I wish to put in the RECORD a telegram sent by Mr. David Walker to the Senator from New Jersey with a view of getting information with respect to this matter that he might lay before the conference when it reconvened after the bill was recommitted. This telegram is dated September 13, 1922:

SEPTEMBER 13, 1922.

Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Raritan, N. J.:

Made application to the Tariff Commission for copy of resurvey referred to by you as supporting your amendment on bone chinaware (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 19). Tariff Commission reply reads as follows:

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of September 5. The statement quoted by you from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 19 was based on erroneous assumption so far as the Tariff Commission is concerned. The commission has made no resurvey of the subject under discussion, and if the quoted remarks were intended to imply that the commission had agreed to or recommended any rates that suggestion also was erroneous.

(Signed) "W. S. CULBERTSON."

Please wire immediately, my expense, source of your information as to resurvey, addressing Washington Hotel, Washington, D. C.

DAVID WALKER.

At the time Mr. Walker left here on last Saturday morning he told me he had received no answer to that telegram.

Mr. President, it looks as though I ought not to inject a matter of this sort, and I would not if it did not follow right in the line of the argument that I have been making here, that the conference committee utterly ignored the rights of the people and was subservient to the special interests in the changes in these items to which I have referred. Every Senator here will remember that shortly before we voted upon the tariff bill the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] rose in his place and offered the amendment to which I have referred and stated to the Senate that it was a reduction, and so it was a reduction of the duty on the highest-priced chinaware, some of which costs $500 or $600 a set and $40 and $50 per plate, I am told, and even higher than that. It was a reduction. It was asked by certain interests.

In the hurry and confusion nobody investigated. Nobody discussed the matter at that time. We were adopting amendments or rejecting amendments in quick and rapid order, and this was adopted. And what does it do? In a paragraph in which there is a rate of 70 per cent duty upon high-priced china—fine, decorated, painted, polished, calcined bone china, such as the rich use in their palaces and their homes—and 60 per cent and 70 per cent upon the china which the common people buy, by this amendment the duty upon the highest priced bone china, which is bought only by the very wealthiest class, was reduced to 50 and 55 per cent and the duty upon the common, ordinary china, in daily use in the homes of the people of this country, was allowed to remain at 60 per cent on the undecorated and 70 per cent on the decorated. The conferees had power over this question; it was called to their attention in the most emphatic way by the able and forceful speech and presentation of Mr. GARNER, of Texas, the ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee. I heard his speech. He had substantially the same data I have here to-day. He called it to the attention of the House, and the members of the Committee on Ways and Means were present when he did so. Yet they went out and, serving some industry, I suppose, which had importuned the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and got him to do this horrible thing—unwittingly, I take it—with full knowledge of that, with it ringing in their ears when they went back to conference, they let this rank injustice to the masses of the people of this country and this inexcusable special favor to the very rich people remain unchanged in the bill.

Mr. President, I am a little weary, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McNary	Shortridge
Ball	Glass	Moses	Simmons
Brandegee	Hale	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Harrison	New	Stanfield
Bursum	Heflin	Newberry	Sterling
Calder	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Sutherland
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Swanson
Capper	Kellogg	Oddie	Townsend
Colt	King	Ransdell	Trammell
Cummins	La Follette	Rawson	Underwood
Curtis	Lenroot	Reed, Pa.	Wadsworth
Dial	McCumber	Robinson	Warren
Dillingham	McKellar	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McLean	Shields	Williams

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, it now becomes my duty to discuss some questions of the greatest importance to my State and of no less importance to the whole country, and as I desire to preserve the continuity of my remarks, I request that Senators refrain from interrupting me.

On November 2, 1920, the people of Arizona commissioned me to represent them in this body. I came here with a full knowledge of the responsibility and set about in my own way to fulfill the pledges made to the people of Arizona during that campaign. I have given my best in work and energy, and I believe the record will credit me, at least, with consistency. I have been a party to the legislative grind in this Chamber since April 11, 1921, and no man can doubt my regularity in upholding the policies of the Republican Party, the President of the United States, and the designated leaders of our Government. On this record, Mr. President, I reflect with pride. But that is not all; I stand here to-day making the last appeal to the congressional leaders of the Republican Party to awake and give Arizona what she is entitled to in this legislation, for which I have worked diligently and sincerely.

I made my campaign for the United States Senate principally on a platform of three planks: Protection of American industry without discrimination, through the agency of an equitable tariff; reclamation; and the traditions, platform, and pledges of the Republican Party.

Through cooperation with others and by hard work during the past 18 months I succeeded in getting the Finance Committee to keep the faith, to recognize the needs of Arizona industries in the way of tariff protection, and among other things the committee recommended a duty of 7 cents per pound on long-staple cotton. I sought to raise that rate in the Senate to 15 cents but was defeated. The committee rate of 7 cents was adopted by a vote of 41 to 11, an overwhelming majority. Arizona was content to accept this, as it would at least save its greatest agricultural industry from complete paralysis. Hides were given an equitable duty in the committee bill, and other smaller commodities were protected. We pinned our hopes on the good faith thus far shown, but to-day, Mr. President, as I stand here, I recount the events of this legislation as our items went to the slaughter pen.

Long-staple cotton while in conference was relegated to the scrap heap, and not a single recognition was given Arizona except in items like wool, which were jammed down and kept there by sheer force of concentrated effort on the part of the western Senators. Such trading and ingenious tactics have heretofore never been witnessed, and to those who feel the blow like the people of Arizona and other sections, nothing but revolting disgust enters their thoughts. I wonder, Mr. President, if the leaders do not realize that we of Arizona can read and understand such deception. I wonder if the leaders have ever considered in this trading of theirs that real, red-blooded Americans live on the deserts, the plains, and the swamps. I wonder if they ever have stopped to realize that these red-blooded Americans will not stand for such greed, where one section of the country is paralyzed, just as we are under this bill, simply to swell the money coffers of other sections and selfish individuals.

Mr. President, I serve notice that I shall never subscribe to such tactics so long as I am a Member of this body. I am not alone in this position, and I hope that other Senators will likewise publicly denounce such an imposition upon us as their consciences now demand.

I have been patient, but patience ceases to be a virtue when the very existence of thousands of my constituents is being thrown to the winds in such a manner wholly uncalled for.

Mr. President, I know I am making some pretty bold statements, but while I am at it I might just as well develop my side of the story so that there will be no misunderstanding. In this connection it is needless to go into details about the cost of producing long-staple cotton. That has been previously discussed in this Chamber by my able colleague [Mr. ASHURST] and myself, and the result was we convinced this body almost 4 to 1 that our case had merit. Senators believed our facts and figures when we said that a great infant industry, covering hundreds of thousands of acres, had sprung up in Arizona under the good will and encouragement of our Government which promised further assistance and protection, and we were given relief. We presented the evolution of the desert lands into cotton fields, the product of which furnished an all-important element in winning the war. We recounted the hardships, difficulties, and sacrifices made by the farmers of the deserts in turning their money, their minds, their all into equipment for producing this important product; we recounted the moral obligations on the part of the Government to protect them. The Senate sustained us in this and gave them a bare relief, and when this news was flashed to these hardy men and women they gleamed with new courage and hope.

No one could have suffered by such a protection; yet, Mr. President, what followed? The story is easy to tell. The great tire manufacturers and spinners, all the interests using the raw material, who were already rolling in war profits, not content with the tariff protection provided for their finished products, organized in the old-fashioned way, turned loose their money, spread misleading, unfair, and pernicious propaganda, sent representatives to Washington, among them an ex-Member of this body, who buttonholed the managers of this proposition into a recession of this tariff rate and thereby with the wink of an eye, and for no good reason, smashed this great industry and wiped out the chances of the people for an honest living in producing a needed commodity. Thousands upon thousands of people in my State are ruined, a people who have no superiors, a people who have spent their lives grappling with the hardships of the deserts and who finally won only to lose.

No, Mr. President, the teachings of Lincoln, the doctrines of the old and real Republican Party, the good conscience of the American people will not stand for such treatment.

To substantiate the assertion that organized action and pernicious propaganda and underhand methods were used in bringing about this result, I desire to read from telegrams I have just received from my State, and it is to these people I am held responsible, and to none other do I owe any allegiance, no matter of what faith, creed, or party. I read:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., September 6, 1922.

Hon. RALPH CAMERON,
Washington, D. C.:

I am sending to-night to the New York Tribune and the Cotton Oil News, Dallas, Tex., the following wire: "I was quoted in your paper of August 13, under article, 'Profits for all, hopeless ideal, in cotton growing, by William Wittam,' as reporting the cost of producing the 1920 Pima cotton in the Salt River Valley as $30.57 per acre. This was positive misquoting, for that cost data represented only a small portion of the cost of production, as it did not include cost of rent of land, irrigating, water, picking, hauling, ginning, seed, implements. Please give this same publicity as first article."

Hon. RALPH CAMERON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Articles in New York Tribune and Cotton Trade Journal quote Clark, of Arizona University, on cost producing 1920 Pima cotton crop. Articles absolute misquotation; figures used only represent labor costs for part of season, and do not include rent, interest, irrigating water, seed, management, picking, ginning, depreciation, repairs. Letter from Clark, copy of which follows, gives total itemized costs and is our authority for above statement. Articles malicious propaganda which have been used by parties selfishly interested in combating tariff to discredit uncontroverted figures advanced by Arizona Representatives.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., September 6, 1922.

Senator RALPH H. CAMERON,
Washington, D. C.:

Please make every effort counteract misleading propaganda being employed by tire manufacturers to eliminate 7-cent duty long-staple cotton. Article by William Whittman, New York Tribune, August 13, misquoting S. P. Clark, agronomist, University of Arizona, being used to break down figures presented by you. Article mentioned omits four-fifths of items entering into cost of production. Please see Senators MCCUMBER and SMOOT and Representatives FORDNEY and GREEN personally and impress on them the fact elimination of this duty spells ruin for long-staple cotton industry in Southwest. Ninety thousand acres alone in Salt River Valley this year; growers need more protection than 7-cent duty will afford, but if this crust is denied them they will be flung back into far deeper financial depression than that from which they are now slowly recovering. This industry undertaken at instigation Department of Agriculture, and people taking Government at its word have invested their all in many cases. Hopeful your prompt and vigorous action will save this industry.

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL, Governor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter which gives the facts given in this interview by Professor Clark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

AUGUST 28, 1922.

Mr. W. S. STEVENS,
Monroe and Second Avenue, Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR SIR: Since reading the article published in the Cotton Oil News recently, containing certain data which I had sent the writer showing the cost of production of long-staple cotton in the Salt River Valley, I feel that a statement from me will help correct certain statements in the aforementioned article, which give the impression that the data sent covered the entire cost of production.

The data sent was as follows:

Cost of producing long-staple cotton in the Salt River Valley.

(Borders 11-14-48-52, crop 1920, 9 acres.)

Man hours disking and plowing 70.2, at $0.40	$28.08
Horse hours disking and plowing 2.04, at $0.20	40.80
Man hours, including disking and floating, 30.2, at $0.40	12.00
Horse hours, including disking and floating, 72, at $0.20	14.40
Tractor hours, including disking and floating, 5, at $2	10.00
Man hours cultivating, 78, at $0.40	31.20
Horse hours cultivating, 144, at $0.20	28.80
Man hours hoeing and thinning, 164.2, at $0.40	65.68
Man hours irrigating, 110.2, at $0.40	44.08
Total cost of 9 acres	275.12

Cost of 1 acre, $30.57.

(Borders E-2-11, crop 1919, 10 acres.)

Man hours disking and plowing, 73, at $0.40	$29.20
Horse hours disking and plowing, 152, at $0.20	30.40
Tractor hours disking and plowing, 20, at $2	40.00
Man hours, including disking and floating, 65, at $0.40	26.00
Horse hours, including disking and floating, 130, at $0.20	26.00
Man hours cultivating, 85.2, at $0.40	34.08
Horse hours cultivating, 158, at $0.20	31.60
Man hours hoeing and thinning, 105, at $0.40	42.00
Man hours irrigating, 106.2, at $0.40	42.48
Total cost of 10 acres	301.76
Cost of labor fertilizing above 10 acres	31.40
Total	333.16

Cost of 1 acre, $37.63.

You will see that these figures include only the labor cost of man and teams. Since this data was secured on the Mesa Experiment Station no charges were included for the following:

	Per acre.
Interest on land, depreciation on buildings, etc., taxes (covered by rent)	$60.00
Irrigation water, construction charges, etc	7.00
Cost of seed, 1920	2.40
Ginning, 1920	13.00
Picking, at 4 cents	40.00
Hauling to gin, depreciation on machinery, etc	6.00

These figures should be included in any statements relative to the total cost of producing long-staple cotton, and you may use them as you see fit in writing the editor of the Cotton Oil News.

Yours very truly,

S. P. CLARK, Extension Agronomist.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, by these documents we ascertain that highly paid newspaper writers have been sent to get the data by direct interviews, such as with Professor Clark, of the University of Arizona, so that they might garble and twist it to suit their master's voice in this campaign of misinformation which has been given wide publicity from coast to coast. It is time we get both feet on the solid earth, take a deliberate aim, and kick such un-American methods once and for all into oblivion.

Now, Mr. President, I believe the records of this body will show beyond any question of a doubt that I have been consistent in dealing with the various items affecting different industries in this great country. I have voted for some exorbitant rates with the feeling that it was better to give too much protection than not enough. I am a protectionist, and for 40 years have I spread the doctrine in a rock-ribbed Democratic State. I have remained steady in voting on this bill, realizing the need for a strong tariff in order to stabilize and encourage our industries. No section or industry has suffered as the result of my vote, yet when my State asks for a mere pittance in this bill, a rate that hurts no section, company, or person, we are abruptly refused any consideration whatsoever.

I ask you, Senators, is this discrimination the spirit of the old Republican Party? I ask you, Is this American? I ask you if you are going to sustain the managers of the bill in "trading cotton for potash" at the expense of my State and its worthy people, in order to insure treble profits to two small sections of the country? No; I shall never believe you will until I hear you record your votes.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to make some further comparisons with reference to the "consistency" of these leaders. For the past few days I have been listening to the debate on the Liberian loan, which came on the heels of the conference report on the tariff bill. I have listened carefully to all sides and I want to be fair, but now I wonder how in the world these managers can claim to be consistent. That bill was foisted upon this body, seeking authority to loan Liberia, a Republic having less than 50,000 civilized inhabitants, $5,000,000 based upon what they termed a moral obligation. The able senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], true to his long years of public service, rose in his place and questioned the consistency of, as well as the reasons for, the passage of the bill in the face of the reclamation needs of the West, and the hundreds of other American institutions suffering from the aftermath of a great war. The two propositions side by side present a contradictory picture. It is proposed, on the one hand, to give $5,000,000 outright to a foreign, uncivilized country—for that is what it will amount to—while, on the other hand, the same leaders deal a deathblow on long-staple cotton to more people in Arizona than are in the foreign country. What can be more startling, I ask you? Is it possible that we have gone mad? Mr. President, I am for America first, last, and all the time, and I do not believe this body will tolerate such a crime.

Just a step further, if you please. I am informed by the Agricultural Department that climatic and soil conditions in Liberia are ideal for raising long-staple cotton; that in fact this product is raised in all border States of that country. So, Mr. President, knowing, as we do, that the remainder of this $5,000,000, after these New York bankers are paid, will go to build up agriculture in Liberia, is it not a sorry day when we sit here and sanction the giving of millions of American dollars, paid by the cotton raisers in Arizona and elsewhere, to Liberia to develop a foreign competitive industry that will drive the toilers of our country, engaged in the same industry, deeper and deeper into ruin?

Yet, in the face of these facts, they talk about moral obligations to Liberia. Hear me, Senators, can they, can you, can anyone doubt the moral obligation to protect the men and women of Arizona who were promised outright every assistance in the future by this Government? This damnable argument is so inconsistent that it reeks with deception.

Only a few days ago thirty-five millions were appropriated for improvements on rivers and harbors. I sanctioned it, but no one would have suffered had it not been done. Not long ago $25,000,000 was paid on the basis of an obligation, moral or otherwise, to Colombia.

The political air is seething with propaganda that we should subsidize our American merchant marine to the extent of hundreds of millions. Why? To carry to Boston cotton raised in Egypt and to remove the débris and remains of what was once a populous center of the West, left depleted through the effects of the tariff bill? Fine ideas are these "pipe dreams" concocted by those who, it would seem, never think. If we are going to have ships, all right; if we are going to do these other things, all right; but never will I subscribe to another proposition of such nature unless Arizona gets her just deserts and gets them now.

Is it not an announced and fixed policy to help industries in distress? Did we not extend the dye embargo for several months in order to help that industry find itself after the crash of the war? Then why not protect the long-staple cotton as we have protected other industries in the tariff bill?

Mr. President, at least the long-staple cotton people should be given time to save themselves from disaster before the props are completely knocked from under them. The least human thing this Government could do would be to give them an equitable tariff or embargo for a specified period during which time they would have opportunity to divert their property, their life's savings, and their very existence into the next best industry. For the past year they have had a 7-cent rate on long-staple cotton, and in the face of the greatest financial crash known to them and with the moral obligation of this Government to protect them they have clung steadily to their work and gone deeper and deeper into producing this article. Now, with one stroke, for no sane reason whatsoever, all this relief is wiped away and they will be at the mercy of their debtors, with no earthly means or provision to begin life anew.

So, Mr. President, knowing and fully appreciating the awful calamity which in this event awaits my constituents, thousands of them, I call to your attention the statement made on this floor the other day by the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], wherein he said that the people of my State and the West had been derelict, without excuse in some instances, in the payment to the Government of their debts. In the presence of their attempted crucifixion here to-day I ask you to reflect what a burning statement that was when read by these people heretofore encouraged and assisted by this Government in creating a great industry out of the waste lands of Arizona, California, and other Western States. If I am correct in my inference, Mr. President, I denounce that statement as wholly uncalled for and say that it was an insult to my State. I ask, Mr. President, how can these people pay unless the Government pays its moral obligation to them, upon the strength of which they have built their life's work? I do not forget, Mr. President, the pledges in our great party platform for reclamation; nor do I forget the deathblow recently given these promises by the same leaders who are managing legislation in this Chamber. Our people are not forgetful of such pledges, and they will not forget in this case.

Surely all conceive how important the preservation of reclamation industries is to reclaiming these waste lands.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAMERON. I will yield at the conclusion of my remarks. I do not forget that other industries, such as sugar, are given a high degree of protection. Discriminating protection is worse than none at all, and I denounce this attempt to "rob Peter to pay Paul." Here is an instance where the House of Representatives voted to give us a duty of 7 cents on long-staple cotton under the emergency tariff bill and the Senate under this bill by an overwhelming vote gave us the same rate; but, mind you, Mr. President, the conferees vetoed the overwhelming vote of the Senate and placed this commodity on the free list. When a few, as in this instance, can legislate out of existence an industry involving millions of dollars and the welfare of thousands of people merely because their individual constituents would be robbed of excessive profits it is high time to call a halt. Such methods are augmenting the undercurrent of another revolt in our party, the signs of which are everywhere, and yet we sit here and permit a few to bring about the result of which I complain. It is time to end such blind selfishness.

Mr. President, I have been a lifelong Republican of the old school. I have gone up and gone down with its fortunes, and so far no man can say I "welched" in defeat, although I have had many more defeats than victories while bearing the old party colors. I was sent to the House of Representatives by my party to bring about statehood for Arizona, and I admit the honor of its accomplishment during my service there. I was defeated in the following election by a narrow margin for a seat in this Chamber. I was a Republican of the old stripe in the days of 1912, when such Republicans were hard to find in my State. No one can say I did not stand the test, and it is a happy remembrance to recount the return to the fold of those who honestly parted from our ranks, so that in 1920 a united front was again in evidence and confidence in our party policies was completely restored by the greatest majority in party history. As one of those who stood firm through victory and defeat, I warn the leaders in this Chamber of the aftermath of such leadership and discriminating legislation as indicated in this bill.

The Republican Party was split in 1912 as the result of discriminating tariff legislation. Arizona is not alone in being discriminated against under this bill. A similar cry comes from many other needy sections and industries. So, Mr. President, as one Senator I say that unless the interests of my State are given their just deserts there is but one way for me to answer the roll call on this tariff bill. I was elected by friends and adherents of both the great political parties; the organization of my own party in my State did not look with favor on my attempted return to Congress; and therefore I owe no allegiance to any organization, no matter of what party faith or creed, and if I fail to vote the sentiments of my constituents and friends who sent me here to represent them on questions affecting our existence as a State I am not worthy of their confidence, your confidence, or the confidence of the great and real Republican Party.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment, Mr. President?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I have here a telegram in reference to the same subject discussed by my colleague [Mr. CAMERON], which I ask that the Secretary may read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegram.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., September 15, 1922.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As a final argument when the matter comes up before the Senate again please point out that under the protection of a 7-cent tariff the farmers here have 80,000 acres of cotton ready to pick, and under any condition they should be allowed protection until this cotton and the hold-over cotton from 1920 and 1921 has been marketed. If there is a reason against a permanent tariff on long-staple cotton there is no reason why it should not be retained until the present crops are disposed of. This is admitted even by the cotton buyers here and in the East.

HARRY WELCH,
Secretary Phoenix Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in 1920 the Republican Party, through its orators, specifically and directly promised an import duty on long-staple cotton if intrusted with power. The Republican leaders in the Senate in 1921 and early in 1922 renewed and repeated these promises and encouraged the planting of additional acreage of such cotton in Arizona, but these pledges and promises are to-day broken and disregarded and the cotton industry in Arizona and California is prostrate; in its back is a dagger—a free-trade dagger—thrust there by Republican hands. Esau traded away his birthright for a dish of pottage, but Esau got his pottage. The Senate conferees traded off long-staple cotton for a mess of potash, but did not get their potash.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has been recognized.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to say, first, to the junior Senator from Arizona on this side of the Chamber [Mr. CAMERON] that I agree entirely with him that in the long run it would have been for the best interest of the American people to have given appropriate protection to long-staple cotton. I also agree that it would have been for the benefit of the American farmer in the long run to give adequate protection to potash; but, Mr. President, if we were to have a tariff bill it was necessary that there should be a concurrence of the House of Representatives and the Senate. It was impossible to reach an agreement unless we followed the instruction of the House which followed the action of the Senate in putting potash upon the free list, and also unless we surrendered on the question of long-staple cotton to the conferees of the other House.

I hope the time will come when the American people will act more together in the matter of the protection policy and will develop every possible American industry even though it may call for some little sacrifice for a year or two. Had we followed that rule we would have had protection upon our long-staple cotton until we could have developed the industry in the United States; we would have had protection upon potash until we could have developed the potash industry of this country, and we should not be at the mercy of foreigners in both instances as we are to-day. However, we can not always get what we want in framing a bill. There are the two Houses to be considered; there are political questions as well as industrial questions to be considered, and it was impossible to put either of these commodities at this time upon the protected list.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he would favor a bounty on long-staple cotton in order to give the producers of that commodity some relief?

Mr. McCUMBER. I favored a bounty for the potash industry, as the Senate committee provided, but it was voted out of the bill. I am in favor of anything, whether by way of a bounty or otherwise, which will assist in protecting an American industry and in the end enable it to be developed to such a stage that its operation will be beneficial to the country. I can not answer the Senator's statement directly; I can only answer it by the statement which I have made, that I am in favor of protection for an industry until that industry has become established, and if we can not protect it in one way I would be perfectly willing to protect it in the other way.

Mr. CAMERON. Is there any suggestion the Senator from North Dakota, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, could make whereby assistance might be afforded to the people who are engaged in this industry, who have devoted their labor, their money, and time to it, and have undergone hardships in the effort to make it a success? I think that is a fair question, for if there is any method which can be devised to aid them I should like to see it adopted, and this is the last chance which will be afforded.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, there is no chance upon this bill, because the only question now involved in the consideration of the conference report is, Will the Senate accept the bill as it now stands? All that can be done now is to accept or reject the conference report. However, a bill may be introduced in the House at a moment's notice or a bill may be introduced in the Senate. Such a measure could be taken up at any future time, and I should be pleased to join with the Senator along the line he has indicated.

Mr. CAMERON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS resumed and concluded his speech, which is as follows:

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have finished the substance of my argument with reference to the conference report, and I merely wish to add in that connection a brief statement with reference to the general range of duties in the conference report as compared with those contained in the Senate bill.

While I do not mean to challenge the accuracy of the statement presented by the Senator from North Dakota this morning, I have had a statement prepared for me by what I regard as a competent Government expert, the one furnished me by the department and who has been with me ever since we began the consideration of the tariff bill. He advises me that a careful examination of the conference report as compared with the rates in the Senate and House bills, respectively, shows that there were 938 amendments affecting rates; that of those 938 amendments affecting the duties on various articles, in 727 cases the rates are unchanged from those provided by the Senate; that is to say, the House accepted the Senate rates upon that number, which, expressed in percentages, represents 78 per cent of all the rates in the dutiable list to which amendments were made. The expert to whom I have referred estimates that in 150 cases, representing 16 per cent of the total number of changes made, there have been reductions, and in 61 instances, or 6 per cent, the rates have been increased.

I have here a table showing the House and the Senate rates and the rates as reported by the conference committee in juxtaposition, embracing the 938 rates referred to. An examination of them will show, I think, that the calculation is probably correct; that nearly to the extent of 80 per cent the higher Senate rates were retained unchanged. I think it will show with reference to the reductions—and that is the reason I desire to refer to the table—that where reductions have been made, except in a very few instances, they have been very slight, although, of course, in some instances they have been substantial; and that where increases have been made, while they have also been slight in some cases in many instances they have been considerable.

But speaking at large, it is correct to say that the House substantially accepted the Senate rates, which are the higher rates, and I think it is equally correct to say that the reductions are generally made with reference to matters of comparatively small importance; that there are very few reductions that amount to anything made with reference to items of any very great public interest or importance.

Leaving the conference report, as I indicated in the beginning of my remarks to-day, I want to make some general observations with reference to this bill before it finally passes out of the hands of the Senate.

First, I want to advert to the subject of wool—raw wool—about which there has been so much controversy.

Mr. President, there is in the case of wool, as in the case of cotton and tobacco and many other things, quite a variety of grades. The wool entering into the cloth cost from 12 cents to $1.25 per pound, according to grade.

Imposing a rigid tax of 31 cents per pound upon these wools, coarse and fine, is a clear discrimination against the coarser wools in favor of the finer wools. The only just and reasonable tax against articles of this kind is an ad valorem tax. To tax wool worth 12 cents 31 cents per pound and tax wool worth $1.25 31 cents per pound is a rank injustice and indefensible. It imposes ten times as much tax on the low grades, which, of course, are used in making the clothing of the poorer classes, as is imposed upon the fine grades, used in making the cloth of the rich or well-to-do classes. That is to say, it is a tax of 25 per cent ad valorem upon the fine wools and a tax of 150 per cent on the low-grade wools. That is what the present duty is and that is what the Republican method of taxing raw wools has always amounted to. It is repugnant to common sense. It is revolting to every principle of right and fair dealing and furnishes unanswerable confirmation to the charge that Republican tariffs are written in favor of the classes and to the prejudice of the masses. Its effects and actual operation are shocking and confirm all I have heretofore said in the appeal I have from time to time made in the discussion of this bill in favor of an ad valorem duty, if any was to be imposed, upon raw wools. If a specific duty is to be imposed, it ought to depend upon the quality and intrinsic value of the different grades and not to apply indiscriminately to all wools, irrespective of grade or quality, as is applied in this bill.

I think it is of very great importance that the people of the United States should not be misled with reference to the rate now imposed upon raw wool, as compared with the rates in the present law, the Payne-Aldrich Act, and the emergency act. The comparison with reference to the emergency act is not of any very special importance—from a partisan standpoint of no importance—because, of course, the Republican Party is equally responsible for these high rates, whether they are higher or lower than the emergency rates, because it enacted both rates; but it looks to me as if there has been a somewhat deliberate purpose to mislead the people and to falsify the facts with reference to the rates proposed in the present bill, as compared with former legislation upon this subject.

Mr. President, I ask permission, without reading the whole of it, to incorporate here as a part of my remarks an answer made by the Carded Woolen Manufacturers' Association to these false and misleading statements, this answer being dated Boston, Mass., September 8, 1922. I will print only a part of this document. The whole document does not deal with this subject.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPLY BY CARDED WOOLEN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.

The statement issued by the American Farm Bureau Federation, Chicago, deserves attention not only because of its misleading character but because it comes from an organization that is credited with having brought into existence the so-called farmers' tariff bloc, which has recently driven a wool schedule with a 33-cent scoured content duty on wool through the Senate.

CRUSHING BURDEN ON CONSUMER.

In an attempt to explain away the fact that a scoured content duty of 33 cents per pound will increase the cost of a suit of clothes from $4 to $5 the farm bureau ignores the 33-cent scoured content duty completely and presents a calculation of 9.8 pounds of heavy shrinking western wool at the 1921 price (20 cents a pound), a total of $1.96, as the amount the wool grower received for the wool to make cloth for an all-wool suit of clothes. That, however, has nothing to do with the question of what the 33-cent duty will cost the consumer if put into a tariff act.

The claim, which the farm bureau can not refute, is that a duty of 33 cents per scoured pound added to the cost of wool will increase the retail price of a suit of clothes from $4 to $5, and the retail price of an overcoat about $7 after the unavoidable pyramiding of the first cost by reason of the costs of distribution, including profits, by the wool dealer, spinner, weaver, manufacturing clothier, and retailer. These increases are inevitable in the transaction of business. To ignore the 33-cent scoured content duty and talk about the 1921 cost of western grease wool, as the farm bureau does, is transparent evasion, and to ignore the costs of distribution, which are necessarily based on the value of merchandise, is to ignore facts in order to bolster up the farm bureau's case.

HIGHER PRICES AND POORER QUALITY.

It is important that every consumer of wool goods should keep in mind the fact that this increase in the cost of clothing will be brought about in two ways, one being to add the increase to the retail price for a garment with the quality unchanged, and the other way being to lower the quality of the cloth by using mixtures of shoddy, cotton, and poor wool and selling the garment for the same amount or even at a reduced price.

The farm bureau presents the same fallacious reasoning when referring to the total annual cost of the 33-cent duty to the consumer. We placed the annual cost at $310,000,000, based on a consumption of 306,000,000 pounds of scoured wool, and on allowances of 10 per cent, 15 per cent, 17½ per cent, 22½ per cent, and 33⅓ per cent to the wool dealer, spinner, weaver, manufacturing clothier, and retailer, respectively, for costs of distribution, including profits.

In answer to this showing all that the Farm Bureau gives is the figures for the value of wool produced in 1921 and 1922. Such figures would be wholly irrelevant even if they covered both domestic and imported wool, but to cap the climax the Farm Bureau omits imported wool entirely, although it comprises practically two-thirds of the wool consumed in the United States. Such is the argument from that temporarily omnipotent farmers' bloc before the Finance Committee, the Senate, and the House of Representatives bow the knee. The Farm Bureau is like Senator LODGE in 1908, when he said to a man who was urging some method of securing information for the revision of the tariff: "Information? We don't want information. What we want is votes."

RUSHING IN WHERE FORDNEY FEARS TO TREAD.

The next paragraph in the Farm Bureau's bulletin is an attempt to refute the statement that the 33-cent duty is 83 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich tariff. Here we find the Farm Bureau rushing in where even Chairman FORDNEY now fears to tread a second time. The Farm Bureau, as in the preceding paragraphs, starts in by ignoring the point at issue, the comparative height of the 33-cent Fordney-McCumber scoured content duty and the Payne-Aldrich grease weight duty on wool, and begins to talk about the old 4-to-1 ratio for the compensatory duty on goods in the Payne-Aldrich Schedule K. No line of reasoning could be more ridiculous or irrelevant. The question is, How does the 33-cent scoured content duty compare with the Payne-Aldrich wool duty? As the Farm Bureau evidently will not answer, we will give the answer to that question here.

EIGHTY-THREE PER CENT ABOVE THE PAYNE-ALDRICH BILL.

The Senate bill imposes a duty of 33 cents per pound on the scoured content of wool regardless of its quality, condition, or value. The Payne-Aldrich Schedule K placed a duty of 11 cents per pound on class 1 wool if unwashed, 22 cents per pound if washed, and 33 cents per pound if scoured; on class 2 wool the Payne-Aldrich duty was 12 cents per pound whether washed or unwashed. During the four years of the Payne-Aldrich bill's troubled life, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, wool of class 1 and class 2 was imported and entered for consumption as follows:

	Grease.	Scoured.
Weight.....pounds..	355,786,357	9,293
Value.....	$81,917,590	$2,285
Duty paid.....	$39,624,864	$3,075
Duty per pound.....cents..	11.13	33
Duty, equivalent ad valorem.....per cent..	48.4	134.6
Duty per schedule pound.....cents..	18	33

These official statistics of wool imported under the ill-starred Payne-Aldrich bill show that the 11 and 12 cent rates on grease wool were the effective rates, the imports of scoured wool subject to the 33-cent rate being negligible, the proportion being 38,285 pounds of grease wool to 1 pound of scoured wool. The reason for this disproportion is found in the ad valorem equivalents of the specific duties, 48 per cent on the grease wool and 134 per cent on the scoured wool.

Under the Payne-Aldrich bill no grease wool shrinking in scouring much more than 50 per cent was imported, the bulk of the imports shrinking much less, the average shrinkage being not far from 38 per cent, making the scoured content equivalent of the effective Payne-Aldrich duty on wool 18 cents per pound. Consequently, the 33-cent scoured content wool duty of the Fordney-McCumber bill is 83 per cent higher than the effective duty on wool under the Payne-Aldrich bill.

That is the unvarnished truth. The statement on this point by the Farm Bureau is but a mass of irrelevant words about the 4 to 1 Payne-Aldrich compensatory duties on goods, and is calculated only to conceal the truth.

THE DIFFERENCE IN COST PRETENSE.

The Farm Bureau states that "the present tariff is being prepared on the basis of the difference in cost of foreign and domestic articles." We deny it. The difference in cost as a basis of the Fordney-McCumber wool tariff is but a pretense of the Farm Bureau which represents the special interests that the so-called farmers' bloc serves.

The investigation of foreign and American costs of producing wool by the United States Tariff Commission is worthless so far as disclosing the difference of cost is concerned. As for the investigation of foreign costs of woolgrowing its worthlessness is shown by the following extracts from the commission's report: "Detailed costs of running sheep in Argentina are not available" (p. 389); "no detailed costs of running sheep in Argentina were made by the Tariff Commission" (p. 405); "the cost of wool per pound can not be determined accurately from these figures (nor from any other data for that matter) where sheep are also regularly marketed" (p. 408); "the figures are estimates only, but * * * are trustworthy as far as they go" (p. 406); "there may be some question as to whether the interest (now omitted) should be included, * * *; many incidental expenses are also omitted"

The fact is the Tariff Commission's figures are mere estimates, collected, not by the Tariff Commission's agents but by American consuls from Tom, Dick, and Harry in South Africa, Australia, and Argentina, with no possibility of verification, and then rearranged when they reached Washington. The Tariff Commission makes no attempt to conceal this fact, and will not stand back of the figures.

The cost figures for the United States are little better, as will be seen by referring to page 197 of the commission's report where it is stated that the investigation covered only 385,000 in 1921, out of a total of about 25,000,000 for the range States, an average of about 1 sheep out of every 65.

Furthermore, the figures in this mass of estimates and guesswork, gathered from distant regions by people calculating costs each in his own way, are based on the grease weight of wools varying widely in quality and shrinkage. Such are the figures with which the Farm Bureau now seeks to justify the 33-cent duty on the scoured content of wool, a duty that varies from 25 per cent ad valorem on the high-priced wool for clothing for the rich, to 250 per cent on the lower grades, with an average between 100 per cent and 200 per cent ad valorem. And these outrageous duties are to be placed on the raw material for clothing the American people. What the Farm Bureau is after is expressively high prices for wool regardless of what market conditions may be and regardless of the welfare of the American consumers.

WOOL SCHEDULE BASED ON A BARGAIN.

No attempt worthy of the name has been made to determine either the American or the foreign cost of wool or wool goods. The Fordney-McCumber wool schedule, like the Payne-Aldrich Schedule K, has been based, not on cost differences but on a bargain between a group of western Senators and Congressmen, known as the farmers' tariff bloc, and another group from the East and Middle West who are representing the interests of the worsted spinners. The arrangement, compact, gentlemen's agreement, or whatever it may be called, is that the farm bloc will support the duties on wool goods in return for the worsted bloc's support of the unlimited 33-cent scoured content duty on wool, and vice versa, that the worsted bloc will support the wool duty in return for the farm bloc's support of the duties on goods.

VOTING AT THE RING OF THE BELL.

In plain view of the entire country, without consulting the consumers, who must bear the burden, without making any attempt to determine either the foreign or American cost of production, these two blocs or groups of legislators during recent weeks have carried out the sordid bargain at the behest of the special interests that are planning to profit under it. The members of these two allied blocs have been deaf, dumb, and blind to the truth that has been placed before them. They have legislated with closed minds, as Chairman MCCUMBER admitted in the following words on July 26, when reminded that only one Republican was in his seat during the discussion of the wool schedule (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 11630):

"The Senators who will vote on this matter have their minds made up, enough of them. They will come in at the ring of the bell."

Instead of discussing the proposed Fordney-McCumber wool schedule and its certain and probable effects if made a law, the Farm Bureau talks about wholesale prices of clothing before the war and during the recent period of deflation.

The Farm Bureau's reference to the Underwood duty of 35 per cent on clothing is not only irrelevant, like nearly all of its statements, but it is also an attempt to conceal the bargain between the farm bloc and the worsted bloc. Why does the Farm Bureau avoid the Fordney-McCumber duties rising as high as 200 per cent on wool, 231 per cent on tops, 143 per cent on yarn, 130 per cent on dress goods, and 170 per cent on heavy wool cloths, and confine its statement to the Underwood rate of 35 per cent ad valorem on clothing? It is because these excessively high rates on tops, yarn, and cloth are due mainly to the compensatory duties made necessary by the excessively high scoured content duty of 33 cents per pound on wool, which the farm bloc has forced through the Senate, and also because it is part of the arrangement between the farm bloc and the worsted bloc that each bloc will keep its mouth shut about the excessive rates demanded by the other bloc and for which both blocs will vote at the ring of the bell.

CARDED WOOLEN MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION,
EDWARD MOIR, President.

BOSTON, MASS., September 8, 1922.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will be observed from reading this statement, which I wish to have inserted in full at this point in my remarks, that this association of woolen manufacturers, speaking through its president, Mr. Edward Moir, discusses the rates of the present bill on raw wool as compared with those in the Payne-Aldrich bill. Speaking about a statement made by the Farm Bureau Bulletin, it says:

The next paragraph in the Farm Bureau's bulletin is an attempt to refute the statement that the 33-cent duty is 83 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

The conference report has reduced this rate from 33 to 31 cents. This statement was made before that reduction, and has reference to a 33-cent rate, which, it declares, is 83 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich tariff.

The document continues:

Here we find the Farm Bureau rushing in where even Chairman FORDNEY now fears to tread a second time. The Farm Bureau, as in the preceding paragraphs, starts in by ignoring the point at issue, the comparative height of the 33-cent Fordney-McCumber scoured-content duty and the Payne-Aldrich law grease-weight duty on wool, and begins to talk about the old 4-to-1 ratio for the compensatory duty on goods in the Payne-Aldrich Schedule K. No line of reasoning could be more ridiculous or irrelevant. This question is, How does the 33-cent scoured-content duty compare with the Payne-Aldrich wool duty? As the Farm Bureau evidently will not answer, we will give the answer to that question here.

83 PER CENT ABOVE THE PAYNE-ALDRICH BILL.

The Senate bill imposes a duty of 33 cents per pound on the scoured content of wool regardless of its quality, condition, or value. The Payne-Aldrich Schedule K placed a duty of 11 cents per pound on class 1 wool if unwashed.

That is, if in the grease—

22 cents per pound if washed; and 33 cents per pound if scoured; on class 2 wool the Payne-Aldrich duty was 12 cents per pound whether washed or unwashed. During the four years of the Payne-Aldrich bill's troubled life, 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913, wool of class 1 and class 2 was imported and entered for consumption as follows:

Mr. President, I should like to emphasize this statement. Here are the entire imports of wool during the life of the Payne-Aldrich law:

Weight, in grease, 355,786,357 pounds.

The wool bearing the 11-cent rate in the Payne-Aldrich law—

Scoured only, 9,293 pounds.
Value (of wool imported in the grease during that time), $81,973,590.

That is in the grease, dutiable at 11 cents a pound.

Scoured (dutiable at 33 cents a pound, value of imports during that time only), $2,285.
Duty paid (on the wool in the grease), $39,624,864. Scoured, $3,075.
Duty per pound (on the wool imported in the grease), 11.13 cents; scoured, 33 cents.
Duty, equivalent ad valorem, grease, 48.4 per cent; scoured, 134.6 per cent.
Duty per scoured pound, 18 cents.

Mr. President, the duty upon the scoured basis equaled the pending taxes on raw wool. It will be seen that practically all of the wool imported under the Payne-Aldrich bill was in the grease condition; and paying duty on the same basis—the scoured content—that this bill provides, the duty upon that wool would have been 18 cents, and practically all that ever came in under the Payne-Aldrich Act came in under that duty of 18 cents on the scoured content.

These official statistics of wool imported under the ill-starred Payne-Aldrich bill show that the 11 and 12 cent rates on grease wool were the effective rates—

The others were not effective rates, because wool of that character did not come in; and, Mr. President, when it was possible under the provisions of a law to introduce wool in the grease for 11 cents a pound, regardless of the scoured content, any manufacturer, it seems to me, would have been worse than an idiot if he had, as a matter of fact, imported wool or bought wool imported not in the grease. He would have been voluntarily paying a higher duty when he could get a lower one; and the imports show, of course, that it was not brought here except in the grease, except in such negligible quantities that it is not worthy of mention.

The wool came here just as the exporters knew the market of this country would take it, and in no other form.

I again quote:

These official statistics of wool imported under the ill-starred Payne-Aldrich bill show that the 11 and 12 cent rates on grease wool were the effective rates, the imports of scoured wool subject to the 33-cent rate being negligible, the proportion being 38,285 pounds of grease wool to 1 pound of scoured wool.

Just think about that.

The reason for this disproportion is found in the ad valorem equivalents of the specific duties, 48 per cent on the grease wool and 134 per cent on the scoured wool. Under the Payne-Aldrich bill no grease wool shrinking in scouring much more than 50 per cent was imported, the bulk of the imports shrinking much less, the average shrinkage being not far from 38 per cent, making the scoured content equivalent of the effective Payne-Aldrich duty on wool 18 cents per pound. Consequently, the 33 cents scoured content wool duty of the Fordney-McCumber bill is 83 per cent higher than the effective duty on the wool under the Payne-Aldrich law.

I do not think that requires any particular confirmation, but I have some additional evidence here which will hardly be disputed. I have here a statement which I want to put into the RECORD, a statement prepared for me by a man I regard as our greatest expert in this country with reference to tariff rates. That is the esteem and estimate in which he is held by all the departments of the Government and by all committees dealing with the subjects of tariff and revenue. His statement is with reference to the emergency tariff, and I shall place it in the appendix of my remarks.

I showed this expert the estimates made by the Carded Wool Manufacturers, showing the exact amount of wool imported in the grease and the scoured content, and showing that the duty in the grease was 18 cents under the Payne-Aldrich law on the scoured content, and that practically all the wool that came in under the Payne-Aldrich law was in the grease state and took the benefit of that 18 cents on the scoured content. I asked him if that was reasonably correct, and he said it was.

I asked him, then, to get me the identical facts upon the same basis with reference to the emergency tariff, because I wanted to know whether the rates in this bill were less than those in the emergency tariff law, as they had been declared to be.

Here is a statement as to class 1 during the life of the emergency tariff law. I asked that he get me a statement of all the imports of wool under the emergency tariff, just as this association got a statement of all the wool imports under the Payne-Aldrich law; and I told him to let me see what kind and grades of wool came in and what duty it took. He did this, and his statement shows as follows:

Class 1 covered unwashed wool; that is, in the grease. Under the emergency tariff, up to this time, the imports were 382,494 pounds, valued at $59,567; duty, $57,374. Equivalent ad valorem, 96.32 per cent.

Of the washed, which took the 22 per cent rate, only 26,000 pounds came in during the life of the emergency tariff law.

The tax in the Fordney-McCumber bill is imposed on the scoured content, which they attempted to compare with the emergency rate of 45 per cent. Scoured wool under the emergency act took a rate of 45 per cent, and during the life of the emergency tariff the imports amounted to only 271 pounds, valued at $130. Sorted, unwashed, 2,000 pounds.

The imports of class 2, unwashed, or in the grease, were 77,830 pounds. Of washed, which takes the second rate of 22 cents, there were only 379 pounds imported; sorted and unwashed, 550 pounds.

Of the unwashed, under the emergency tariff act, there came in 764,772 pounds; of washed, only 4,742 pounds.

The total amount which came in under the emergency tariff law was 1,259,203 pounds.

All of this except 36,157 pounds was unwashed or in the grease, and paid 15 cents a pound on the scoured content. It was unskirted, and it was not caught by the penalty which you put in the bill of double duty where the wool is brought in skirted.

Let us get the averages. Out of a total of more than a million and a quarter pounds, only 36,000 took a rate higher than 15 cents.

The average duty on wool imported was 24.1 cents per pound. Duty, 15 in grease; washed, 30; scoured, 45. The average duty paid, based on the scoured basis, during the whole life of the emergency tariff law, which is what I want to get at, and which is the basis of duties fixed in this bill, amounted to about 22½ cents a pound on the scoured content.

I will give the name of this expert in private to anybody who desires it. I do not wish to give it publicly because it might be embarrassing.

I present another statement made by the Carded Woolen Manufacturers' Association, of Boston, which I ask to have incorporated in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WOOL TARIFF MISTAKES OF MR. LONGWORTH—A STATEMENT BY THE CARDED WOOLEN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION OF BOSTON, MASS.

BOSTON, MASS., September 7, 1922.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We find in the discussion of the wool tariff in the House of Representatives on September 1 statements by yourself and Mr. GREEN of Iowa, both members of the tariff conference committee, which give such an erroneous idea of what the emergency and proposed Fordney-McCumber rates actually are that we are writing this letter to clear up the misunderstanding, and trust you will insert it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that purpose. The statements to which we refer are as follows:

"Mr. LONGWORTH. The highest rates provided in the Senate bill are very much lower than in the existing law. I read from the existing law the rates of duty imposed on wool, commonly known as clothing wool. They are: 'Unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents per pound; scoured, 45 cents per pound.' The highest rate on scoured wool in the Senate bill is 33 cents a pound. In other words, the duties in the existing law are 12 cents a pound higher than the highest rates in the Senate bill. Therefore, if the tariff would have any effect on the price of woolens, as this man says it will, its effect will be to greatly decrease the price of clothing. [Applause.]

"Mr. GREEN. The gentleman is aware, but evidently has overlooked it for a moment, that there is over 100,000,000 pounds of wool in bond in Boston now waiting to come in when the lower rates are put into effect. They would not be held in bond that way if there was going to be a rise."

THE "SKIRTING" CLAUSE JOKER.

In telling the House what the emergency rates are, you told only part of the story, omitting to refer to the following skirting clause joker in the emergency act:

"On wool and hair provided for in this paragraph, which is sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, the duty shall be twice the duty to which it would otherwise be subject, but not more than 45 cents per pound." [This means 45 cents per pound in the greasy condition.]

As it has long been the general custom to "skirt" foreign wool, the immediate effect of the skirting clause in the emergency act was to double the duty on nearly all greasy wool available for export to the United States.

The effect of "skirting" wool is to increase the value per pound approximately 5 per cent. That is to say, unskirted grease wool valued at 30 cents per pound would be worth about 31½ cents per pound after the "skirts" were removed. Under the emergency act the 30-cent unskirted wool would pay a duty of 15 cents, or 50 per cent ad valorem, while the 31½-cent skirted wool would pay a duty of 30 cents, or 95 per cent ad valorem.

This penalty placed on skirted wool and the great reduction in the duty on unskirted wool under the emergency act have had their natural effect of diverting imports to wool in the unskirted condition. This change would have been more rapid if the emergency law had not rested under the constant threat of repeal by the passage of a so-called permanent tariff, but unskirted wool is now being imported at the 15-cent emergency rate and if the emergency tariff should become in fact, as well as nominally, a "permanent" law, foreign wool would be imported exclusively in an unskirted condition.

Now, the double duty of the emergency act on skirted wool is to all intents and purposes an embargo, as is shown by the 100,000,000 pounds of grease wool now held in bond, most of which is skirted and subject to a duty of 30 cents per pound. As the bulk of this 100,000,000 pounds of wool will shrink in scouring about 50 per cent, it follows that the embargo rate on the scoured content of such wool is 60 cents per pound. If it were unskirted wool the emergency tariff would be 30 cents per pound of scoured content.

WHAT THE EMERGENCY DUTY ACTUALLY IS.

But this is not the whole story of the emergency duty on wool. A very large part of the world's wool clip shrinks in scouring much less than 50 per cent. Unskirted wool shrinking as little as 20 to 30 per cent is now being imported under the 15-cent emergency rate. On the unskirted wool shrinking 20 per cent this 15-cent emergency rate is equal to a duty of (15÷.80) 17½ cents per pound of scoured content. On the wool shrinking 30 per cent it is equal to (15÷.7) 21½ cents per pound of scoured content.

Such are the rates under which business would be carried on under the emergency act if that act were actually instead of nominally "permanent."

CONFUSING "SCOURED WOOL" AND "SCOURED CONTENT."

Another mistake which you and Mr. GREEN made on September 1 was in representing the emergency wool duty as being 45 cents per pound of scoured content, and comparing this rate with the 33-cent scoured-content duty of the Fordney-McCumber Senate bill. The fact is that the 45-cent rate in the emergency act applies only to wool imported in the scoured condition. As an indication of what the emergency wool duty actually amounts to, the 45-cent rate is as misleading as was the 33-cent rate on scoured wool in the old Schedule K from 1867 to 1913. The woolgrowers supported that indefensible schedule because they thought that under it the duty on the scoured content of grease wool was represented by the 33-cent rate on wool imported in the scoured condition. The eyes of the woolgrowers were opened to the truth during the agitation over Schedule K from 1909 to 1913, and then they turned to a duty on the scoured content, which they have recently forced into the Senate bill, making it 33 cents per pound. How badly the woolgrowers were fooled for over 40 years, from 1867 to 1912, is shown by the fact that out of 355,795,650 pounds of wool entered for consumption during the four years from 1909 to 1913, under the Payne-Aldrich law, only 9,293 pounds was in the scoured condition subject to the 33-cent rate, the remainder being grease wool on which the 11-cent rate was equivalent to an average duty of 18 cents per pound of scoured content; that is, only 1 pound of scoured wool to every 38,285 pounds of wool in the grease.

Why this disproportion? Because the 33-cent rate was a practical embargo with the ad valorem equivalent running as high as 300 per cent on the wool that was shut out, and amounting to 135 per cent on the 9,000 pounds that reached this country, probably by some mistake; while the grease-weight duty, under which substantially all the imported wool was brought in, was equivalent to 18 cents per pound of scoured content, or 48 per cent ad valorem, because of the light shrinkage averaging about 38 per cent.

The mistake the woolgrowers made from 1867 to 1913 regarding the 33-cent duty on wool when imported in the scoured condition under Schedule K, you and Mr. GREEN made on September 1, when you accepted the 45-cent duty on wool imported in the scoured condition as representing the emergency duty on wool. The fact is that the emergency tariff act of 1921 involves all the crookedness of the old Schedule K wool duty in addition to the outrageous double duty of the skirting-clause joker, with an increase of 36 per cent in the rate from 11 cents to 15 cents.

As the 11-cent grease wool duty of Schedule K was equivalent to (11÷.62) 18 cents per pound of scoured content on the wool actually imported, so the 15-cent grease-wool duty of the 1921 emergency tariff would, in the course of two or three years, become equivalent to (15÷.62) 25 cents per pound of scoured content if the law remained in effect long enough for the growers of wool in South America and Australia to deliver their wool in unskirted condition.

COMPARISON OF THREE WOOL TARIFFS.

The above statement of the facts about the Payne-Aldrich, 1921 emergency, and Fordney-McCumber wool duties, shows plainly how misleading is your statement that the enactment of the 33-cent scoured content wool duty of the Senate bill would mean a reduction as compared with the emergency act now in effect. Put in its simplest form for purposes of comparison, the truth about the scoured-content equivalents of these three wool tariffs is as follows:

Payne-Aldrich, 18 cents per pound.
Emergency act, 25 cents per pound.
Fordney-McCumber, 33 cents per pound.

Considered as a permanent tariff, the emergency wool duty is 36 per cent higher than the indefensible Payne-Aldrich wool duty.

The proposed Fordney-McCumber duty of 33 cents per pound of scoured content is 83 per cent higher than the indefensible Payne-Aldrich wool duty.

Any statement to the contrary is not in accordance with the facts.

STOCK PLEA OF REPUBLICAN ORATORS.

Nevertheless, the unfounded claim that the Fordney-McCumber wool duty represents a reduction from the emergency tariff has for months been spread broadcast from the Senate Chamber and the stump by the most distinguished members of the dominant party, and having been taken up by their lieutenants, is rapidly becoming a stock plea of Republican orators.

It is a serious offense against good government when an excessive and unjust tax is placed on the people. That offense is aggravated when the legislators not only impose the tax but represent to the people who must pay the tax that it is less than it actually is. And that is the unfounded impression that Senators LODGE, SMOOT, and MCCUMBER, and now you and Mr. GREEN of Iowa, have conveyed to the public and to your associates in Congress.

The ease with which uninformed people accept this claim as to the wool duty was illustrated during the discussion in the House on September 1, when Mr. MAGEE asked you, "Would the gentleman state the House rate?" You replied by repeating the statement, which we have shown to be unfounded, that the Senate rates on wool represent a reduction from the rates of the emergency act. And Mr. MAGEE apparently was satisfied with your reply. If Mr. MAGEE, who has been a Member of the House during the nearly two years that the Fordney-McCumber bill has been under consideration, can at this late date be deceived by the claim, how easy it must be to mislead the voters throughout the country, the great majority of whom have had no opportunity to become familiar with the technicalities of the wool schedule.

WANTED IN CONGRESS—THE WHOLE TRUTH.

Because of the great importance of the wool tariff to the 110,000,000 people in this country, we ask you and Mr. GREEN to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a correction of the mistakes made in your discussion in the House of Representatives on September 1. This you can do either by inserting this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or by making in your own words a comprehensive statement of the facts about the Payne-Aldrich, the emergency, and the proposed Fordney-McCumber duties on wool.

And in such a statement it would be most fitting for you to include the great truths that—

(1) Any specific duty on materials, like wool, varying widely in value per pound, is necessarily unjust and discriminatory. By excluding medium and low priced wools, specific duties compel American wool manufacturers to lower the quality of wool goods by substituting shoddy, cotton, and poor wool for the good wool that they can not obtain.

(2) The only duty on such materials that is free from injustice is one based on value, the rate being a uniform percentage of the value, the amount of the duty collected increasing or decreasing as the value increases or decreases.

(3) The underlying cause of the turmoil over the wool schedule since 1867 is that the Republican Party has persisted, as it is still persisting, in placing specific duties on wool and wool goods instead of adopting ad valorem duties which affords the only basis for a fair tariff on wool and its products.

(4) The specific tariff on wool, as proposed in the House and Senate drafts, is not only open to all the inherent defects of specific duties in general, but has the added defect that its administration is impracticable. If made a law, it will be subject to unavoidable and serious errors and open the door to fraud on the Government.

Only by making the whole truth known about both specific and ad valorem duties on wool will it be possible for the legislators to reform the wool schedule, which has been the breeding place of discrimination and special privilege under the law during 44 of the 55 years since 1867.

Respectfully,

CARDED WOOLEN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.
EDWARD MOIR, President.

Mr. SIMMONS. This seems to be addressed to Mr. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, correcting some very remarkably erroneous and misleading statements made by that gentleman on the floor of the House of Representatives. I shall read but a small portion of this statement. They state:

As the 11-cent grease-wool duty of Schedule K was equivalent to 18 cents per pound of scoured content on the wool actually imported, so the 15-cent grease-wool duty of the 1921 emergency tariff would in the course of two or three years become equivalent to 25 cents per pound of scoured content if the law remained in effect long enough for the growers of wool in South America and Australia to deliver their wool in unskirted condition.

COMPARISON OF THREE WOOL TARIFFS.

The above statement of facts about the Payne-Aldrich, 1921 emergency, and Fordney-McCumber wool duties shows plainly how misleading is your statement—that the enactment of the 33-cent scoured-content wool duty of the Senate bill would mean a reduction as compared with the emergency act now in effect. Put in its simplest form for purposes of comparison the truth about the scoured-content equivalents of these three wool tariffs is as follows:

That is Mr. LONGWORTH'S statement—

Payne-Aldrich, 18 cents per pound.
Emergency act, 25 cents per pound.
Fordney-McCumber, 33 cents per pound.

Considered as a permanent tariff, the emergency wool duty is 36 per cent higher than the indefensible Payne-Aldrich wool duty.

The proposed Fordney-McCumber duty of 33 cents per pound of scoured content is 83 per cent higher than the indefensible Payne-Aldrich wool duty.

Any statement to the contrary is not in accordance with the facts.

I wish to read further from this only as to one thing, and that is the story about the hundred million pounds of wool in the grease now held in bond. The truth about that, as I have learned from inquiry and as I will show from this statement, is that most of that hundred million pounds of wool is skirted wool. It was the kind of wool that was not bought by the manufacturers during the life of the emergency act, because that act proposed a penalty of double duty when the wool was skirted, although the act of skirting it only added 5 per cent in value per pound. Therefore they brought it in unskirted. But it was supposed that we were just about to pass a tariff bill. Assurances were given and were confided in and acted upon that we were to have a speedy enactment of the tariff measure, and they began to bring in the wool in the skirted condition. When it got here it was discovered that instead of 15 cents per pound, in the grease, it would have to pay 30 cents a pound under the penalty clause of the emergency act. If its scoured content was only 50 per cent, as is usually the case, it would have to pay double that, or 60 cents a pound. Of course, no manufacturer would buy under those circumstances. It was simply put in bond because it would have to pay those penalties, and, paying the penalties, the duty would be 60 cents a pound upon the scoured content, which was prohibitive.

Now let us see what they say about that:

In telling the House what the emergency rates are you told only part of the story, omitting to refer to the following skirting-clause joker in the emergency act:

"On wool and hair, provided for in this paragraph, which is sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, the duty shall be twice the duty to which it would otherwise be subject, but not more than 45 cents per pound." (This means 45 cents per pound in the greasy condition.)

As it has long been the general custom to "skirt" foreign wool, the immediate effect of the skirting clause in the emergency act was to double the duty on nearly all greasy wool available for export to the United States.

The effect of "skirting" wool is to increase the value per pound approximately 5 per cent. That is to say, unskirted grease wool valued at 30 cents per pound would be worth about 31½ cents per pound after the "skirts" were removed. Under the emergency act the 30-cent unskirted wool would pay a duty of 15 cents, or 50 per cent ad valorem, while the 31½-cent skirted wool would pay a duty of 30 cents, or 95 per cent ad valorem.

This penalty placed on skirted wool and the great reduction in the duty on unskirted wool under the emergency act have had their natural effect of diverting imports to wool in the unskirted condition. This change would have been more rapid if the emergency law had not rested under the constant threat of repeal by the passage of a so-called permanent tariff, but unskirted wool is now being imported at the 15-cent emergency rate, and if the emergency tariff should become in fact, well as nominally, a "permanent" law, foreign wool would be imported exclusively in an unskirted wool.

Now, the double duty of the emergency act on skirted wool is to all intents and purposes an embargo, as is shown by the 100,000,000 pounds of grease wool now held in bond, most of which is skirted and subject to a duty of 30 cents per pound. As the bulk of this 100,000,000 pounds of wool will shrink in scouring about 50 per cent, it follows that the embargo rate on the scoured content of such wool is 60 cents per pound.

I have here a letter which I propose to read into the RECORD from a very responsible house, Lesher, Whitman & Co. (Inc.), as follows:

LESHER, WHITMAN & CO. (INC.),
New York, September 14, 1922.

Senator F. M. SIMMONS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We have been in business for over 70 years and are very large distributors of linings for men's clothing, and have developed a cloth called granite double end, of which we inclose a small sample of one style and quality, which has a steady sale of several thousands of pieces every month, and the sales are on the constant increase, because we have for more than 12 years guaranteed this lining to outwear the garment, and it has also many other good qualities which are just as important. It is sold over the whole United States.

These coat linings go into medium grades of clothing and are made from coarse cross-bred wool known here as 5s quality South American, and the same grade in England is known as 36/40s. This wool shrinks about 30 per cent. It is all imported. It does not come into direct competition with domestic wool and a duty would not help the wool-growing industry, but would add to the cost of clothing to a large percentage of people of ordinary earning power. This could be rectified by placing a limit on these coarse wools whereby the duty should not exceed 50 per cent ad valorem.

The price of this wool in the grease is now about 14 cents a pound, and I beg to give you herewith a few figures showing what this wool would cost with a duty of 31 cents per scoured pound.

Cost of wool:

70 per cent { 1400 / 140 } 20 cents, 31 cents duty scoured, 1 pound, 51 cents.

Percentage of duty, 155 per cent.

Payne-Aldrich duty on this class of wool, 11 cents.

Payne-Aldrich duty:

70 per cent { 1100 / 70 / 400 } 16 cents, 20 cents=36 cents.

51—36=15 cents, or nearly 94 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich duty on this class of wool.

I shall not read the balance of the letter. I do not know anything about it except what the writer states.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will answer the letter and ask the writer why he did not complain when he was drawing 44 cents a pound on his cloth as expense of duty under the Payne-Aldrich law. We did not hear them squealing then, when they were getting 250 per cent more upon their cloth than they were paying upon their wool. I answered the same letter and asked that question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suspect the Senator from Utah has heard so many of them squealing that he does not remember them all. The American people are also going to "squeal" in a manner that the country will have to heed.

Mr. President, in connection with this wool matter I want to read into the RECORD a little ditty, as we might call it, which was read to the Senate, I think, by probably the most popular man who has ever lived in my State, Zebulon B. Vance, who was a greatly beloved and able Senator in this body and who was a great wit as well as a great statesman and a poet. I think he was probably the author of the little poem which I am going to read. It is on wool and it is with reference to the 56 per cent duty which was provided in the bill then under consideration and which, I think, was the McKinley bill:

Our Mary had a little lamb—
Her heart was most intent
To make its wool, beyond its worth,
Bring 56 per cent.

A pauper girl across the sea
Had one small lamb, also,
Whose wool for less than half that sum
She'd willingly let go.

Another girl who had no sheep,
No stockings, wool nor flax,
But money enough just for to buy
A pair without the tax—

Went to the pauper girl to get
Some wool to shield her feet
And make her stockings not of flax
But out of wool complete.

When Mary saw the girl's design
She straight began to swear
She'd make her buy both wool and tax
Or let one leg go bare.

And so she cried, "Protect, reform!
Let pauper wool in free!
If it will keep her legs both warm,
What will encourage me?"

So it was done; and people said
Where'er that poor girl went
One leg was warm with wool and one
With 56 per cent.

Now praise to Mary and her lamb,
Who did the scheme invent,
To clothe one-half a girl in wool
And one-half in per cent.

All honor, too, to Mary's friend
And all protective acts
That clothe the rich in real wool
And wrap the poor in tax.

Mr. President, I wish for a moment to refer to the question of ad valorem averages. I find there is great confusion with reference to ad valorem averages. There is a disposition to confuse ad valorem averages with rates. There is a vast difference between the rates in a bill and the ad valorem average of those rates when applied to the importation of foreign goods; and that is the basis upon which the average ad valorem is calculated.

A duty may be very high, Mr. President, but, as in the case of the duty on corn, it may be utterly ineffective because there are no importations, and, therefore, not play any part in the computation of the average ad valorem. A duty may be so high that it is absolutely prohibitive; and because it is prohibitive that duty, howsoever high it may be, will play no part in estimating the average ad valorem, although it may play, and will play, in most cases, a very important part in determining how much the people have got to pay for the particular product.

Ad valorem averages are estimated, as applied to a law in actual operation, by taking the total volume of imports coming into the United States during a given period, a year, say—that is one of the factors in the problem—and then taking as the other and only other factor the total amount of duties collected on those imports; and from the total amount of imports and the total amount of duties actually collected the calculations are made which determine the average ad valorem rates. So Senators will see if there are no imports coming in under a given rate, or but negligible imports are coming in under a rate, it does not make any difference how high the rate is, it cuts but little figure.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] claimed the other day that the average ad valorem in the pending tariff bill was a little bit below the average ad valorem of the Payne-Aldrich rates. I do not know how that is; I have never calculated it; I am not able to calculate it; and, furthermore, I have never found anybody here at the Capitol who could calculate it or who claimed that he was competent to calculate it. Heretofore when such bills have been presented estimates of the average ad valorem have been furnished. Of course, the estimates must be based upon the probable imports and the probable duties collected under the rates provided. That is very difficult where there are so many prohibitive duties and partially prohibitive duties and where so many duties are ad valorem in part and specific in part; and especially in the present very disturbed world conditions it is difficult to calculate or estimate what the imports are likely to be.

I have never met any man in Washington who could make a calculation of that kind which was worth anything to my mind, except Joseph McCoy, the Government actuary. He is the most wonderful expert we have ever had in connection with tariff bills. As to the Underwood bill and the emergency tariff bill his estimates were almost absolutely correct, and yet he does not claim to be able to make any calculations which are satisfactory to himself in reference to this bill. So while heretofore when tariff bills have been brought in the majority report when filed has given—certainly that has been the custom ever since I have been here—an estimate of the average ad valorem under the rates proposed, which estimate has been made by the expert assisting the committee, and in almost every case of which I have any knowledge by Mr. McCoy; that was not done in the case of the pending tariff bill.

I appealed to the Senator from North Dakota to have such an estimate made. He said he was trying to have it made in order to give the Senate the benefit of it, but it never has been made. I have myself appealed to Mr. McCoy to make such an estimate, but I have never been able to get it, because he said he was not able to make it. However, the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, just prior to the time when the tariff debate was to be closed and we were to vote on the bill without any further debate, made a speech in which he said that the estimated average ad valorem under this bill was a little bit lower than that of the Payne-Aldrich law.

I asked an expert—I am not going to give his name because I do not wish to embarrass him, but every Senator will know to whom I allude—if the statement to which I refer as having been made by the Senator from North Dakota were true, and he said it probably was. "Why," I asked, "is it true?" He said, "It is true because so many of the rates in this bill, as compared with the rates in any other tariff bill, are prohibitive—that they do not enter into the calculation."

If anyone will compare the rates in the pending bill with the rates in the Payne-Aldrich law, he will see that the rates in the bill now under consideration are incomparably higher. If the average ad valorem shall be less, it will only be because the rates are so high that there will be no importation and, therefore, no duty collected and, therefore, those rates will not enter into the problem in estimating the average ad valorem.

The rates in the Senate bill are not only higher but are at least 50 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich rates, when you consider the difference in prices to-day as compared with pre-war prices. They are higher than either the Dingley rates or the McKinley rates, and superadded to these rates is the power given the President to further increase them and, by substituting American for foreign valuation, increase them in many instances 100 per cent higher.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question there?

Mr. SIMMONS. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice that within the last few days members of the committee have estimated that the pending bill will yield a revenue of $400,000,000. When the bill was brought into the Senate the estimate made in several speeches upon the floor was $350,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. They have cut that estimate down; and I wish to say to the Senator that the estimated increase of revenue over that derived from the duties in the present law is accounted for almost entirely by the increased duty on sugar and the increased duty on wool. The amount of revenue which will be produced by the duty of 31 cents on wool, in view of the fact that we import nearly 60 per cent of our consumption of wool, and from the increased duty on sugar, of which we import from 50 to 60 per cent of all consumed in the United States, will account for any increase in revenue to be derived under the pending bill.

Mr. President, of course, it will be seen, when one considers the facts, that no tariff law shows the same average ad valorem in any one year of its life. In the case of the Payne-Aldrich law, the average ad valorem was different during every year of its operation. The present Underwood law went into operation in the fall of 1913, when prices were beginning to go up, and yet not much above the pre-war level. The average ad valorem under the Underwood law in 1914 was 37.60 per cent; in 1918, with the rates absolutely unchanged, the average ad valorem was 24.11 per cent; for six months of 1919, it was 21.27 per cent; while in 1921 the average ad valorem was 29.45 per cent. The average ad valorem, of course, depends upon the volume of importations, and the duty collected on such importations, and it depends also very largely, as may be readily seen, upon the price of the goods.

If the price of the goods is high then the average ad valorem is low, whereas if the price of the goods is relatively low then the average ad valorem is higher. The average price of dutiable goods to-day is something like 50 per cent higher than during the life of the Payne-Aldrich law. If the rates of the Payne-Aldrich law were to be applied to the prices of the present time there would be a lower average ad valorem to the extent of 50 per cent; so that if the estimated average ad valorem rate under the pending bill is 40 per cent, and the average rate under the Payne-Aldrich law was 40 per cent, then, because of the difference in prices, the rates in the pending bill are 50 per cent higher than the rates in the Payne-Aldrich law if they were applied to prices which obtained during the life of that law.

Mr. President, I wanted to get those two matters straight. I think it is very important to let the people have a clear understanding of what "average ad valorem" means.

I have here in my hand one of the most valuable documents which I have seen upon the tariff. It has been prepared by Mr. A. S. Hough, of Jacksonville, Fla. I understand from the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that Mr. Hough is an editor of great ability, a student of economic questions, a man of splendid mathematical attainments, and a most diligent, tireless, and painstaking student of economic questions. His pamphlet is most instructive and illuminating. I wish, Mr. President, to insert in the RECORD, without reading, some tables which he has furnished, showing the production, the exports, the imports, the duty, the revenue, and the protection provided under the pending bill upon chemicals and oils in Schedule 1, and then, taking the schedules as they come, selecting the more important articles and going through practically all of the schedules.

It does not embrace all of them, Mr. President, but he shows that the total protection accorded to the manufacturers or producers under this bill will amount to about $6,341,699,209. What that will amount to when it reaches the ultimate consumer I do not know, but it will be appalling. I ask that the tables which he gives, beginning after page 5 and covering all the various schedules down to and including the table I have marked on page 12, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Lumber and its products that are only slightly advanced in manufacturing are on the free list. As approximately dividing the lumber products that are on the free list from such as are dutiable, the industry classed as "Lumber and timber products," with an output of $1,387,471,413, is not counted in the table, while "Lumber, planing-mill products, not including planing mills connected with sawmills," is included because supposed to be enough advanced in manufacture to be dutiable. The value of product of this industry is $500,438,258, as stated in the table.

[2] On this list "Sugar, refined," does not include beet sugar, but the imports include sugar of all kinds, whether refined or not and whether cane, beet, or maple.

[3] The total of "Flour and grist mill products" is $2,052,434,385, but as the material of which "Bread and bakery products" and "Food preparations not elsewhere specified" were made amounted to $1,207,836,568, this was subtracted, leaving $844,597,817 of flour and grist mill products consumed without being further advanced.

THE SENATE TARIFF BILL.

VI.—STRAIGHTENING OUT ODDS AND ENDS.

From the tables that have preceded it is seen that on finished products alone and with two schedules omitted the people of the United States will pay annually through the tariff as reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate $6,572,582,986, of which only $230,883,777 will go into the Treasury for the use of the people who pay the taxes, while the balance—$6,341,699,209—will go into the possession of favored individuals or corporations. The duty that will be collected on the few raw materials that are not on the free list and on the products that are partly manufactured will carry the revenue up to the neighborhood of half a billion dollars without increasing the protection. Schedule by schedule the showing is as follows for finished products:

	Revenue.	Protection.
1	$4,205,707	$268,071,281
2	5,790,628	214,901,345

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have here also some data showing the heavy burden that is going to be put upon many of our industries by reason of placing high duties for the first time upon many of the essential ingredients that are used in the production of the product which that industry is engaged in producing. I especially wish to emphasize the effect of the multitude of little duties that we have put upon the small things that enter into the cost of the production of steel and iron—duties that are placed upon these little necessary raw materials that can not be produced in this country at all unless they are given excessive duties, and then it is problematical whether they can be produced in anything like the quantities that are necessary reasonably to supply the American industry; little industries that sprang up during the war, and are now unprofitable and moribund, and can be galvanized into life only by an excessively high tariff, which is going to be added to the cost of the production of steel—magnesite, manganese, and many other little ingredients and alloys that have to be used. It is going to lay a heavy burden upon the steel industry; it is going to increase greatly the cost of production, and is going to interfere with our very valuable foreign trade in these products. Of course, the ultimate consumers—the American people—will have to pay heavily on this score.

We are now producing steel cheaper than any other country in the world. We are producing it enormously in excess of our own demands. We are selling it throughout the world. It is a very serious question whether the added cost is not going greatly to handicap and embarrass this industry in competing with other countries in the markets of the world. The same thing is true with some other industries which I have indicated in this document.

I ask permission to print this without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY.

As an example of the effort of this tariff act to put new life in small and unprofitable industries not in existence in the United States prior to the war, but stillborn during that period, and now, of course, moribund, and the effect of such effort upon our largest and most necessary industries, we may thus cite our iron and steel industry. This industry now is the strongest iron and steel industry in the world. We produce much more than we can consume, and produce as cheaply as any other nation. If we increase our costs of production to such an extent as to place our industry at a disadvantage with like industries abroad we immediately lose our foreign markets, our surplus is turned back upon our own markets, prices fall, business is disorganized, and labor is out of employment. Any attempt to impose compensatory duties upon our imports of finished products in this instance is not only futile but lacks common sense.

What this act has done is to begin increasing the cost of our production of iron, steel, and also of other metals, by imposing for the first time in our history a duty upon magnesite, that absolutely indispensible refractory material needed in our hearths and furnaces, necessary in the production of these metals. Then another duty is imposed upon fluorspar and other fluxes necessary in smelting the ore of these metals. Then a duty is placed upon manganese—that material without which it is now impossible to make steel. Then a duty is placed upon tungsten and chromium, silicon, molybdenum, titanium, zirconium, vanadium, cerium tantalum, and, in fact, upon all ferro-alloys absolutely necessary to produce certain varieties of steel, or steel for certain purposes, like high-speed steel, etc. Then the duty on plumbago is much increased—that material absolutely necessary in the form of crucibles—and other duties have been increased or newly imposed tending to increase the cost of production of these metals. Why was this done? Take magnesite as an example. Before the war our steel manufacturers searched the United States for deposits of this refractory material, but were unable to find deposits that warranted development, either because of quality or remoteness from their industry. They then went to Europe, and in order to reduce their cost of production to a minimum bought certain deposits of magnesite in Austria. During the World War a large deposit of magnesite was developed in Washington. After its value was demonstrated one wealthy man secured control and operated this deposit. After pocketing profits from this investment—much more than equaling his investment—he shut down the plant and it has not been running for over a year. He asked for this one-man industry, not only the difference in cost of production here and abroad, but in addition this difference, together with a large profit, and together with the exhorbitant freight rate from his mine to the Atlantic market—and not the cheapest freight rate but the highest possible all-rail freight rate.

Again, take manganese. The same may be said of this metal. Prior to the war our industries were unable to find satisfactory deposits in the United States, and so purchased large deposits in Brazil. Although our Geological Survey and Tariff Commission have assured both committees of Congress that there is no sufficient available supply of this material in the United States this bill carries a high duty on our imports of manganese and of ferromanganese. And so on.

The steel and iron industry, which I have used for illustration, might stand any one of these increases in cost of production, but their cumulative effect is hard to overestimate.

The same thing is true of the shoe industry. Nearly everything except leather that enters into the production is taxed. The price of shoes, however cheap the processes of manufacture, will have to remain relatively high.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is much more that I want to say, but I shall soon finish. I ask first, though, that I be permitted to print as an appendix to my speech the statement that I read, giving a comparison of the House rates, the Senate rates, and the conference rates where there have been increases and decreases. I think that ought to go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I also have here a statement showing the difference in the actual rates fixed on many items in this bill as compared with the actual rates fixed in the Payne-Aldrich law. I ask permission to publish that statement without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question there?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does either one of the tables which the Senator proposes to insert following his speech make a comparison between the rates as recommended by the conference report and existing law?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I do not think I have those figures. I can have them added if the Senator wants them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me we ought to have those figures for comparison.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will see if I can not have them added before the speech is published.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator can.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to refer briefly to a speech which we had here some time ago when we were indulging in general debate, about the time when we were having vaudeville performances in the Senate on the part of the chairman of the Finance Committee and one of his chief lieutenants, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In the speech of the Senator from Indiana that I now have in mind, as illustrative, I am afraid of the attitude of a great many Senators on the other side of the Chamber, the Senator from Indiana—whom everybody recognizes as the first lieutenant of the chairman of the committee and also as the special personal representative in this Chamber of the President of the United States, and as altogether a bright, shining, particular star in the Republican firmament, and entitled to speak authoritatively for the Republican Party upon such a question as the tariff—in this speech the Senator from Indiana announced this general proposition: "If you will take care of the producer, the consumer will take care of himself."

It is upon that monstrous theory that this tariff bill is written. It takes care of the producer and leaves the consumer to take care of himself. The consumer can, indeed, take care of himself if we will put him upon equal conditions, in an equally strong position. If you will compete, if your industries and your producers will compete the one with the other as the consumer has to compete with all the rest of those who labor and work, then the consumer can take care of himself. But, Mr. President, in the industrial condition that we have in this country to-day, where many of the leading articles and necessaries of life produced by factories are in combination under agreements as to price fixing and as to extent of production, it is difficult for the consumer to take care of himself.

He can not take care of himself. He is helpless against those combinations with reference to the prices that he must pay for the necessaries of life. Now you are enacting here a law which, by reason of its prohibitive rates, by reason of its embargo rates, by reason of the fact that it does not permit foreign competition against domestic trusts that have monopolized the American market and therefore removes from these combinations all restraint upon their avarice, places the consumers of this country absolutely in their power in such a way that they are absolutely helpless. Under your legislation, Mr. President, the inability of the consumer of this country to take care of himself will be more complete than it is to-day and every man of common sense knows how little the consumers of this country have to do with prices, and how little they are able to protect themselves against exploitation and robbery and profiteering.

I say that there are wrapped up in this bill hundreds and thousands of new trusts and combinations in restraint of trade. I do not know how many there are now. I do not know how many existed before the war. I know they were multiplied very much by the war, probably several times, but I say to you now that the rates in this tariff bill, the prohibitive rates, rates made prohibitive expressly for the purpose of suppressing foreign competition will make more trusts and combinations and conspiracies against trade than the war made; and before this bill is two years old, yes, before it is one year old the consumers of the United States will be paying, year by year, a greater tax indirectly in the increase in the price of necessaries and the cost of living than was collected out of the people of this country during the peak year of the war, when we had to maintain an Army of 4,000,000 men upon foreign soil, when we had to finance not only ourselves but our allies in the struggle, when the total amount we had to raise by taxation was $8,000,000,000 in one year.

I say now, Mr. President, that under this bill, when it gets into full operation, with the trusts it creates and fosters and will create and bring into being, with the profiteering that is going to follow, with the increases in prices which are inevitable and unescapable, the American consumers will be paying an annual tax, only a fraction of which will go into the coffers of the Government, which will more than equal the entire tax which it was necessary to exact from the people when the war was in full progress, when prices were higher than ever before, when the demands of the Government were greater than they probably will ever be again. It will start out with probably from three and one-half to four billion dollars. It will end with double that amount.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING], the head of the agricultural tariff bloc on the other side of the Chamber, the bloc which has forced into the bill this 31 cents a pound on wool, is entitled to speak for the Republican Party. The great Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], as I said, the spokesman of the President, and a shining light in the Republican Party, said of the Senator from Idaho that he was a protectionist after his own heart, just after the Senator from Idaho had declared upon the floor of the Senate what was tantamount to a declaration in favor of a prohibitive tariff upon everything that was produced or could be produced in America. That is about what the bill is with reference to many of the things which are now produced in America.

The Senator from Idaho may not speak for the whole Republican Party, and I am sure he does not, although he has the approval of the Senator from Indiana, but he does speak the sentiments of that class of American citizens who are coming here and asking unconscionable duties and taxes on the people in order that they may be protected against foreign competition, to the end that there may be no restraint upon their avarice in the fixing of prices which the American people are to pay.

That is the theory of this tariff, and those are the people who have written this tariff bill. They have not only left their shoe tracks, but they have left their indelible imprint, and the public now know that these rates were made at their instance, and that wherever an attempt has been made to change one of them with respect to a vital and important matter, it has had to run the gantlet of a desperate fight with the protected interest affected, a fight from one House to the other, and then a fight from both Houses before the committee on conference. These tariff-seeking buccaneers have had their way, and the rates in the bill are based on the theories of WATSON and the theories of GOODING. Their theories are the heart of the bill. They control it. They live in every vein and artery of it.

This bill embodies and carries as its foundation stone the principle of increasing duties, even though those which already exist are prohibitive, or practically so. The principle is to increase the duties wherever and whenever a producer or an industry has reached in its level of prices the top of the present tariff wall, and wants to raise the prices still higher skyward, but dares not do it for fear that the foreigner will get over the wall and limit their high prices. These domestic profiteers have come and asked for the increases, and they have gotten them, and gotten them with the distinct knowledge that they asked for them in order that they might be enabled not only to maintain their present exorbitant prices in many instances but that they might with impunity and immunity against foreign competition still higher and further raise those prices and be protected by the additional story that this bill lays and adds to the present tariff structure.

Oh, yes; the theories of WATSON and the theories of GOODING are in the bill. It is a bill in the interest of profiteering. It is a bill in the interest of the trusts and the monopolies. It is a bill which especially favors the convicted trust. It is a bill which will make thousands of additional millionaires in this country. It is a bill which will add enormously to the trusts and the combinations which already prey and fatten upon the people. It is a bill which will hold down the laborer and the consumer in this country with a grip of iron, and make them, more than they are to-day, the galley slaves of the protected industries of the United States, laboring, toiling, producing, and seeing the fruits and the usufruct of their toil and their life's blood garnered by a few men who have made fortunes upon fortunes, and added millions upon millions, their wealth rises and towers like Pelion on Ossa piled, representing the fruits of the toil of millions of men who have been ignored in the farming of this bill.

It ought to have been the people's bill, Mr. President, but the profiteers and monopolies have controlled the writing of its schedules. It means burdens, it means sweat, it means blood to the American consumer. It means wealth, it means fortune, to the already rich and powerful.

No man can estimate the amount of additional toil which the duties imposed in this bill, as it will be written into law, is going to entail upon the masses. When I think about it in all of its enormity, when I think about this license of profiteering and the helplessness of the consumer, the additional weapon you are placing in the hands of his oppressors, my blood almost runs cold in my veins.

I wish I could get to the people just to what extent this bill is going to increase the cost of living in this country. No man can tell now, because the near approach of the election, and the exigencies of the Republican Party, the party bestowing these special favors, have by solemn and secret admonition put the fear of the Lord God and the wrath of the people into the hearts of these beneficiaries temporarily, and they probably will not start out in their reckless career of advancing prices and profiteering upon the people until after the election. They will heed the warning made in the opening speech of the Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. MCCUMBER], when he presented the tariff bill, and will be content until after the election with small profits and small incomes from their business. But after that, if this bill becomes a law, the lid will be off, and the sky alone probably will be the limit in most instances, and we shall see an orgy of profiteering and oppression in the United States such as never before has been witnessed, because no other tariff bill has ever been passed which opens the doors as wide, and so completely removes the bars and impediments to the men it favors, to do their will in the matter of prices and profits, whatever may be the consequences to the people of the country, as does this vicious bill which the Republican majority here will presently enact in behalf of their pets, the favored interests.

Mr. SIMMONS subsequently said:

Mr. President, I ask permission to print in the RECORD as an appendix to my speech the various documents to which I have alluded and from some of which I have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, such order will be made.

APPENDIX.

A CONCRETE EXAMPLE OF HOW THE FORDNEY-McCUMBER TARIFF FAVORS MILLIONAIRES AND DISCRIMINATES AGAINST THE MASSES.

Paragraph 212 of the proposed tariff law provides for chinaware (table ware) at a rate of 60 per cent ad valorem on undecorated and 70 per cent ad valorem on decorated. This paragraph includes two classes of ware, viz. ordinary china and "bone" china.

The ordinary china is made of earthy substances, such as clay, feldspar, etc., while the "bone" china contains 25 per cent or more of "calcined bone."

The former is the class of ware used in the homes of people of average or limited means, while the latter is the most expensive china manufactured either in the United States or imported from abroad. A fair idea of the value may be had from the fact that plates made of this "bone" china sell at wholesale in the domestic market at prices ranging from $30 to $500 per dozen plates. These plates are known in the trade as "place plates" and are used at fashionable dinners as table decorations. They are of a rich cream-colored appearance, highly decorated in gold or bright colors, and their character may be identified by such names as "Royal Doulton," etc.

On August 18, 1922, Senator JONES of New Mexico offered an amendment on the floor of the Senate to reduce the rates of 60 and 70 per cent on chinaware, the bulk of which is used in ordinary homes, to 50 and 60 per cent, respectively. This amendment was strenuously opposed by Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey. The Senator from New Jersey, in his debate against the proposed reduction sought by Senator JONES of New Mexico, stated that there was a difference of 238 per cent between the German export price of chinaware and the German home value, and that 70 per cent duty, which is 15 per cent more than the existing rate and 10 per cent higher than the Payne-Aldrich rate, was necessary to partly protect the American manufacturer on the theory that Germany could lower her existing export prices and undersell the domestic manufacturer. The absurdity of this argument is evident on the face of it.

However, here is the joker in the paragraph in the shape of an amendment offered by Senator FRELINGHUYSEN on August 19, the day the bill was passed by the Senate, at the eleventh hour and fifty-ninth minute, and adopted by the Senate. Note how the rates of duty on the rich man's "Royal Doulton" ware were fixed below those of the ware used in every poor man's home.

Says the millionaire Senator from New Jersey:

"I offer the following amendment: Any of the foregoing articles containing 25 per cent or more of calcined bone, not painted, decorated, etc., 50 per cent ad valorem; painted, decorated, etc., 55 per cent ad valorem."

In explanation of this amendment the Senator from New Jersey stated:

"Mr. President, this amendment can not be objected to. It takes the bone china out of the paragraph and reduces the rate from 60 to 50 per cent on the undecorated and from 70 to 55 per cent on the decorated. It has been agreed to under a resurvey by the Tariff Commission and is a reduction in the present paragraph."

No attempt was made by the Senator from New Jersey to produce the alleged "resurvey of the Tariff Commission," and no effort was made to explain to the Senate just what "bone china" really was. It is safe to say that not a single person in the Senate Chamber, excepting possibly the Senator from New Jersey on the floor and Tariff Commissioner Burgess, who sat in the gallery, knew the portent of this amendment. Consequently on the bald statement of the Senator from New Jersey that the amendment reduced the rates in the paragraph it was adopted by the Senate, and the poor man was delivered another tariff "solar plexus" to the tune of an additional $12,000,000 to his annual dinner-ware bill.

The rate of 55 per cent on "bone china" is perfectly fair and justifiable, but the absurd rate of 70 per cent on ordinary china can not be justified by any stretch of the imagination or by any distortion of the facts. The discrimination in the rate of duty between "bone china" and ordinary china is a distinct sop to the English manufacturers and a deliberate and premeditated blow to France.

Thus the question arises as to whether or not the Senator from New Jersey was really sincere in his contention that 70 per cent was necessary to protect against an imaginary reduction in German prices of a possible 238 per cent, or was he attempting to pull the Domestic Pottery Association's chestnuts out of the fire to satisfy a long-standing animosity toward the Limoge china manufacturers of France, against whom the above-mentioned association carried on a 20-year campaign of active antagonism through their former lobbyist, William Burgess, now a member of the United States Tariff Commission.

In 1920, 247,252 short tons of potash (K_2O) were consumed in fertilizers in the United States. If the duty on potash of 1½ cents per pound, or $30 per short ton, were inserted in the tariff act, the cost of fertilizer to the American farmers, using the 1920 figures, would be increased $7,418,000. This additional cost would be borne by the farmers of the leading fertilizer-consuming States, as follows:

Georgia	$1,182,000
South Carolina	1,131,000
North Carolina	765,000
Alabama	596,000
New York	474,000
Virginia	437,000
Florida	400,000
Pennsylvania	344,000
New Jersey	245,000
Maryland	240,000
Ohio	240,000
Maine	221,000
Indiana	205,000

This division of cost by States is based upon the average normal pre-war ratio of potash consumption by States to the total domestic consumption.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the conference report if he will object to letting the report go over until to-morrow for further consideration. We have now reached the usual hour of adjournment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection, but I wanted to ask the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] if he has any objection to this unanimous-consent agreement I have prepared to fix an hour for a vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. What hour?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to such an arrangement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I present the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that before the request can be submitted to the Senate there must be a call of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I asked the Chair to see whether there will be any objection, because there is no necessity of calling for a quorum if some one now present is going to object. I would like to have that presented first.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my recollection of the rule is that the requirement that a quorum shall be called before a unanimous-consent agreement is entered into is limited to the passage of a bill or a joint resolution. It has no relation whatever to votes upon agreeing to conference reports upon bills or other ancillary motions or proceedings. The rule, of course, will be strictly construed, but my recollection of the language of the rule is that it is limited to the final disposition of bills and joint resolutions. I do not think an agreement to vote on a conference report would require the roll to be called to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule reads—

> No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution—

And so forth.

Mr. ROBINSON. Clearly this is not an agreement for a final vote on a bill or joint resolution. It is one of the many votes which may be taken, and it is not comprehended within the rule. I myself felt some doubt about the propriety of entering into the agreement, but after conferring with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] I shall not make any objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am willing to take the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that a vote upon a conference report is within the spirit of the rule, in that it is the final passage of a bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Chair hear me upon the proposition? I am so thoroughly convinced that a vote upon agreeing to a conference report is not comprehended by the language of the rule, and that such a precedent would be detrimental to the prompt dispatch of business in the Senate, that I take the liberty, with the Chair's permission, of calling his attention to the language of the rule:

> No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate—

And so forth. Now, the passage of a bill or joint resolution in parliamentary language is after the third reading of the bill or joint resolution and has no relation whatever to conference reports. The rule has never been construed to require the presence of a quorum to enter into an agreement to vote on a conference report. Giving the language of the rule its ordinary meaning, it limits the requirement to the passage of a bill or the passage of a joint resolution. This is not the passage of a bill or a joint resolution within the meaning of the rule. The passage of a bill is had after the engrossment and third reading of the bill. The question is, Shall the bill pass? It is upon that proposition that the rule requires the presence of a quorum before unanimous consent is entered into and not upon a conference report. That is all I care to say upon the question.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not recall the conference report involved nor am I quite able to state whether it was submitted to the Chair; but I know that in the case of a conference report I discussed the matter, either with a Senator or with the Chair, and it was submitted to the Chair, with the result that no quorum was called to fix a day when we should vote upon the conference report. The Senator with whom I talked at that time, or the Chair, held that the rule is limited to just what it says—bills and joint resolutions—and does not include conference reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no knowledge of any precedent. So far as the Chair knows there never has been a request to fix a time to vote upon a conference report, which is the final vote respecting a bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have been unable to find the precedent, but it is my recollection that this matter was up during the previous Congress. Vice President Marshall ruled that the calling of a quorum was not necessary except upon entering into a unanimous-consent agreement upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution. I have been unable to find the decision, but I am confident such a decision was made. I think the Chair is clearly wrong and that the Senator from Arkansas is right in holding that the rule applies only to the passage of a bill or joint resolution, which means its passage after the third reading of the measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. After hearing the rule read, I must say that I concur in that opinion. Of course, the purpose of the rule was to give information to Senators when a joint resolution or bill was going to be voted on so they could take care of their amendments. A conference report is the final action, and there is no chance to do anything but vote. Conference reports were evidently left out of the rule advisedly. I am inclined to think that we do not need a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON. In further support of the position which I took a moment ago that a conference report does not come within the rule requiring that the roll shall be called to secure the presence of a quorum before a unanimous-consent agreement fixing the time to vote shall be entered into, I point to a precedent which seems to support the position which I took. I read from page 455 of Gilfry's Precedents:

FEBRUARY 24, 1916.

> Mr. SIMMONS asked unanimous consent to vote on the question of receding from its amendments in disagreement to H. R. 11471, to amend the act to reduce tariff duties approved October 3, 1917, not later than 5 p. m. on Saturday, April 22, 1916.

It will be observed that the effect of the arrangement suggested by the Senator from North Carolina at that time was identical with the effect of agreeing to the pending conference report. His proposal was that the Senate recede from its amendments, thus leaving the two Houses in accord. The pending proposal is to agree to the conference report, bringing the two Houses into accord. The Vice President on that occasion said:

> The Chair does not believe that this unanimous-consent agreement comes fairly within the rule requiring a call of the Senate for a quorum. It is not for the purpose of taking a final vote on the passage of a bill or joint resolution. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted.

There the Chair held expressly that the only instance in which the presence of a quorum is required in order to enter into an agreement is in the case of fixing the time to vote on the passage of a bill or joint resolution. The question of agreeing to a conference report is no more voting on the passage of a bill or joint resolution than is receding from Senate amendments, and in that way putting the two Houses into accord.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that the vote on the adoption of the motion to agree to the conference report is a little different, I think, from the final vote on the passage of a bill. On the final passage of a bill, if the vote is "nay," that ends the bill and there is nothing further to do, while if the conference report should be rejected the whole matter would still be before the Senate for further consideration and action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the conference report is agreed to, then no further action can be had. The Chair does not desire to be unduly solicitous about the matter, and thought it fair to present the question; but if it is the sense of the Senate, as it plainly is from the observations we have heard, the Chair will not insist upon it, believing, however, that we are violating the spirit of the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. If a Senator desires to file a motion to recommit the report, would the adoption of the unanimous-consent agreement estop or preclude him from making the motion? In other words, would the fact that the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into in any way affect the right of a Member of the Senate to enter a motion to recommit the conference report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it would.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Chair may have some doubt as to whether a motion to recommit would lie, but there may be a motion to recommit made and the Chair might change his opinion about it. Would the unanimous-consent agreement affect a Senator's right to make that motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator mean before or after the vote is had?

Mr. HARRISON. Before 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a somewhat difficult question for the Chair to answer, because the Chair is of the opinion that the motion would not be in order in any event until after the vote upon agreeing to the conference report is had. Therefore the Chair can not answer the question.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the proposed unanimous consent be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In view of the expressions of Senators with regard to the meaning of the rule the Chair will submit the request, which will be read for the information of Senators.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, September 19, 1922, the Senate will vote, without further debate, upon the question of agreeing to the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. May I couple that with an amendment and ask unanimous consent that no exception be made except that one motion to recommit the report may be in order?

Mr. LENROOT. It would not be in order at any time.

Mr. HARRISON. If we enter into the unanimous-consent agreement and say that that one motion shall be in order, then it would be in order. That is what I am asking unanimous consent to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHURST. Was the request made by the Senator from Mississipi agreed to? He asked that the Senate grant unanimous consent that one motion to recommit may be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That provision is not in the proposed agreement.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I move to amend to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator really wants to do that, because we can not amend the rules of the Senate in that way.

Mr. ASHURST. We can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not set aside the rules in that way.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to object, but I think that inasmuch as we are by unanimous consent setting aside the rule for one side, or for certain views, we ought at least to be as liberal toward others who desire to move to recommit the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. A vote against the conference report will settle that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator could make the motion at any time before 4 o'clock to-morrow; but it probably would be overruled as quickly as the Senator made it.

Mr. ASHURST. It would not be in order to move to recommit. I am seeking to suspend the rule by unanimous consent. What I am trying to do is to avoid the rule. I sympathize with the Senator from Mississippi in his contention that at some time we ought to be entitled to make a motion to recommit, but we may not do that under the rules.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask a question, Mr. President?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. I ask the Senator from Arizona to whom does he propose to recommit the bill? The House conferees are functus officio.

Mr. ASHURST. In view of the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] said this afternoon that at the first eligible opportunity which was presented to him he would see to it that some duty was placed upon long-staple cotton, and the bill must be recommitted before such action could be had——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona is mistaken. I said that could not be done under the pending bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Am I to believe another promise when the promise heretofore made and repeated over and over again is broken into bits and lies in fragments on the Senate floor? Does the Senator think I will believe another promise?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have promised nothing.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator promised my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] in open session that at the first eligible opportunity a duty would be put on long-staple cotton.

Mr. McCUMBER. Did I promise that the Senate and the House would put a duty on long-staple cotton?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator promised that he would use every influence in his power to do it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I could not make that kind of a promise. I said that I favored the protection of long-staple cotton; that I would favor it in the form of a protective duty or I would favor it in the form of a bounty, if necessary, but I did not intimate that any further action in that direction could be taken on this bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator favors a duty on long-staple cotton everywhere except in the conference committee where his favoritism and effort would count and be of value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to observe that the request for unanimous consent which has been made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is not debatable.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, we have heretofore debated such requests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly; but the Chair must confine the debate, if it is permitted, to the subject in hand.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Chair is uniformly so fair and so correct in the manner in which he enforces the rules that I will come to his assistance. The Chair knows and believes, and has so expressed himself, that a quorum is necessary under such procedure; and if I am to be denied the right to say a few words about this item—cotton—to which protection was promised and which instead is now treated to a dose of free trade, if I can not have about two or three minutes to discuss that matter, I shall suggest that we ought to have a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona may debate the matter at any length he desires, but not upon a request for unanimous consent to fix a time to vote.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to suggest to the Chair that no Senator has raised the point of order on the Senator from Arizona, and I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. I am a little confused as to just how we shall proceed. Suppose in the consideration of the conference report it should be discovered that in one part of the bill there was carried a duty on a certain article and in another part of the bill that article should be placed on the free list, could a motion then be made to recommit the bill? How would a mistake of that kind be corrected if it should be discovered?

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I am anxious that this bill should be recommitted, but after a careful examination of the precedents I am convinced that a motion to recommit the conference report is not eligible or proper unless there is a disagreement on some particular item. Had I thought that the motion to recommit was proper under the rules I should have made it; indeed, I did make it, as the Chair will remember, but I am now sure such a motion is not in order under the rule unless, as I stated, there be an item upon which there is a disagreement.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me a moment further, we are confined to the simple question of agreeing to the conference report. That is the reason why I sought to assist the Senator in securing unanimous consent that a motion to recommit might be made, because it requires a suspension of the rules to do that. I repeat, I am as anxious to get a recommittal of the bill as any Senator can be, but a motion to recommit is not in order.

Mr. HARRISON. There was no objection to the request to amend the unanimous-consent agreement, as I understand.

Mr. MOSES. Which one?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Mississippi understands the view of the Chair upon that subject, but the Chair will not rule upon it until the question arises. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, is the Senator from Mississippi pressing his amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending. A request for unanimous consent can not be amended in the ordinary parliamentary sense. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its session on this calendar day it recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FEDERAL AID IN DOMESTIC DISTURBANCES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have before me Senate Document No. 209 of the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress. It is a very important document, but is out of print. I hold in my hand the only copy which is left in the Document Room. It is entitled "Federal aid in domestic disturbances, 1787 to 1903," and was prepared by the direction of Maj. Gen. Henry C. Corbin, Adjutant General United States Army, in 1903. It is an exhaustive and authoritative compilation of every instance in which the United States has by the use of Federal troops endeavored to secure the enforcement of the laws, and, indeed, the first page of the document bears the headline "Employment of troops in the enforcement of the laws."

Mr. President, the information contained in the document is the result of enormous labor. The subject has been and is now to a certain extent before the country, and is liable to be before the country during the coming campaign. The custodian of public documents has informed me that there was such a demand from thousands of people for this document when it was first printed that the small number printed was immediately exhausted, and I think it is of sufficient importance to warrant a reprint. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the document may be reprinted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Connecticut when it was printed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes, sir. On the face of the document itself it is stated "March 2, 1903, ordered to be printed."

Mr. ROBINSON. It is quite an old document, and it may be that other precedents not embraced within the document itself should be added. Has the Senator given thought to bringing it down to date, so as to make it complete?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I have not. I assume, inasmuch as these precedents relating to the use of Federal troops have been created under the Constitution and the statutes of the United States, that, while new instances of the use of troops for such purposes may have occurred since 1903, they are only very few in number. I would, of course, have no objection to the addition in the shape of addenda or an appendix to the document of any further information in the possession of The Adjutant General's Office or of the War Department; but that would require a new document number, as I am informed, and more or less revision of the index, and so forth, the document being now thoroughly indexed. If the Senator wants to make an additional request that information in the possession of the department may be added to the document, I shall have no objection to that, but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] advises me sub rosa that that can not be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Utah more than once has given sub rosa advice that I can not accept.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, it is apparent from the size of the document that it comes within the statutory limitation which requires that a document the printing of which would cost as much as the printing of this document evidently would cost must, by the statute, be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to the reference of the request to the Committee on Printing, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. I can promise the Senator from Connecticut that the committee will not delay in the matter of its report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will, then, with the permission of the Senator from Arkansas, if he will indulge me just a moment in order to complete my statement, withdraw the request for unanimous consent, and ask that my request be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

POSITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement as of June 1, 1922, giving in detail the total number of positions at a rate of $2,000 or more per annum, the rate of salary attached to each position, the number of positions at each rate in the central office, and in each district office or suboffice, and a brief statement of the duties of each position; also a statement giving the corresponding information as of September 1, 1922, for the central office, and as of August 1, 1922, for the district and subdistrict offices, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4003) for the relief of the Commercial Union Assurance Co. (Ltd.), Federal Insurance Co., American & Foreign Marine Insurance Co., Queen Insurance Co. of America, Firemen's Fund Insurance Co., St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co., and the United States Lloyds; and

A bill (S. 4004) for the relief of the Commercial Union Assurance Co. (Ltd.), Federal Insurance Co., American & Foreign Marine Insurance Co., Queen Insurance Co. of America, Firemen's Fund Insurance Co., United States Lloyds, and the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Co.; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CAMERON:

A bill (S. 4005) to grant a bounty on the production of long-staple cotton; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. STANFIELD:

A bill (S. 4006) for the relief of the Ralph Ackley Land Co. (Inc.) and others; to the Committee on Claims.

PAY OF SENATE PAGES.

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 352), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That during the period between the end of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress and the beginning of the third session of said Congress the pages of the Senate provided for by law, resolution, or otherwise, be paid the regular compensation at the rates they have been receiving.

RELIEF OF ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senate has passed a bill which is an exact duplicate of a House bill which is now upon the calendar, being Calendar No. 684. The two bills—one introduced in the House and the other introduced in the Senate—cross each other. I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on the tariff bill may be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may consider House bill 8475, a duplicate of which, I repeat, has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. I ask that the bill may be reported for information.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New York that the unfinished business is the Liberian loan, which will have to be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was my error. I make the request in that form, Mr. President, that the Liberian loan bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the Liberian loan bill? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. Let the bill referred to by the Senator from New York be reported.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to know something about what the bill is before I give consent to its consideration.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator from New York is given an opportunity, he will explain the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. There is objection unless the bill may be reported, so that I may know what it is.

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill reported, so that, at least, we may know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to have the bill reported, and the Chair was about to direct the Secretary to report it for information.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, Senators need not be unduly impatient or suspicious. The Senator from New York will endeavor to explain the bill. He has done so once before to the Senate, and it was passed unanimously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill for information.

The reading clerk read the bill (H. R. 8475) to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, and to protect disbursing officers in connection therewith, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all payments heretofore made in good faith to enlisted men while in active service by reason of anything contained in that portion of the proviso of section 4b of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, reading: "That nothing in this section shall operate to reduce the pay which any enlisted man is now receiving during his current enlistment and while he holds his present grade," be, and the same hereby are, validated for all purposes, irrespective of whether such payments conform to decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury or the General Accounting Office; and such payments shall be passed by the proper accounting officers of the United States to the credit of the disbursing officers making the same. Any sums of money which may have been deducted from the pay of any enlisted man on account of any such payment validated by this act shall be refunded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from New York make a brief statement about the bill before I object or give consent. I have not had time to read the bill and I have not heard the Senator from New York explain it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in the act of June 4, 1920, the noncommissioned grades in the Regular Army were rearranged, and instead of having something like 40 or 50 grades among noncommissioned officers the number was reduced to 7 for purposes of simplification. When the act took effect, of course, it was necessary to regroup and regrade thousands of enlisted men who held rank under the titles of the old grades. In anticipation of that the act carried a certain provision to the effect that the pay of those men should not be reduced below that which they were receiving in the grade which they occupied on the date of the passage of the act.

The Congress passed the act in that form in good faith and the War Department accepted it in good faith as a measure of protection for the men in the matter of reduction of pay. However, some auditing officer—the comptroller or the Auditor for the War Department, I forget which—made a ruling thereafter which was contrary to the real intention of the Congress when it passed the act of 1920, with the result that it was declared to have been improper to have paid these men subsequent to July 1, 1920, the rates of pay which the Congress had expected they would receive, and with the further result that the disbursing officers who had paid them one, two, or three dollars more than the new rates of pay provided, basing their action upon the old rates of pay, have been endeavoring to collect from these soldiers for many months past these picayune little amounts. Many of the men have left the service months ago, and have gone home, and can not be found. This bill is to validate those payments and to relieve the War Department of the attempt to collect 50 cents here and a dollar and a half there. It has passed both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF WAR TROPHIES.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment Senate Joint Resolution 244, to donate to the American Legion certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution; and, with the permission of the Senate, I will make a short explanation of it, which probably will be just as brief as reading the joint resolution.

The officials of the American Legion have been exceedingly anxious for many months to expedite the distribution of the German war trophies. The bill passed by the Senate has been hung up in the House of Representatives for many, many months. This is not an attempt to amend that bill in prospect, but it is an attempt to authorize the Secretary of War to donate to the American Legion itself certain specimens of weapons and armament or munitions, a single specimen of each type to be donated, to be placed by the American Legion in a museum which they have organized and established in connection with their national headquarters at Indianapolis. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to donate to the national museum of the American Legion at Indianapolis, Ind., such of the war devices and trophies captured or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States from the armed forces of Germany and allied nations as may be requested by the official in charge of that institution: Provided, That not to exceed one of each caliber of cannon and carriage or one each of the more general types of machine guns, minenwerfers, mortars, bomb throwers, flame throwers, and gas projectors may be included in this donation.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

FORT HALE, CONN.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 11347, authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. It is very simple.

By way of explanation, let me say that this little tract of land at the city of New Haven was the original site of a fort built during the American Revolution. Again, in 1812 the Government built a fort there, of course, long since obsolete. Back in 1890 the Congress passed an act extending to the city of New Haven the right to use this land for park purposes. It has been used as such for a long time, since 1890. This bill is to authorize the Secretary of War to deed this land to the State of Connecticut, to be used solely for park purposes, and to be known as Nathan Hale Park. The Government has not used this land in generations. Including the low-tide area or swamp-land area, it amounts to about 30 acres. It is of absolutely no use to the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings in New Haven, Conn., known as Fort Hale: Provided, That the State of Connecticut shall agree to preserve the said land forever as a public park, to be known as Nathan Hale Park: Provided further, That in the event the said lands are not used for the purposes specified in this act the same shall revert to the Government of the United States: And provided further, That the land shall be subject to the right of the United States to at any and all times and in any manner assume control of, hold, use, and occupy without license, consent, or leave from said State any or all of said lands for any and all military, naval, or other governmental purposes, free from any conveyances, charges, encumbrances, or liens made, created, permitted, or sanctioned thereon by said State.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO STATE MILITIA.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 211, a pension bill which was objected to a few days ago by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and passed over at his request. To-day the Senator from Wyoming informs me that he is satisfied with the bill and is in favor of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator the nature of the pension bill?

Mr. BURSUM. The bill is to include certain militia who participated in the Civil War. It is practically an extension of the law of 1874. It was introduced in the House by Mr. LANGLEY and passed through the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it go over until to-morrow. I want to see what report the Senator has made. Has he made a report on it?

Mr. BURSUM. Oh, yes. The bill has been on the calendar for a long while and was brought up a few days ago. The Senator from Wyoming at that time asked that it go over, and on that account I did not press it. The Senator from Wyoming has since gone over the bill and is now satisfied with it. The Senator is here and can speak for himself.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this bill applies only to a small number of persons. It simply extends the provisions of an old law so as to include them. I see no reason why it should not be considered and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not read the bill, nor have I had an opportunity——

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ADDITIONAL CLERK, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, at the beginning of this session of Congress an additional clerk was authorized for the Committee on Military Affairs. The chairman of that committee desires to have that clerk continued and has introduced a resolution for that purpose, and it has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I report back favorably the resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The Assistant Secretary read Senate Resolution 340, submitted by Mr. WADSWORTH on August 18, 1922, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 184, agreed to December 13, 1921, authorizing and directing the Senate Committee on Military Affairs to employ an additional clerk, at the rate of $1,600 per annum, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, during the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the appropriation bill has been taken away from the Military Affairs Committee, and it has now gone to the Committee on Appropriations, is this extra clerk needed?

Mr. CALDER. The Military Affairs Committee believe he is needed. They say the clerk is constantly engaged. I trust the Senator will not object.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

THE AMERICAN VALUATION PLAN.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a partial list of organizations, with the number of their members, who have indorsed American valuation. This is the list I referred to on the floor of the Senate on August 24, on pages 11740, 11741, and 11742 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Organizations indorsing American valuation.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 19, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate September 18 (legislative day of September 16), 1922.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Amos W. W. Woodcock, of Maryland, to be United States attorney, district of Maryland, vice Robert R. Carman, resigned, effective October 1, 1922.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

CHAPLAINS.

To be chaplains with the rank of captain.

Chaplain Clarence Roy Rice, from August 23, 1922.
Chaplain William Joseph Ryan, from August 24, 1922.
Chaplain Aloysius Charles Dineen, from September 11, 1922.
Chaplain Dudley Regis Tierney, from September 11, 1922.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 18 (legislative day of September 16), 1922.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 18, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, the gates of the day have been unlocked by Thy infinite fingers, and we therefore approach Thy altar saying: Holy, holy, holy, the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Thy goodness and mercy passeth all human understanding and our wonder dies away. As we live and walk on Thy earth O teach us the true value and the true happiness of life. Heavenly Father, bless and direct all the Members and officers of the House of Representatives. May all possess the golden key of splendid character and go the way of honorable career, which are faith in God and fidelity to eternal truth and justice. Spur us to our daily toil from love of work. Endow us with a vigorous faith in the value of what we are doing. Everywhere lead all citizens to reverence Thee, love our country, and obey its laws. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, for more than half a century the Republican Party has maintained and the actual experience of the country has proved that a protective tariff is indispensable to our economic development. Our industries when protected are able, by greatly increasing their output as the result of business experience, efficient management, and labor, to reduce the costs of production and consequently the cost of articles to the consumer. The instances in which this has been accomplished are too numerous to mention. The best known are the products of iron and steel, farm machinery, and tin plate. We have seen under our policy the establishment of great new industries here, which have developed our resources and vastly increased the total wealth. We have maintained American standards, and because of our prosperity our people have more of the comforts of life in each succeeding decade. We have obtained for labor a constantly advancing wage scale. We have increased the public wealth from a half billion of dollars for every million of people in 1861 to more than two billions for every million of people in 1913. This wealth has been generally distributed throughout the country, and all have participated in the benefits resulting from it.

Our Democratic opponents have, whenever a new protective tariff bill has been enacted, frantically warned the people that they must pay more for what they buy. But, to their discomfiture, general prices to consumers did not rise but declined, and prosperity spread over the land. More money was earned; better conditions of life prevailed. An examination of the statistics which are available in great abundance amply proves this to be the fact.

We said that as a result of protective tariff rates of duty could continually be reduced. Let facts be submitted to a candid world.

1. The rates of duty on dutiable imports during the last eight years of the operation of the Dingley Act of 1897 averaged over 25 per cent.

2. The rates of duty while the Payne Act of 1909 was in force, from 1909 to 1913, averaged over 21 per cent on dutiable articles.

3. The rates of duty under the new law of 1922 on dutiable articles, basing the calculation on the imports of 1921 and 1922, will average less than 17 per cent and probably less than 16 per cent.

The fact that the general average of duties under the new law is lower than under the preceding protective tariffs is the highest possible tribute to the sagacity, efficiency, enterprise, and integrity of American industry.

The tariff of 1922 in every schedule more scientifically adjusts the differential between articles manufactured from the same raw material and places in the same category, whether dutiable or free, competitive articles of similar manufacture. Some transfers from the free list to the dutiable list are due to the fact that when the tariff of 1909 was enacted such articles were not manufactured in this country, or their manufacture was of small importance, as in the case of cotton yarns. Many industries are becoming able to compete under reduced rates; many new industries have arisen, some of which, as the war showed, may be indispensable to the national existence; many new products have come upon the market; and new competitors have entered the field. The increases in rates come on the new developments in established industries, new industries, and new products, the result of economic and industrial progress.

The number of new industries that came into existence during the war to furnish us with articles needed by the people and the country, and which we could not obtain from abroad, shows that there is still a large field for the expansion of our industrial life. A large proportion of the increases in rates are to take care of such new industries.

On September 27, 1922, the Treasury estimated that the receipts for the first 12 months under the new tariff would be $400,000,000.

The tariff of 1922 is an all United States tariff, intended to stimulate a revival of business of every kind and to promote a general prosperity in all parts of the country, including those sections whose representatives usually vote against a protective tariff. It is not intended to favor one line of industry against other lines, nor one locality against others, nor to cause injury to any industry.

It is intended that the rates of duty provided in the new tariff law will be adequate to give efficient protection to our industries, but conditions may change so that the rates of duty are inadequate, and in order to provide for a method by which any industry placed at a disadvantage by a foreign competitor may be given prompt relief, the act makes provision for a flexibility in the tariff under which the President is authorized to proclaim new rates. The provisions of the flexible tariff are explained in the latter portion of these remarks.

Without question, the greatest beneficiaries of a protective tariff are our workingmen and workingwomen, both as to the rates of wages paid, the number of days per year of employment, and the total amount of wages they receive. In the investigations preceding the framing of the present tariff law extensive inquiries were made as to the proportion of the amounts received by labor from the sales of manufactured articles. It appears that after subtracting the cost of raw materials labor receives up to 85 per cent of the gross amount received from the sale of manufactured articles, the proportion depending upon the degree of manufacture and being largest for highly manufactured commodities. Any reduction in our yearly output will inevitably reduce not only wages and days of employment but also the total amount received by labor, which is most quickly injured in its present advantages when conditions adverse to our industries arise. Labor receives in this country rates and amounts of wages greatly exceeding those paid in any other country, and in the case of some labor in some of the chief competing countries receives from five to fifteen times as much. This is a country of men and women, and the Republican Party believes in such policies as will be of greatest material benefit to them, and has the courage and ability to enact such policies into law.

In 1861 the wealth of the Unted States was at the rate of a half billion dollars for every million of population. In 1913 the rate was over $2,000,000,000 for every million of population. During this half century the rate of progress was not uniform in every decade. The periods of greatest advancement correspond with those in which a protective tariff gave opportunity to American industry and labor; and the periods of smallest advancement or of decline are those in which the protective policy was in whole or in part abandoned. The increase of wealth was more generally distributed throughout the country and benefited all the people more than in any other nation in the world.

The periods of greatest advancement corresponded with the periods in which the people had entrusted the Republican Party with power.

During the war the orderly course of industry was diverted from the peace basis and the normal conditions of the markets were interrupted. Industry and labor are confronted with quantities of imports from abroad, which can be offered at prices our producers could not meet without ruin and made by labor receiving wages upon which our working people could not subsist. Some reorganizations of industry have been effected, but the great advancement movement the country needed and which would have normally followed the war has awaited the enactment of a tariff.

The tariff of 1922 is intended to inaugurate again an advancement of prosperity among our people. The purpose of the bill is to give our industries fair opportunitv in our own markets, to stabilize industry, and to enable labor to receive wages sufficient for them to live according to the standards which have become established here.

Ability to buy determines the standard of living. When good wages are paid and employment is continuous, when industry is prosperous and the return steady our people would be more comfortable even if the average prices of goods should be higher than they would be if lower wages and less hours and smaller return from business prevailed. A real condition of prosperity is shown when a citizen, living normally according to his standard of life, has a surplus at the end of the year. It is an indisputable fact that when the flag of protection floats over our country good wages, steady employment, a fair return to business and industrial development prevail.

The country has not yet returned to the normal condition of pre-war times nor yet established a new normal. It is generally understood that the new normal will see higher prices than would otherwise prevail had the war not disturbed conditions not only in this country but throughout the world.

The tables presented below cover quite fully the items in the cotton and wool schedules in which are included a large proportion of the total production and of the total amount received therefor. I think they prove the correctness of the Republican theory of a protective tariff, which maintains that such a tariff leads to the development and establishment of industries in this country, the payment of wages higher than anywhere else in the world, and by reason of the effectivness of our capital and labor to greatly increase the output, with a consequent reduction in the price of manufactures, making it possible to reduce duties. But the reduction of duties is not the primary intention in framing a tariff. The purpose is to make ourselves economically independent, stabilize production and prices, extend our industries and insure a reasonable return on capital invested in useful production, pay good wages, secure revenue, maintain our standards of living, maintain our markets, develop our resources, increase our wealth and the general prosperity. The fact that when a new tariff bill is being framed, in which every duty is based upon its own facts, it is possible to reduce rates without injury to industry and to continue to pay high wages is evidence that a protective tariff, being sound economically, works out practically.

For the purposes of this comparison I have used the arrangement made by the United States Tariff Commission, which places opposite the paragraph of the new law the corresponding paragraphs of the act of 1909. I have carefully prepared the rates in each schedule, and give below some tables which will indicate a study carefully made to entitle the statements to your credence.

It must be remembered in such a comparison that the number of items raised or lowered affords no basis for a just conclusion. The amount of imports in such items vary from small amounts to tremendous quantities. Consideration should be given to the quantity and value of the imports, the keenness of the competition, the importance of the industry to the country, the capital invested in this country, and the number of persons employed in order to determine the relative importance of rates of duty. It might be possible by adding together all the rates of duty in one bill and all the rates of duty in another bill to appear to show that the average rate was higher in one than in the other, but if these rates were multiplied into the values of the commodities imported the opposite condition would be shown. So in preparing this statement consideration is given to the real importance of the rates. The importance of a rate of duty depends upon the conditions previously stated. The illustrations will deal chiefly with products of general consumption where the amount expended for them is very considerable. In a general way it may be stated that the chief increases have been on articles of luxury, on the products of new and essential industries, including dyes, on new developments in old industries, and on agricultural products.

Every rate depends upon its own facts. A rate was determined by taking into account for the longest period of years for which figures were available the quantities and values of imports and of domestic production, comparative prices, the history of the industry, the public interest, the rates of wages at home and abroad, manufacturing costs at home and abroad—in short, all that multiplicity of detail which determines the cost of production at home and abroad.

The purpose of the remarks is to show graphically and specifically the general facts about the new tariff law, the tariff of 1922, and some of the more important results to be obtained from it. It enters into the discussion of the general principles of a protective tariff only so far as necessary to make plain what it is here intended to present. It is intended to give a working knowledge of the new law in some of its most important details. It is manifestly impossible in a speech of moderate length to discuss the thousands of items included in the law, the most of which are of relatively small importance by themselves, but in the aggregate are necessary to the general prosperity.

SCHEDULE 11.

WOOL.

Rates of duty on clean content of wool:
Under tariff of 1922, 31 cents per pound.
Under tariff of 1909, for cloth weighing over 4 ounces per square yard—
When valued at not over $4 per pound, 33 cents per pound.
When valued at over $4 per pound, 44 cents per pound.

The farmer and stock grower will receive a more effective protection under the new law than under the tariff of 1909. The duties on articles manufactured from wool, especially on those used by the people generally and of the greatest importance, are materially lower than in the Payne Act. This is due to the fact that under the act of 1909 wool duties were collected upon all imports containing any wool, but under the new law wool duties will be collected only when wool is the component part of chief value, or only upon the wool contained in any articles made of wool and other fibers. There are also other causes contributing to make reductions possible.

In the tables below are given the rates of duty first under the new law, the act of 1922, and then under the Payne law, the act of 1909. Then follows a tabulation showing the amounts collected under each law, according to the value of the articles. Enough items are given to prove whether the duties under the act of 1922 are higher or lower than those of the act of 1909. It will be noted that they are materially lower, with few exceptions, as are the duties generally under both the wool and cotton schedules.

It must be remembered that the values upon which the duties are reckoned in the tables are the import values and not those at which consumers buy the articles in this country. The latter are very much higher. This matter will be gone into more fully later in these remarks.

WOOLEN YARNS.

Rates of duty under the tariff of 1922:
Valued not over 30 cents per pound, 24 cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem.
Valued over 31 cents to $1 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 35 per cent ad valorem.
Valued over $1 per pound, 36 cents per pound and 40 per cent ad valorem.
Rates of duty under tariff of 1909:
Valued not over 30 cents per pound, 27½ cents per pound and 35 per cent ad valorem.
Valued over 30 cents per pound, 38½ cents per pound and 40 per cent ad valorem.

All the tables I present give, first, the rates of duty under the act of 1922, and, second, those under that of 1909, so that anyone can prove the accuracy of the computations. Then follows a number of computations. A very brief examination will give ocular demonstration to the fact that the duties have been lowered. The table above, on woolen fabrics, shows reductions varying from 25 per cent to 35 per cent on the goods of lowest value. The rates on the higher valued goods are not reduced so much. These woven fabrics are made into apparel in general use.

Duties on the above are lower under the tariff of 1922 than under that of 1909.

WOOLEN HOSE, HALF HOSE, AND MITTENS.

The tariff of 1922 bases the duties upon both the value per pound and the value of the articles per dozen pairs. The tariff of 1909 bases the duties upon the value per pound only. It is therefore impracticable to present a table showing a comparison of the duties collected under each act. But the duties on these articles have been reduced in a manner similar to the reductions on knit fabrics above.

The statement is being circulated that some dealers in men's clothing have stated their intention to charge from $4 to $7 more for a suit of clothes after the new tariff becomes effective than present prices, because of the duty of 31 cents per clean pound of wool. Any excuse will serve the profiteer or furnish specious argument to a political false witness. Since May 27, 1921, the tariff on a pound of clean content of wool has been 45 cents, because on that date the emergency tariff superseded the Underwood tariff.

Practically all the cloth now in suits, or available for making suits, now on sale or to be sold for some months to come, was manufactured after the emergency tariff rate of 45 cents per pound of clean wool content became effective. That rate is 14 cents higher per pound than the rate in the new tariff bill of 31 cents per pound of clean content. It can not be honestly maintained that a reduction of 14 cents per pound on wool, which will not be manufactured into cloth and placed on the market for some months to come, justifies an increase in prices of goods now on the market. Such goods were manufactured some time ago, the cost of production determined, and the goods sold to dealers, but with small exceptions the fabrics were woven and the goods manufactured out of them since the emergency tariff was the law of the land. Goods made from wool paying the new rate of duty will not be on the market for some months to come. The fortuitous coincidence that a new tariff is passed is only an excuse and not a reason for advancing prices on goods bought at prices fixed long before the present law was enacted.

It may be of interest to know that the Tariff Commission states that the ordinary suit of clothes contains about 3½ yards of cloth. The clean content of wool used weighs about 4 pounds, the duty on which, at 31 cents per pound, if it were conceivable that it is added to the price, is $1.24.

WOOLEN RUGS AND CARPETS.

Rates of duty under tariff of 1922:
Axminster, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Velvet and tapestry, 40 cents per square yard and 40 per cent ad valorem.
Ingrain, 18–22 cents per square yard and 40 per cent ad valorem.

The duties in the present act are lower; on Axminster and Wilton carpets, by 60 cents per square yard; on Brussels carpets, by 44 cents per square yard; on velvet and tapestry carpets, by 40 cents per square yard; and on ingrain carpets, by 18 cents or 22 cents per square yard and 15 per cent ad valorem, lower than under the act of 1909. These reductions are due in part to the fact that the carpet wools were dutiable under the Payne Act, but under the act of 1922 are admitted free when used in making carpets. They are duitable if used in making clothing. Very little carpet wool is grown in this country.

The duties on cotton yarns have been increased. The industry of spinning cotton yarns has practically developed since 1909. At that time only the coarser yarns were made. Many new kinds of yarns are made requiring expensive processes and an increased labor cost.

COTTON CLOTH.

The basis for levying duties is entirely different in the tariff of 1922 from the tariff of 1909 to conform to the practice and descriptions used in the industry. The rates of duty, however, have been lowered, and the per cent of reduction is about the same as in other goods made from cotton found in the following tables:

$4 per dozen	1.80	2.50	$16 per dozen	7.20	8.00

The duties on cotton cloths of low or medium values have been greatly reduced. These reductions for the left-hand column, taking the items in order, are 50 per cent, 30 per cent, 46 per cent, 36 per cent, 35 per cent, and 28 per cent below those of the act of 1909.

WHY THE PER CENTS ARE NOT ALWAYS THE SAME.

When in any paragraph it is found necessary to make several brackets, an example of which is found above in the rates of duty under the tariff of 1909, where six brackets or classifications are made and where the duty is a combined specific rate and ad valorem rate, there will be uniform advance in each bracket. But when you pass from one bracket to the next higher the advance will be sharp. For instance, take underwear valued at not over $1.50 per dozen. The duty on underwear valued at $1.40 per dozen, a price which is near the dividing line, was 58 per cent, while on goods valued at $1.75 per dozen, just over the dividing line, the duty was 77 per cent. Such differences affect values in this way near the dividing lines.

Such gloves, if valued at more than $6 per pair, will come in at the same rate under both laws.

There are other kinds of gloves which will also come in at rates considerably lower than the 1909 rates. Some new kinds of gloves, which have come into use since 1909 and are much more highly manufactured and finished, will bear somewhat higher rates. On the whole, the duties are lower in the tariff of 1922 than in that of 1909, especially on articles used by people of ordinary circumstances.

The reductions in duty on the above articles are evident. The exception is that of fabrics made on a warp machine.

Increases required to give a necessary and effective rate of protection are just as essential and justifiable as reductions in rates. I believe in just, right duties; neither too high nor too low to equalize the costs of production at home and abroad. A rate of duty is not defensible simply because it is low.

It is not possible to prepare graphic illustrations and tables presenting all the thousands of articles affected by the tariff of 1922, since it would require a volume of some size. The tables above submitted indicate the diligence with which the cotton and wool schedules have been examined and compared. I have given like attention to the other schedules. I believe my conclusions are as carefully formed on them as on the cotton and wool schedules, although they are briefly discussed.

The best defense of a protective tariff is its results and of a political party is the soundness of its policies.

The reductions are especially upon the articles of the most common use, comprising a very high proportion of the total quantity of articles produced and consumed in this country, and also an exceedingly high percentage of the total value. I am not interested primarily in a lowering of rates of duty unless such reduction indicates that our country has attained so strong an economic and industrial status and its competitive ability has so developed that without detriment to industry or labor diminished rates give effective protection.

SCHEDULE I—CHEMICALS.

In this schedule the rates of duty on articles dutiable in the tariff of 1909 and preceding protective tariffs are lower than in the tariff of 1922. The increases come on articles which are new developments in older industries or which are new or comparatively new to this country, such as the products of synthetic chemistry, dyes, and the alloy metals. The manufacture of coal-tar products is affected with a public interest; that is, in time of war they are absolutely necessary.

SCHEDULE II—EARTHENWARE.

On many articles of common use the rates are lower than under the tariff of 1909, such as on earthenware crockery, white granite, and semiporcelain ware. Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cements have been transferred to the free list. Some highly manufactured articles involving high labor cost have increased duties.

Special attention is called to the fact that the duties on building materials have been generally reduced in the tariff of 1922.

SCHEDULE III—METALS.

Rates on articles which have been dutiable in preceding protective tariffs are in general materially reduced and affect by far the greater proportion of the products in quantity and value provided for in this schedule. Notable decreases are made on iron and steel used in railway construction and operation, on structural and building steel, on wire used by the farmers, and on many household utensils. The increases are on articles the total value of which is very greatly less than these just described, which are developments of industry in this country, including the manufactures used in electrical work, and on a small number of articles where the competition with the Orient and Germany is very disadvantageous to the American industries under adverse labor and exchange conditions.

Here are some illustrative comparisons between duties in the tariff for 1922 and the tariff for 1909:

	1922	1909
On iron in pigs, per ton	$0.75	$2.50.
On muck bars, bar iron, square iron, etc., reduced over 16 per cent.
On round iron or steel wire	25 per cent	35 per cent.
On galvanized wire, including fencing wire, per pound.	½ cent	$0.01.
On all iron and steel for railroad construction, reduced from 20 per cent to 45 per cent.
On steam engines and steam locomotives	15 per cent	35 per cent.
On shovels, spades, scoops, etc.	30 per cent	45 per cent.

Barbed wire is on the free list.

The increases in this schedule are on highly manufactured articles, where the labor cost is a very large proportion of the cost of production, where the industry is new to this country, or where there is especially unfair competition from countries where the labor cost is very low.

As a result of the tariff, the prices of iron and steel products have steadily declined. The quantity produced and the number and variety of uses have greatly increased. These products are of universal consumption. No one questions that the development of this industry is of the greatest importance to us in times of peace, but in the recent war it was vital not only to us but to the allied cause. When the development of this industry was first fostered by a protective tariff it was stated that the result would be a continual reduction in price and that as the industry became established the duties would be lowered. The rates in the metal schedule are the lowest generally ever proposed, and on some products are only nominal.

Tin plate is another illustration of the beneficial effect of a protective tariff. We have secured not only an important industry but the prices have been greatly reduced to consumers of this product of common use in every household.

Such illustrations could be extended indefinitely. The Republican policy has not only made us economically independent but by effectively establishing industries great and small our people are being supplied with the fundamental necessities at diminishing prices, and hundreds of thousands of well-paid workmen receive employment here. The wages are paid to our own people instead of being paid to workmen abroad.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

It has been stated that there are not sufficient houses in the country to accommodate the people and that this is felt principally in the larger cities. It is important in this connection to call attention to the fact that the duties on practically all building materials have either been reduced or eliminated. Some articles of greatest value and importance in the building industries on which the duties have either been reduced or removed are lumber, shingles, structural steel, and cement.

SCHEDULE IV—WOOD.

Lumber for building and construction work and shingles are placed on the free list. Duties on casks, barrels, hogsheads, and packing boxes are reduced from 17 per cent up to 50 per cent. On furniture, made from cane, rattan, bamboo, and so forth, the duties in some instances are increased to meet oriental competition.

SCHEDULE V—SUGAR.

A protective tariff maintained the industry of producing sugar from cane, and established the beet-sugar industry in this country, that we might be in part at least self-supporting in this essential commodity and by means of domestic competition control the prices charged for imported sugar. When the domestic crop of cane and beet sugar is on the market the price of sugar is materially lower to the consumer. When the domestic crop is sold the price of imported sugar is increased. Sugar is a shining illustration of what will happen to the price of an essential commodity in this country when there is no domestic competition. We produce now about 28 per cent of the total sugar consumed in the United States. About 25 per cent of our consumption of sugar comes from our dependencies, Hawaii and the Philippines. The other half comes chiefly from Cuba, and sugar from Cuba under treaty comes in at 20 per cent less than the rate provided in the tariff of 1922. The protection to this industry has already greatly increased home production, with the resulting benefit of a reduced price during part of the year. We expect that this industry will be largely developed so that the favorable influence of the domestic crop will extend through a greater portion of the year, not to mention the profitable employment of capital and labor in this country.

The importations of cane sugar from Cuba were:

	Pounds.	Value.	Value per pound.
			Cents.
1919	6,686,141,983	$373,705,611	5.4
1920	5,762,152,794	668,902,103	11.8
1921	5,180,145,009	194,156,615	3.7
January to July, 1922	6,637,343,003	145,195,716	2.2

The prices per pound indicate the price at which the producer can afford to offer this commodity grown by the most poorly paid labor. The cost of refining a pound of sugar is now 65 cents per 100 pounds; it used to be 40 cents per 100 pounds. The freight on sugar from Cuba is 12 cents per 100 pounds. The freight from Cuba added to the import value per pound of Cuban sugar makes a sum of 2.307 cents per pound, and adding further the costs incident to landing would make the landed cost of Cuban sugar not over 2.39 cents per pound. This indicates the competition the American industry must meet. The duty on sugar is increased by about one-sixth of a cent per pound, and the American consumer will not pay it because of the conditions under which sugar imported from Cuba is manufactured and sold.

The Cubans complain that they are compelled to absorb the duty on the sugar imported from Cuba. This sugar supplies about half of our total consumption and comes into this country under monopolistic control. This monopoly fixes the price of sugar at rates satisfactory to itself, except during the period the domestic crop of cane and beet sugar is on the market. The best remedy for monopoly is domestic competition. We propose to furnish this by fostering the American industry.

SCHEDULE VI—TOBACCO.

The duties on wrapper and filler tobaccos have been slightly increased. The duties on manufactures of tobacco are practically unchanged. Tobacco being a luxury, comparatively high rates of duty are placed upon it, although the rates of duty may appear to be lower than those on some other schedules. This is accounted for by the fact that manufactures of tobacco are taxed also under the internal revenue law.

SCHEDULE VII—AGRICULTURE.

Two things can be said about this schedule.

1. The duties on the products as they come from the farm have been generally increased, and since animals used for meats are usually imported in the form of carcasses the duties on meats from cattle and sheep have been increased. However, the duties on meats from hogs are reduced.

2. The duties on foodstuffs made from agricultural products are generally lower, especially upon the articles of most general consumption and of greatest value; that is, so far as the prices of food products manufactured from agricultural products are concerned, the consumer finds lower rates in the tariff of 1922 than in the tariff of 1909.

COMPARISON OF DUTIES ON FARM PRODUCTS AS THEY COME FROM THE FARM OR IN THE FORM IN WHICH THEY COMPETE WITH PRODUCTS OF THE FARM.

The duties on agricultural products as they come from the farm and meats whether they are in the form of live animals or carcasses of animals have been somewhat increased, but when meats have been manufactured by preparing or preserving in any manner the duties have been generally reduced. See tables below. In these tables the products of greatest use and most value have been given which fairly represent the matter. When the sign "%" is used below it indicates an ad valorem rate.

The duties on nuts and garden and field seeds have been generally increased for the protection of these industries, and the further reason in the case of seeds to stimulating the growing of seeds acclimated to various localities, to which work the Department of Agriculture has devoted considerable attention and money with valuable results, that they may grow true to type and have increased productivity. It is desired also to protect our users from importation of inferior seeds adulterated with weed seeds.

A country as large as ours with so great a variety of resources can readily become self-sustaining in all essential industries and products. The recent war has shown the danger of depending upon materials from abroad when the life or integrity of a nation is attacked. I think it will be agreed that food, clothing, and housing are the primary essentials. That portion of our people engaged in agriculture has been given a greater degree of protection in this act than in any former act, and the industry of farming has been placed upon an equality so far as the protection is concerned with other industries. There has been wide alarm in the country over the fact that young men and young women are leaving the farms because the returns from farm operations were much less than from other lines of industry, and that the hours and conditions were less pleasant. Also, the number of meat animals in the United States is not increased in numbers in the same proportion as the population increases. Hogs, sheep, and cattle are essential to the industry of farming. It would be useless to raise hundreds of millions of bushels of corn if there were not animals sufficient to transform the corn into meats and fats.

The farming sections of the country are in serious need of relief. Their prosperity is essential to our prosperity and national existence. We can never, without danger to our continuance as a nation, fail to produce the raw materials to feed and clothe our people. Also, the agricultural population, being over 30 per cent of our people, forms the largest and most important single market for manufactured goods of practically all kinds.

The seriousness of the situation varies in different localities. The number of owned farms in 1890 was 887,000, valued at $3,055,000,000, upon which mortgages to the amount of $1,068,000,000 were placed. In 1920 the number of owned farms was 1,461,000, valued at $31,708,000,000 and mortgaged for $11,001,000,000. Practically all prices which the farmer himself received for his products were nearly at the pre-war level. Vast imports of meats, wool, and other commodities destroyed his market for these products.

There is all the difference in the world between the amount the farmer himself puts into his pocket for his products and what the consumer pays for them. The emergency tariff saved the western half of the United States from agricultural ruin. The tariff of 1922 intends to give the same opportunity in the home market to the farmer as is given to other producers, and to promote the prosperity of that industry upon which the well-being of the Nation so largely depends.

SCHEDULE VIII—SPIRITS, WINES, AND OTHER BEVERAGES.

This schedule has become unimportant from the revenue-producing standpoint. Duties on beverages containing alcohol are practically doubled, but the law permits entry of small amounts only. Duties on other beverages not materially changed.

SCHEDULE X—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE.

The principal changes are due to a more scientific arrangement of the schedule and to give proper importance to manufacturing and conversion costs. The rearrangement has effected reductions on some articles of common use and a general reduction below that of the act of 1909.

	1922	1909
On handkerchiefs, not hemmed	35 per cent ad valorem.	50 per cent ad valorem.
On handkerchiefs, hemmed	45 per cent ad valorem.	55 per cent ad valorem.
On clothing and articles of wearing apparel of every description.	35 per cent ad valorem.	50 per cent ad valorem.
On shirts and cuffs, a reduction of	10 per cent ad valorem.

SCHEDULE XII—SILK AND SILK GOODS.

Silk goods, although coming into more general use, are still to be classed as luxuries. The oriental competition is vigorous and Japan has practical control of the raw material. The cost of labor in the Orient is only a small fraction of the wages paid in the silk industry in this country. The language of the schedule has been largely rewritten, considerable portions omitted, and ad valorem duties have been imposed in place of specific duties. For this reason it is not possible at this time to present tables showing comparisons between duties paid under the tariff of 1909 and that of 1922.

The duties on woven fabrics have in part been increased. The duties as a whole are higher than those of 1909.

SCHEDULE XIII—PAPERS AND BOOKS.

There were a few increases and more reductions. Newsprint paper, wood pulp for such paper, and so forth, are on the free list. Highly manufactured articles are given the highest rates.

SCHEDULE XIV—SUNDRIES.

This is the garret in which are placed the left overs. A number of increases and reductions have been made, but in general the material changes are reductions. The increases of importance are on highly manufactured articles.

The following table is compiled from data prepared in the office of the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York, where 75 per cent of our imports are received. The data was compiled from actual invoices during this year. In order to ascertain the prices charged at the principal markets in which the imported articles were sold of the articles listed in the table actual purchases were made and the purchased articles submitted to the appraiser and identified. The table, therefore, is based upon the most expert official opinion. The investigation was conducted under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate.

The table lists only a part of the articles included in the investigation, giving those of general use. The difference between landed prices and the retail prices in this country of imported articles not listed have the same wide range as of the articles given.

Attention is specially directed to the following outstanding conclusions derived from any study of the tables:

1. The low cost of foreign production with which our industries have to compete.

2. The corresponding low cost of labor abroad with which our working people must compete.

3. That the prices charged to customers when the imported articles are retailed are not based upon the landed prices (which include the total cost to the importer except in very unusual instances) but are several times higher and are the highest price the traffic will bear and effect sales.

4. The duties proposed in the tariff of 1922 will not stop importations. There are no embargoes in the new tariff. But it does propose to give the American producer and the American laborer a fair opportunity in our markets.

5. If in the column headed "Duties under laws prior to the tariff of 1922," the duties provided in the new tariff were substituted, the landed price would then be so far below the retail price that the articles could still be sold without increasing the prices. That is, that the duties will not increase the prices.

It therefore remains that the prices charged in this country for imported goods depends upon what the foreign merchants who maintain selling agencies here and the importers can get for them, charging the highest prices they can obtain and effect sales. Since they can not increase such a price and effect sales, they must themselves absorb the duty.

The rates of duty are generally higher in the tariff of 1922 than in the tariff of 1913, known as the Underwood free trade or tariff for revenue law. This means that the foreigner or his agent in this country and the importer, who are now selling goods here for what the traffic will bear, at enormous profits, will pay under the new tariff law more money into the Treasury of the United States.

The wide margin of difference between the landed price and the retail price of imported articles gives an opportunity to manipulate the prices at which they are sold here.

The statement that the duties on imported articles are added to the price is based upon the assumption that the prices of imported goods in this country are made up by adding together the following items:

1. Cost of production in the foreign country.
2. Reasonable profit to the foreign producer.
3. Packing, insurance, freight to America, and so forth.
4. Import duty.
5. Reasonable profit to the seller of imported goods.
6. Costs of distribution here.

But since goods imported from abroad are sold here at the highest price that can be obtained and effect sales, the following is the real method followed:

1. Cost of production abroad.
2. Profit to foreign producer.
3. All the profit the traffic will bear and sell the goods.

That is, the price is fixed without respect to the duty, and an increase in the rate of duty only takes a larger part from the excessive profits for the Treasury of the United States. When the foreign manufacturer maintains his own selling agency here an increase of duty means that the people of the United States take for public purposes part of the great profits that would otherwise be sent abroad.

The foreign producer is interested in selling his goods to Americans to his own advantage, and since his costs are much lower than ours he can when he desires sell his goods here at prices lower than the American costs of production and place in jeopardy our industries and standards of living.

There are industries in this country such as steel, tin plate, and so forth, that have developed improved methods of manufacture, increased output, lower cost per unit, and other reductions that American intelligence and efficiency have devised, which sell the articles produced in competition with all the world, and whatever duties on some of their products there may be found in the tariff of 1922 are not to protect them against legitimate competition, but to offset the products subsidized abroad, or sold under "yellow-dog" methods under which the foreign producer, in order to sell goods here at prices much under his costs of production, to beat down our industries, is reimbursed from a "slush" fund.

The protective policy presents a straightforward plan. It proposes that every useful industry shall be well established in this country, so that by efficiency and increased output all legitimate competition from abroad may be met, American wages be paid labor, our standards of living be maintained, our industries return a reasonable profit, our wealth be increased, and that we be a self-sustaining Nation, and at the same time that prices of commodities be gradually reduced. And the history of the past half century proves the soundness of the policy.

There is this further danger of allowing the foreign producers to control our market, in that it will enable them to fix prices in this country and they are not interested in low prices except for the purpose of injuring American industry, but rather will charge what the traffic will bear for things that are essential to our welfare. We must pay their price to the extent they control the market. The possibility of disaster that is inherent in depending upon an outside country for things essential to the nation was illustrated in the recent war, when it became imperative at great expense and under great urgency to establish plants for the manufacture of articles needed by our people and essential to the national integrity.

If time and space permitted, additional tables could be presented showing that the prices paid consumers depend upon trade conditions, cost of production, quantity produced and offered for sale, the extent to which consumers desire to obtain any given article, and the other usual factors. The price of an article upon which a duty has been newly imposed or increased in order to establish an industry here may be temporarily increased, but when the industry is established and it has found its markets its efficiency in quantity production enables it to reduce the per unit cost and so reduce prices. Then there follows a reduction in duty of which the metal, wool, cotton, and other schedules furnish illustrations.

If low prices are the result of efficiency in production by well-managed businesses on quantity production where adequate wages are paid to labor, it denotes an excellent industrial condition, realizes the purpose of a protective tariff, and is of permanent benefit to all. But where low prices are due to the importations from abroad of articles made by poorly paid labor living under unhealthful conditions, or due to goods sold here at unfair prices, the result is serious damage to our industries, unemployment of labor with probable reduction in wages, and a loss common to all. Our civilization is founded upon efficient production, remunerative return to capital, and well-paid labor.

The United States is the greatest market in the world. It has been built up by the joint endeavors of all. It is a mutual market, and its value depends upon giving to all an equal opportunity. A good market is one which is prepared to take at all times the commodities as they are offered at prices remunerative to the producers and where prices are fairly stable from year to year. In such a market the consumer is effectively protected. The greatest proportion of yearly products of the United States are consumed and will be consumed in this country. We therefore have a permanent interest in our own market, because if we are all to continue to be prosperous we must buy and sell in it. By this method a people are made self-contained and self-supporting. It is an unwise policy to permit foreign products to be sold in this country at an advantage over American products. In fact, it is a matter of history that our periods of industrial distress have been when we have given the foreign producers comparatively free use of our markets. Foreign products will come into the United States, and we are not intending to exclude them. Congress has definitely refused to sanction any embargo; but we do propose that foreign commodities shall not come into this country on terms and conditions disadvantageous to our own people.

The best service we can render to our country, to our people, and to the world at large generally is to make and to keep our own country prosperous by maintaining ourselves in a position to be large producers with a profitable and a good home market in which the world also may have a place to dispose of its goods, wares, and commodities; but a people not prosperous furnish a poor market. If we do not have the wherewithal to buy, it would be of no advantage to the foreign producer to give him even free access to our markets.

GENERAL RÉSUMÉ OF WAGES.

[2] Per year with board for 1917, latest figures available.

The general résumé, calculated upon the rates available in this compilation, as shown above, represents typical wages in the various industries and illustrates the amount in dollars required as payment of a week's labor in the United States compared with foreign countries.

Attention is called to the fact that the figures for the United States represent actual earnings, while, with a few exceptions, specified rates only are shown for other countries.

The figures above are generally taken from official sources, for the most part from Government publications. The conversion of foreign currency was made at the rate prevailing at the time the wage was paid. Since the compilation of this table the German mark has further declined in value. Even if wages in some countries have been advanced since the above table was compiled, no reported advance shows any considerable increase. It is believed that the comparisons above are fairly typical of the differences in the rates of wages prevailing in the several countries.

The table below gives the quantity and value of a number of the most important imports into the United States, especially from the competitive standpoint, for the calendar years 1919, 1920, 1921, and the first seven months of 1922. The total imports were for—

1919	$3,909,364,932
1920	5,278,481,490
1921	2,509,025,403
The first seven months of 1922 were	1,671,535,975
And at that rate for the entire year would be	2,723,000,000

The imports for 1920 exceeded those for 1919 by more than $1,300,000,000; those for 1921 by over $2,700,000,000 and the probable total for 1922 by over $2,400,000,000.

Prices prevailing in 1920 were higher than in 1919, 1921, or 1922. The Underwood free trade or tariff for revenue act was in force.

Neither excessive imports nor free trade duties kept the prices down. Imported goods sold for the highest prices obtainable at extraordinary profits. The Treasury lost goodly sums of money that would have been paid into it from imports under a protective tariff, without affecting the prices to the consumer.

The development of large industries in this country which compete among themselves in our market is the only method for establishing effective competition in domestic prices, and this a protective tariff does.

Table showing imports of a number of competitive articles for the calendar years 1919, 1920, 1921, and for January to July, 1922.

FLEXIBLE TARIFF.

POWER OF THE PRESIDENT TO ALTER RATES OF DUTY.

(Section 315, Title III.)

(a) When the President, after careful investigation, finds that the rates of duty in the tariff of 1922 do not in fact equalize the costs of production of any article or articles between the United States and the principal competing foreign countries, he shall determine the rates that will so equalize such differences, and 30 days after the proclamation is made the rates of duty proposed by him shall be in effect on the articles named in the proclamation in lieu of the rates of duty specified in the tariff of 1922. These rates of duty are to be based upon foreign valuation. He can not increase or decrease any rate of duty more than 50 per cent of the amount thereof as provided in the tariff of 1922.

(b) When the increase or decrease of 50 per cent in the rates of duty based upon foreign valuation do not equalize the differences in the costs of production between the United States and the principal competing foreign countries, then the President shall, after due investigation, ascertain the American selling price of the competing article or articles and by proclamation may announce new rates of duty that will equalize the costs of production between the United States and the principal competing foreign countries on the article or articles involved in the inquiry. Such rates of duty when based upon the American selling price of the imported articles shall not decrease the rates of duty in the tariff of 1922 by more than 50 per cent of such rates, and shall in no case increase them. These rates, based upon the American selling price, are to be effective 15 days from the date of the proclamation.

(c) Differences in the costs of production at home and abroad shall be ascertained by giving due weight to differences in conditions of production, wages, costs of materials, hours of labor, and other items involved in production; differences in the wholesale selling prices in this country of similar domestic and foreign articles; subsidies or other assistance foreign governments give their producers; and any other advantages or disadvantages in competition.

The President can make no proclamation of changes of rates under the flexible tariff provisions until after the United States Tariff Commission has investigated the differences in costs of production at home and abroad. The investigation by the Tariff Commission is required to be very thorough. The President must determine in fact that the differences in costs of production really exist or that unfair practices exist before he can take action. The Tariff Commission shall hold public hearings at which parties interested may be present and heard and is authorized to make proper rules and regulations for the holding of such hearings.

If, subsequent to any proclamation or change in rates, the President finds that the differences in the costs of production at home and abroad have changed or ceased to exist, he may modify or terminate the rates formerly proclaimed by him.

The President can not transfer a dutiable article to the free list or an article on the free list to the dutiable list, or substitute an ad valorem rate for a specific rate or a specific rate for an ad valorem rate. Nor can he increase a rate beyond the maximum ad valorem rate as provided in the tariff of 1922 when such act declares that the combined specific and ad valorem rates of duty shall not exceed a specified maximum ad valorem. For instance, if the act says that the rate on any article shall be 20 cents per pound and 40 per cent ad valorem but that in no case shall the total duty collected be more than 50 per cent ad valorem, the President can not announce new rates that would increase the total duty beyond the maximum of 50 per cent ad valorem.

Section 316 authorizes the President to investigate unfair methods of competition and unfair acts of importation and to declare the same to be unlawful. The Tariff Commission is authorized to report upon such methods and acts, and its findings are to be conclusive if supported by evidence; the offending parties may be given a rehearing by the commission; appeal may be taken to the United States Court of Customs Appeals, and its decision shall be final, except that the subject may be reviewed by the United States Supreme Court. In such cases the President shall increase the duties upon the article or articles in question by not less than 10 per cent ad valorem or more than 50 per cent ad valorem; or the articles may be excluded from entry into the United States. The President's decision is conclusive, but he can modify it thereafter as the facts may warrant.

RETALIATORY PROVISIONS.

Section 317 provides that when any foreign country discriminates against articles wholly or in part the product or products of this country, by imposing, directly or indirectly, any unreasonable charge, fee, duty, exaction, regulation, or limitation, or other method of discrimination and the commerce in them, and the President finds in fact that the said foreign country has done and continues so to do, and that the American public interest will be served thereby, he shall by proclamation declare such new and additional rates of duty as will offset the burdens placed upon our commerce, not exceeding 50 per cent ad valorem, on the commodities from the offending country or countries named in his proclamation; or he may by proclamation exclude the articles named. The provisions of a proclamation become effective 30 days after its date. It is the duty of the Tariff Commission to continually make investigation concerning the welfare of our commerce abroad and to bring to the attention of the President any discrimination.

SECTION 318.

In order to give prompt effect to the flexible tariff and retaliatory provisions of the act, the Tariff Commission is directed to obtain and compile and have ready for prompt use the conversion costs; costs of production; import costs; growers', manufacturers', or producers' selling prices at home and in the manufacturing, producing, and growing centers of foreign countries which export to the United States competitive articles. This will afford the President, the Congress, and the country the information necessary for immediate and effective action.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and senior conferee on the part of the House, has fully discussed the points of difference between the House and Senate, which have engaged the attention of the conferees the past few days. As senior minority conferee on the part of the House I shall therefore not attempt a detailed discussion of the Senate amendments.

The bill is by far the best that has been reported for several years, and the authorization will be sufficient to reasonably take care of all approved projects. Congress has been brought to a realization of the fact that failure to provide water transportation, where practicable, is but playing into the hands of the railroads and giving to them a monopoly of the means of transportation.

Largely due to curtailed appropriations for waterway improvement in recent years, railway rates have been very much increased, thus adding to the high cost of all commodities to the consumer, while at the same time the producer has in many instances suffered an additional loss because the market price of his surplus products was not sufficient to pay the transportation charges.

The intracoastal canal of Louisiana and Texas is better provided for in this bill than has heretofore been possible under the limited lump-sum appropriations; but disappointment is felt because this important waterway has not long since been increased to a depth of 9 feet. It extends from the Mississippi River to Corpus Christi, and pierces the heart of the great lumber, rice, sugar, cotton, oil, and sulphur districts of the Southwest.

In the two States along this canal and in the States of Arkansas and Oklahoma adjoining is produced one-half of the cotton crop of the United States, 80 per cent of the rice crop, and 90 per cent of the cane-sugar crop, to say nothing of other farm products and the great lumber and live-stock interests.

Those States are also producing approximately 40 per cent of the oil and more than 99 per cent of the sulphur production of the United States. The great sulphur mines at Sulphur, La., and at Freeport and Gulf, Tex., are located right on the banks of this canal, and are annually turning out their thousands of tons of this important mineral from which the explosives were made that enabled us to win the World War.

A 9-foot depth in this important waterway, to connect with the Mississippi and its tributaries, would place the people of the Southwest in direct water communication with approximately one-half the United States, where our important surplus farm and mineral products would find a ready market, and from which we might receive in return our necessary supplies of coal, cement, structural steel, and other commodities that we stand in need of.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter that has remained too long neglected, and to which Congress must eventually give its attention. I refer to the improvement of rivers with a view to controlling the flood waters as well as for navigation. We have been quite liberal in making provision for the reclamation of the arid lands of the great Northwest, a course to which I have given my aid on all possible occasions.

On the other hand, we have done practically nothing for the protection of the millions of acres of our choicest river valley lands, which are unsurpassed for fertility, and which are being almost annually devastated by destructive overflows. Those lands could by a system of protection on a cooperative plan of the Federal Government with the respective States and local communities be rendered more productive than the famed Valley of the Nile. How much longer will we delay this important duty? Procrastination is said to be the thief of time.

It is the duty of Congress to cooperate in this great work on all streams where navigation is involved, and at least to the extent that aid will be afforded to the commerce of the country. It is false economy to further delay this important work. The destruction and havoc that have been wrought by the uncontrolled floods since our entry into the World War, the greater portion of which could have been averted, would doubtless be greater than our cost of the war and far in excess of the cost of providing the necessary protection.

The people of Texas and other States now realize more fully than ever before the importance of flood control. They will welcome the lead of the Federal Government on a comprehensive plan, as contemplated in the flood control act of 1917, which, unfortunately, it seems, has been permitted to "die aborning." It is to be hoped that an omnibus flood control bill will be reported at the December session. If we do not propose to avail ourselves of the benefits of this law, then let us rise to the importance of our duty—repeal the act and abolish the expense of maintaining a useless committee of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, as evidence that the people of Texas are willing to lend their aid to all necessary waterway improvements, I will simply refer to the splendid spirit shown by the people of Corpus Christi as embraced in Senate amendment No. 10 in this bill. The estimated cost of a deep-water port at that place, with necessary harbor facilities, breakwaters, revetments, and so forth, is considerably more than $5,000,000; and by the adoption of this amendment only $1,394,800 of this is to be paid by the United States, the balance, amounting to nearly $4,000,000, to be paid locally.

To raise this vast sum of money, the Legislature of Texas, under an amendment to the constitution, has authorized a bond issue of $2,000,000, based upon the State taxes to be derived from six counties for a period of 25 years. This has been augmented with another million-dollar bond issue by the local navigation district, and the city of Corpus Christi has contributed $30,000. The balance necessary to complete the work, amounting to many thousands of dollars, is to be paid by the citizens of that progressive city, and their proposition is to place this money in the hands of the engineers before Uncle Sam will be called upon to put up one red cent. This same spirit of cooperation has heretofore been exhibited by the people of Freeport, Houston, Galveston, Beaumont, and other places.

It is true that the people of south and west Texas will be vitally interested in securing the deep-water port at Corpus Christi, as it is shown that the farmers within 150 miles of that place will save in freight rates on cotton alone about $500,000 annually. But it must be borne in mind that the United States is also an interested party.

Additional to the general obligation of the Government to afford this aid to a vast commerce, it will be seen by reference to the map that Corpus Christi occupies a strategic position. It is our nearest port to the Mexican border, with which it is connected by rail at every strategic point. It is also the nearest port to the military headquarters of the Southwest, located at San Antonio, with which it is connected by several lines of railroad. In the event of trouble beyond the border, rendering our intervention necessary, the Corpus Christi port will be of inestimable value to the United States Government and to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar is in order. The Clerk will call the first bill.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND OF LAKE SUPERIOR CHIPPEWAS.

The first business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6428) for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas, in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am seeking additional information in regard to this bill, as it pertains to my State, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AMENDING SECTION 100 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10817) to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 100 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 100. The State of Ohio is divided into two judicial districts to be known as the northern and southern districts of Ohio. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Ashland, Ashtabula, Cuyahoga, Carroll, Columbiana, Crawford, Geauga, Holmes, Lake, Lorain, Medina, Mahoning, Portage, Richland, Summit, Stark, Tuscarawas, Trumbull, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Auglaize, Allen, Defiance, Erie, Fulton, Henry, Hancock, Hardin, Huron, Lucas, Mercer, Marion, Ottawa, Paulding, Putnam, Seneca, Sandusky, Van Wert, Williams, Wood, and Wyandot, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Cleveland on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October, and at Youngstown on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March. Terms of the district court for the western division shall be held at Toledo on the last Tuesday in April and October, and at Lima on the first Tuesdays after the first Mondays in March and November.

"Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court to be held at Cleveland may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term then being held or authorized to be held at Youngstown. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court to be held at Toledo may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term then being held or authorized to be held at Lima.

"Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Cleveland or at Youngstown, as the court may direct. Crimes and offenses committed in the western division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Toledo or at Lima, as the court may direct.

"Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Youngstown. Any suit brought in the western division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Lima.

"The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Adams, Brown, Butler, Champaign, Clark, Clermont, Clinton, Darke, Greene, Hamilton, Highland, Lawrence, Miami, Montgomery, Preble, Scioto, Shelby, and Warren, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Athens, Belmont, Coshocton, Delaware, Fairfield, Fayette, Franklin, Gallia, Guernsey, Harrison, Hocking, Jackson, Jefferson, Knox, Licking, Logan, Madison, Meigs, Monroe, Morgan, Morrow, Muskingum, Noble, Perry, Pickaway, Pike, Ross, Union, Vinton, and Washington, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district.

"Terms of the district court for the western division shall be held at Cincinnati on the first Tuesdays in February, April, and October; and for the eastern division at Columbus on the first Tuesdays in June and December, and at Steubenville on the first Tuesdays of March and September. Grand and petit jurors summoned for service at a term of court being held at Columbus may, if in the opinion of the court the public convenience so requires, be directed to serve also at the term being held or authorized to be held at Steubenville. Crimes and offenses committed in the eastern division shall be cognizable at the terms held at Columbus, or at Steubenville, as the court may direct. Any suit brought in the eastern division may, in the discretion of the court, be tried at the term held at Steubenville: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Steubenville shall be furnished free of expense to the Government until the completion of the Federal building: And provided further, That terms of the district court for the southern district shall be held at Dayton on the first Mondays in May and November. Prosecutions for crimes and offenses committed in any part of said district shall also be cognizable at the terms held at Dayton. All suits which may be brought within the southern district, or either division thereof, may be instituted, tried, and determined at the terms held at Dayton."

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out the word "March" and insert the word "May." Strike out the word "November" and insert the word "September," and insert "Provided, That suitable accommodations for holding court at Lima be furnished free of expense to the United States."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the author of the bill whether this has been submitted to the Department of Justice?

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I believe the committee sent a letter to the Department of Justice, and I am not able to ascertain whether any answer has been received or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the bill very carefully, and I know something about the location of Lima and its distance from Toledo, which is the nearest place for holding court. I notice in the amendment that it is provided for holding court at Lima on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of May and September. At present the law provides for holding a session of court at Cleveland in April and also at Toledo on the last Tuesday in April. And now you propose holding court the first Tuesday after the first Monday of May at Lima. It seems to me the interim of time is too short and I suggest an amendment that June be substituted instead of May.

Mr. CABLE. I think the suggestion is a good one. The bill was drawn for March instead of May and the committee substituted May. I believe the amendment should be amended by striking out "May" and inserting "June" in lieu thereof.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer a substantive amendment to strike out, in line 14, page 2, the word "May" and insert the word "June."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out the word "May" and insert in lieu thereof the word "June."

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CABLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 240) authorizing the erection on public grounds of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 240. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds of a memorial to the late Joseph J. Darlington; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that September 16 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 10874. An act to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had exanmined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12472. An act to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities during the present emergency, and to prevent the sale of fuel at unjust and unreasonably high prices.

INCORPORATING THE AMERICAN MATHEMATICAL SOCIETY.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9218) to incorporate the American Mathematical Society.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is too important in character to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and therefore I object. The Committee on the Judiciary will have a call of the calendar very shortly, when this bill can be taken up.

Mr. CURRY. Does the gentleman object to this bill being passed on the calendar? Will the gentleman permit the bill to remain on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think the bill should remain on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

CAREY SEGREGATION NO. 11.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3195) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept completion of Carey segregation No. 11 and to issue patent therefor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. VAILE. I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. TINCHER. I have no objection.

NORTH RIVER BRIDGE CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2799) to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is more than an ordinary bridge bill. This revives a bill that has been up for a number of years, a bill of many provisions, and I do not think it should be considered in this fashion on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WATERWORKS PLANTS OF KANSAS CITY, KANS., AND KANSAS CITY, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (S. J. Res. 216) providing for the consent of the Congress of the United States of America to a compact and agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri respecting the erection, maintenance, and operation of the waterworks plants of the cities of Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., the taxation thereof, and exercise of eminent domain in connection therewith by each State.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by a concurrent resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri and approved by the governor of said State on April 15, 1921, and a similar resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas and approved by the governor of said State on March 18, 1921, it was resolved and provided that, whereas the city of Kansas City, in Wyandotte County, Kans., and the city of Kansas City, in Jackson County, Mo., are contiguous and adjoining and each owns and operates waterworks plants, the intake portions of which are on the banks of the Missouri River in Kansas City, Kans., and contiguous to each; and for the protection of each city, in the event of a breakdown of its plant, a conflagration, epidemic, or other exigency, it is vitally important that its water plant have connection with and access to the facilities of the other; and it is and has been in the past of material benefit to each city that both contribute to a common fund in protecting the banks of the Missouri River in the vicinity of said plants and farther upstream from breaking over and destroying the plants or changing its course so as to leave the intake so far from the stream as to render it impossible to obtain an adequate flow of water therefrom; and the water plants of both cities are connected at various points so that they can in the future, as they have in the past, supply each other with water, thereby preserving the health and protecting the property of each; and the plant of Kansas City, Mo., is now, and will of necessity continue to be for a long period in the future, the only source of water supply to the city of Rosedale, in Wyandotte County, Kans., and the maintenance of this supply is of vital importance to the health and property protection of the citizens of said municipality; and the contour of the territory of each city is such that to reach and serve certain districts it is necessary that portions of the service mains and plants occupy and run through the territory of the other State; and Kansas City, Mo., is about to invest many millions of dollars in the betterment of its plant in the immediate future and the city of Kansas City, Kans., will invest in the future large sums in extending its plant, said extensions of each municipality necessitating large investments in the territory of the adjacent State, and to raise the funds for the purpose of making these investments it is vital to each city that each plant be free from assessment and taxation in the other State; and that therefore, by reason of the advantages accruing to the municipalities of each State and to the inhabitants thereof, as hereinbefore recited, and other advantages not therein enumerated, the States of Kansas and Missouri thereby entered into the following compact and agreement:

(1) Neither the State of Kansas, nor any county, township, or municipality located within said State, or any official thereof, shall ever assess, levy, or collect any taxes, assessments, or imposts of any kind or character whatsoever on the portion of the waterworks plant of the municipality of Kansas City, Mo., now or hereafter located within the territory of the State of Kansas.

(2) Neither the State of Missouri, nor any county, township, or municipality located within said State, or any official thereof, shall ever assess, levy, or collect any taxes, assessments, or imposts of any kind or character whatsoever on the portion of the waterworks plant of the municipality of Kansas City, Kans., now or hereafter located within the territory of the State of Missouri.

It is further provided by said resolutions, compact, and agreement that the right of eminent domain, for the purpose of acquiring property rights and easements for a waterworks plant, including mains, water pipe lines, or extensions, or any part thereof, in either State, was thereby given and granted to each State and to Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., to be exercised by Kansas City, Kans., in the State of Missouri, and by Kansas City, Mo., in the State of Kansas, for said purposes; and that to the faithful observance of the said compact and agreement each State, by the adoption of said resolutions, pledged its good faith: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby accorded to said compact and agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri.

With a committee amendment as follows:

After line 5, page 4, insert: "Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to amend by striking out section 2. The Chair is informed that that is a committee amendment. There would be no need of striking it out. The question would come on agreeing to the committee amendment. The gentleman would desire the House to vote against agreeing to the committee amendment?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the question?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, I rise to express the earnest desire that the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee be not agreed to. I can give my reasons in a few words. It is most desirable, to express it rather mildly, that the resolution become law at this session. If this amendment carry, and send the resolution back to the Senate, the legislation will fail for this session. That must be avoided, for an emergency exists in the matter of improvement of the systems of waterworks in the two cities.

There is no national concern or interest involved—no reason why the assent of the Congress should not be complete.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest that the gentleman extend his remarks. There is no opposition.

Mr. ELLIS. Well, if there is no opposition, I will ask leave to extend.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BOARD OF ACCOUNTANCY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2531) to create a board of accountancy for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the District Committee has sought to make Unanimous-Consent Calendar business District business by putting on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent most, if not all, the bills reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia. In fact, they have placed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for consideration a bill reported as recently as Saturday.

This is an important bill, a bill that very likely should be passed; but I do not believe it should be passed on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will say that this bill calls for no expense. It does what is being largely advocated throughout the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the report and I have read the bill carefully, but I can not see why, under the Unanimous Consent Calendar, we should give District business special consideration. The gentleman's committee has had days, and many days, for consideration of District measures.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Two days each month.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I will state to the gentleman that both times the District business has been passed over and other matters have been taken up. We have not had two days every month.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to its being passed over.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar and be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DEVELOPMENT OF UNDERGROUND WATERS IN NEVADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2983) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant extensions of time under permits for the development of underground waters within the State of Nevada, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think some explanation should be made of this bill before the objection stage is passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will state to the gentleman that I placed the bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar at the request of the senior Senator from Nevada. Congress originally passed this law with a view to encouraging people under permits to drill for water at depth in the State of Nevada. As the gentleman knows, the State of Nevada is extremely arid.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is dry in another way than other States are dry? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; exceedingly so.

Some effort has been made to carry out the provisions of the law under permits, but drilling to find water at depth is very expensive, and it was thought proper to pass this legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, if he found that the permittees had been conducting their operations in good faith, to give them more time in which to carry on this development.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original law provided that the work of drilling and operation should begin in six months?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill seems to extend the time for the beginning, recommencement, or completion of the operation two years, does it not?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true, but it is all within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. But you do not want, after drilling has been commenced, to hang its completion in the air for two years?

Mr. HAYDEN. Deep-well drilling is a very expensive operation, and they greatly need water in Nevada.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman raise his voice so that we can hear?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gladly, in view of the confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House whether any real work of development has been undertaken under the original act of 1919?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am informed that considerable sums of money have been expended for deep drilling without yet finding water.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw any objection I may have had to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that any permittee has been unable, with the exercise of diligence, to begin or continue operations for the development of underground waters within the time prescribed by sections 4 and 5 of the act of Congress approved October 22, 1919 (41 Stats. 295), extend the time for the beginning, recommencement, or completion of the said operations described in said sections for such time, not exceeding two years, and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, was laid on the table.

MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11040) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined under my present attitude of mind to object to this bill. I shall be glad to hear any explanation of it.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed in 1916, authorizing the sale of this hospital, but it provided that only $400,000 of the amount could be used for the building of a new hospital.

When the present hospital was built the land cost $12,000. It is estimated that the hospital and ground will sell to-day for $1,000,000, although the hospital ground cost only $12,000 at the time the land was bought. It is situated close to the railroad station into which two railroads run. Their tracks cross the hospital grounds. The smoke pours in at the windows. The institution has become almost worthless for hospital purposes, although it is crowded with patients. This bill simply provides that all the money received from the sale of the old hospital may be used in the building of a new hospital. It provides that there shall not be one dollar of additional appropriation. We simply desire that the money received from the sale of the old property be used in the construction of a new hospital.

This bill was suggested by the Surgeon General, by the government in charge, and by the Government itself. They are very anxious to build the hospital, because the one they now have is not fit for use on account of the smoke and noise, although it is overcrowded. It is at their suggestion that this bill is brought in here with the simple purpose of using the money received from the sale of the property in the construction of a new hospital under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to select the site. I can not imagine any plan that will be better. I want to say that it is indorsed by the marine interests, indorsed by the chamber of commerce, and everybody on the Great Lakes is in favor of the proposition.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. KINDRED. Does the Public Health Service favor this?

Mr. NORTON. Doctor Cumming has written a very long opinion favoring it and asking that it be done, and the Secretary and others whose letters I have here all favor it. The request comes from that department.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As a member of the committee, I want to supplement the statement by saying that in 1916 it was believed that $400,000 would be a sufficient sum for the erection of a new marine hospital in the place of the old one. It is now found that it will cost approximately the entire sum which will be realized from the sale of the property.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of the right to object, I wish to say that ever since the enabling act was passed in 1916 the Public Health Service has had authority to sell this land and build a hospital to cost $400,000 and turn the remainder of the money received from the sale of this property back into the Treasury. I do not know for what reason they have failed to do that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I can inform the gentleman, if he will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me complete what I have to say. Now, at this late day, they propose, not because of higher costs but because the Public Health Service wants it, to erect a hospital away beyond the needs of the marine interests on the Lakes. It is proposed to erect a hospital of very large proportions, and to use it partly for all manner of purposes connected with public-health activities. We all know that with the hospitals now being erected for the benefit of the service men, the peak will soon be passed, and there will be hospitals at Chicago and all along the Lakes that can be utilized for marine-hospital purposes. I do not think that at this time we should launch upon the policy of erecting a hospital which will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars more than the original authorization. If Cleveland wants a hospital to cost $400,000, she can go ahead and build it. She has that opportunity under the existing law. She has had the opportunity for six years to build it. It is now proposed to build a hospital that will be an adornment to some suburban park of the city of Cleveland but which is not really needed by the marine interests.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think the gentleman will seriously complain if he will stop to reflect a moment, because these people did not build the hospital in 1917, 1918, 1919, or 1920, while we were at war and when building was not only prohibited by the cost but prohibited by conidtions under which it was impossible to get building material. It is only within the last year at the most that they could have erected this hospital. Building conditions in large cities—in Chicago, for instance—have been such that such a hospital could not have been erected until recently. Now the proposition is to sell this property and acquire a new site. That new site will cost at least $250,000. The balance of the money from the sale of this old property will probably be about $750,000, and for that amount one could not build a very large hospital in any large city—not an enormous hospital, at any rate. I think it is very reasonable to take $750,000 for the erection of a marine hospital in a city like Cleveland. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] has called my attention to the fact that this project is recommended by other branches of the service, as, for instance, the Coast Guard Service. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds considered this matter very thoroughly, and are fully convinced that it is a very meritorious proposition.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman from Wisconsin has stated that the needs of the veterans for hospitals will soon be at an end.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the completion of the hospitals now authorized, the peak will soon be reached, and it is the general expectation of all medical authorities that we will have beds in ample number for other purposes.

Mr. KINDRED. The peak will not be reached, as the gentleman will realize on reflection, for 10 or 15 years. In the meantime additional hospital facilities are required.

Mr. STAFFORD. While I respect the gentleman's opinion on all medical matters very highly, he does not agree at all with the expert opinion of the Medical Corps of the Army as to when the peak will be reached as to hospitalization of the veterans. I respect the gentleman's opinion as a medical man very highly, but on this question I must yield to the opinions of the Army medical officers.

Mr. NORTON. I will state to the gentleman that Doctor Cummings, the Surgeon General, informs me that the sole reason why the Government did not go ahead before in the construction of this hospital was that they found $400,000 was not sufficient for the construction of a proper hospital at that place. For that reason they have asked that the entire proceeds of the sale of the old hospital property be used.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limitation of cost proposed in this bill. Suppose this property sells for $2,000,000. The Public Health Service, the most extravagant branch of the Government service, would use all the money received. It has never been known to fail to use all of the money that it could.

Mr. NORTON. I wish the property would bring what the gentleman suggests, but it will not. I want to say that the hospital can not be properly used where it is to-day. The smoke pours in at the windows so that they can hardly use it. Eight of the New York Central and Pennsylvania Railroad tracks cross this property, and it is not a fit location for a hospital.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless there is some limit of cost we should not launch on this extravagant policy, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. NORTON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands.

CONFERENCE REPORT—COAL.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on H. R. 12377, which is the coal bill, be allowed until 12 o'clock to-night, if necessary, to file a conference report and statement in order that it may be printed in the RECORD and be called up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the conferees have permission to print their report and statement at any time up until 12 o'clock to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I presume that is agreeable to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the minority member.

Mr. WINSLOW. I believe it is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may report a deficiency bill at any time up until 12 o'clock to-night.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is not a conference report?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The reporting of a bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may report a deficiency appropriation bill at any time before midnight to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not object.

There was no objection.

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS OF ST. LOUIS AND SALT LAKE CITY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate Joint Resolution 208, authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear an explanation of this bill.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution comes before the House under very peculiar circumstances. All of the Federal reserve head offices with the exception of this one, that is 11 out of the 12, had constructed their buildings or had let the contracts for the construction of buildings when Congress last June passed an act under which the erection of these buildings must receive the consent of Congress if the amount to be used in their construction exceeds $250,000. That was done with the particular purpose of governing the construction of the member banks, and undoubtedly would never have received consideration as far as the head offices of the Federal reserve districts are concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House what is the total capital and surplus of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis for which authorization of 25 per cent is made to build its head office building?

Mr. DALE. The total capital and surplus of the St. Louis head office bank is somewhat in excess of $14,000,000 and the House committee cut this amount to 25 per cent. Authorization is given to use over $3,000,000 if they desire, but Mr. Martin, the president of the bank, appeared before the committee and went over their plans in detail, and they would not very much exceed $3,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to what is the cost of the office building of the Federal reserve bank at Chicago?

Mr. DALE. Yes; the cost of the office building in Chicago, although I have not the exact figures, exceeded $10,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That building was used for other purposes besides the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. DALE. I think the gentleman is not correct in that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is an 11 or 12 story building, and this building is proposed to be but 5 stories.

Mr. LONGWORTH. My understanding is that all the buildings are for the use of the bank and not office buildings at all. The building in New York as I understand costs more than $25,000,000, and it is not used as an office building, but simply for the office of this bank. It seems to me it was a great waste of money.

Mr. STAFFORD. The building in Chicago is not rented——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am speaking of the building in New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. The building in Chicago is about 12 stories in height, and I judged from the immensity of the building that it was to be used for other purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the New York building is not, and it seems to me that three and a half million dollars is a large sum for a building that is not to be used as an office building. I would like to ask the gentleman if this building is to be used solely for the use of the Federal bank.

Mr. DALE. If you compare three and a half million dollars asked for by St. Louis with the amount expended by the other districts, you will find that this is very reasonable. Five of the other smaller districts exceeded $2,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am protesting against the gross extravagance of the Federal banks using a building costing $25,000,000 in New York; I think that is the grossest extravagance. I want to prevent it in the future if I can. I ask the gentleman if this is solely for the use of the Federal banks?

Mr. DYER. It is expected that they will use all of the space.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How many employees have they?

Mr. DYER. I do not know how many there are. They are renting buildings all over the city and the leases are expiring. The city has passed an ordinance vacating others in order that the building may be erected; the leases expire within a limited time. This is the only reserve bank that has not its own building; the others have constructed theirs.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was rather influenced in favor of this bill from the fact that the bank had purchased land—I suppose in the banking center of the city—at a cost of one million and three hundred and odd thousand dollars. They purchased the land before Congress placed any limit on the erection of buildings. They have purchased the land and had the plans prepared, but withheld going ahead because of the high cost of labor and material. I did not think that in view of that fact and the fact that Chicago spent a larger sum on a building—which I could not criticize, as far as its construction is concerned, judged from the outside—and in view of the fact that five other banks have exceeded two millions in expense—one in New York and one in Chicago——

Mr. DALE. No; five have exceeded $2,000,000, three have exceeded $5,000,000, one has exceeded $7,000,000, one has exceeded $10,000,000, and one has exceeded $23,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Very well, all have exceeded the $2,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What was the cost of the Cleveland building?

Mr. DALE. The Cleveland building cost exceeded $7,000,000.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. I will.

Mr. WINGO. All the other buildings have cost three to five times as much as they propose to spend on this building.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. LANGLEY. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas calls for the regular order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Unless I can get an opportunity to say something, I shall have to object.

Mr. LANGLEY. If I can not make a statement I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no option in the matter. The gentleman from Arkansas asks for the regular order.

Mr. LANGLEY. I object.

CLOSING PINEY BRANCH ROAD, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 1066 to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close Piney Branch Road between Seventeenth and Taylor Streets and Sixteenth and Allison Streets NW., rendered useless or unnecessary by reason of the opening and extension of streets called for in the permanent highway plan of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS. I object.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 2885 to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the considertion of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the payment of awards in condemnation proceedings heretofore instituted for the acquisition of title to lands needed for military purposes, and in order to save the investments of the Government in improvements erected upon lands occupied under leases for military purposes, and to avoid the payment of excessive rentals and restoration charges, and in order to complete certain other projects already begun, the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated for the acquisition of title to the lands hereinafter mentioned out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

Morgan general ordnance depot, South Amboy, N. J.: For purchase of land occupied as a railroad right of way in connection with the ordnance depot, $300.

Pig Point ordnance reserve depot, Virginia: To complete acquisition of real estate, $3,000.

Middletown air intermediate depot, Middletown, Pa.: To complete the acquisition of real estate, $165,000.

Edgewood Arsenal, Edgewood, Md.: For the acquisition of a right of way for high-tension electric transmission line and telegraph and telephone line connection with the Edgewood Arsenal, now occupied under leases, $24,200.

Fitzsimons General Hospital, Denver, Colo.: For the purchase of land occupied as a railroad right of way connecting the hospital with the Union Pacific Railroad, $1,500.

Richmond air intermediate depot, Richmond, Va.: To complete the acquisition of title to land, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated for that purpose, $275.

Walter Reed General Hospital, Washington, D. C.: For the acquisition of an addition thereto and for the site of medical museum and library, in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated for that purpose, $39,328.56.

Inland warehouses, Philadelphia, Pa.: For the acquisition of 60.70 acres of land now occupied under lease and to acquire 5.23 acres of land necessary in connection therewith, $575,000.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into necessary contracts of purchase and make payments for such lands and to cause condemnation proceedings to be instituted where such action is deemed necessary or advisable, and out of the sum herein appropriated to pay final judgments in such condemnation cases, and to pay all necessary costs and expenses, including cost of abstracts, surveys, and recording fees incident to and necessary in carrying out the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 18, strike out all down to and including line 21.

Page 3, line 2, strike out the figures "$39,328.56" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$44,109.22."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF ARMS AND AMMUNITION SEIZED ALONG THE MEXICAN BORDER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2621) authorizing the President to dispose of certain arms and ammunition seized in pursuance of the act approved June 15, 1917, along the Mexican border.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, through the Secretary of War, to sell, upon such terms as the Secretary of War shall deem expedient, such arms and ammunition now in the hands of the War Department and its bureaus as were seized under the provisions of or in pursuance of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat., pp. 223 to 225), and commonly called the "espionage act": Provided, That no such arms and ammunition shall be sold or offered for sale unless the owner thereof is unknown or that such arms and ammunition have remained unclaimed by the owner for a period of one year prior to such offer for sale. The proceeds of such sale, less the expense thereof, if any, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COLLECTION OF MONTHLY INSTALLMENTS OF INDEBTEDNESS BY GENERAL PRISONERS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3111) to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if at the time of restoration to duty as an enlisted man, from the status of a general prisoner, such enlisted man is indebted to the United States or its instrumentalities, or to any Government agency, the amount of such indebtedness will be collected in monthly installments of not exceeding an amount equal to two-thirds of his monthly pay: Provided, That if such indebtedness of the enlisted man so charged against him at the time of his restoration be not fully liquidated before the date of expiration of his current enlistment or on such date thereafter to which he may be required to serve under the provisions of the one hundred and seventh article of war and his service subsequent to his restoration has been honest and faithful, then at the time of such enlisted man's discharge from his current enlistment the Secretary of War, if he deem such action to be in the interest of justice and for the best interest of the military service, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, may remit and cancel the portion of such indebtedness then remaining unpaid.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 126, NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11173) to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. On page 2 of the bill the final proviso contains a stipulation that enlisted men under the age of 18 discharged on the application either of their parents or legal guardian shall be furnished transportation to their homes. Now, in connection with that does not the gentleman think that where the parents of a minor or the boy under 18 years old apply for his discharge he shall be given an honorable discharge? Now they always refuse to give an honorable discharge, even if the parents apply for the discharge. I am asking for information.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that this is a matter that has been discussed a number of times here in the House, and as I recollect there was an amendment enacted some time ago that required them to be given an honorable discharge. It is not a dishonorable discharge. Of course, the question arises if the young man goes into the Army through fraudulent representation whether or not he is entitled to an honorable discharge if his parents ask to take him out. Personally I would feel that there was no obligation on the part of the Government to give such a discharge to a young man 18 years of age who would go to a recruiting station and represent himself to be over 18 years of age and the Government legally accepts him and takes him in.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Assuming those specific facts, the gentleman's position is undoubtedly correct; but I know a number of instances where the recruiting officer has been as much and in many instances more to blame than the minor and does not seem to have taken as much pains as he should have under the circumstances in ascertaining the age of the applicant. It seems passing strange that a 16 or 17 year old boy can so easily deceive the big, grown-up, experienced recruiting officer. It is terrible the way these poor, innocent boys deceive them. Yet that is the logic of the Army system now in vogue.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman will find they do not get a dishonorable discharge. There are three forms of discharge.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand. The ordinary or blue discharge——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is the gentleman quite sure?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I know a young man living in my home town who has been given an ordinary discharge who had gone through the war and had a military service of 28 months and——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There is what is known in the service as a discharge without honor, but that does not carry with it the penalties that are visited upon the holder of a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In this case the man served 28 months, 14 months on the scene of active hostilities, with nothing against his record. He was given a blue or ordinary discharge. He was given the ordinary discharge or the intermediate discharge, whatever the proper term may be, but he is not given credit for his service in attempting to secure the patent for his land.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There are certain forfeits going to a man holding a discharge without honor, because it is only the man discharged with honor who retains his military record.

The dishonorable discharge is nothing more than the waiving of his honorable record or the right to claim it. It carries penalties with it, forfeitures, and one thing and another of that kind. It is a sort of punitive discharge, not merely a release without honor.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is one other question I would like to ask in connection with this. I see provision is made for the payment of mileage to the homes of these boys who enlisted at less than 18 years of age. Has any provision been made, or is it in contemplation to make provision, for those boys who served in the war who have already been discharged?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not think so. The real purpose of the amendment to this section, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, grows out of the fact that a soldier will sometimes enlist in the Army at a certain place and when it comes to getting his discharge he will say his home is in San Francisco when he probably enlisted at Norfolk. The real purpose of this is to provide that the Government shall give him transportation to the point nearest to the place where he enlisted.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am not opposed to the general purposes of the bill, but I merely took occasion to ask these questions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as contained in section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions," approved February 28, 1919, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 126. Hereafter an enlisted man discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, except by way of punishment for an offense, shall receive 5 cents per mile for the distance from the place of his discharge to the place of his acceptance for enlistment, enrollment, or muster into the service: Provided, That for sea travel involved in travel between place of discharge and place of acceptance for enrollment, enlistment, or muster into the service only transportaion in kind and subsistence en route shall be allowed: Provided further, That enlisted men under the age of 18 discharged on the application of either of their parents or legal guardian shall be furnished with transportaion in kind from the place of discharge to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment, or to their home if the distance thereto is no greater than from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment, but if the difference be greater they may be furnished transportation in kind for a distance equal to that from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKENZIE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS MEDAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2192) authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It affects only a few men who had oversea service in the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection. I hope the gentleman will make no objection to it. It affects a very few men who will not have justice done to them if this bill is not gotten through.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that the only purpose of this bill is to give the veteran officers and men of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection the privileges that have been given the veterans of other wars.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It simply puts them on an equality with the veterans of the late war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This medal is to go to men already officially on record cited for gallantry and bravery twenty-odd years ago, who yet were given nothing beyond that mere citation. In this late war an outward and visible sign of distinction has been given to the veterans of that war; an outward and visible sign of that inward and spiritual grace.

Mr. STAFFORD. The act authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished medal of honor was to confer that honor on officers and enlisted men by reason of distinguished service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It depended upon the character of the citation. We had no decoration other than the congressional medal of honor, which was given for distinguished service beyond the call of duty.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Was there not also a certificate of merit?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes. There was a certificate of merit, which gave increase of pay to the enlisted men. The officers got nothing. These men are living side by side with other men receiving the same citation. It was thought well to give to the soldiers of the late war and their comrades of the Spanish-American War, having similar service and similar citation, the same medal. As it is now, the veterans of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection and the China expedition have nothing except their citation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some question as to whether, after having adopted a medal under the conditions which existed at the time we adopted it, we should now make provision that those who had served and rendered distinguished service and had been cited for gallantry many years prior to the creation of that medal should be granted this particular badge, which was proposed and provided for many years after the act. If we may go back to the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection with the medals and the badges which have been provided long after those wars, why should we not go back to the Civil War? Why should we not go back to the earliest service represented by an officer or man now living?

I question the good taste of doing what is proposed in this bill. These men received the honor and the recognition provided for under the regulations of the time when they served and at the time their gallant acts were performed. Later we provided other methods of recognition. It does not strike me as being logical or reasonable or in good taste to take up cases that had occurred decades before these medals were provided for and say that those men also shall now be recognized, as though this medal was provided for at the time of their service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I want to suggest to the gentleman that his argument would be all right if it were not for the fact that we had already applied this World War distinction to Spanish War and Philippine insurrection men. This is only another group of men from those embraced within the narrow terms of the original act.

Mr. MONDELL. It all proves, I think, that the suggestions I made have a sound basis. Shall we go on awarding medals for service performed long since, medals thought of, proposed, and provided for many, many years after the service was rendered for which they are now to be decorated?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman realizes, because he keeps well informed as to all of these things——

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it is reasonable or in good taste.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, I plead guilty to all those indictments when I stand here to support a thing of that kind. Nevertheless my reason has not been affected by it particularly; and I want to suggest to the gentleman that the very list of officers of the Spanish War and the Philippine insurrection who are to be honored by these badges was a list sent in to Congress following the hostilities in which they made their gallant record, and they were then recommended for the only reward they could get under the existing law, which was a brevet military rank promotion.

Mr. MONDELL. And they received it. In other words, they received all the recognition then provided for.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But brevet military rank has since been abolished, and this medal is to take its place, and the men who have earned the medal since get it, while these men do not. It may be unreasonable to suggest that comrades standing side by side in gallant service should get equal recognition for the same bravery. That may be unreasonable in the minds of some gentlemen, but they must look at it from another standard than we do who favor this legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. If we extend this medal to the veterans of the Spanish War, is there any reason why we should not extend it to the veterans of the Civil War and the Mexican War?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman will recall that by the terms of this bill these are officers who are serving in the Army to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And officers in whose cases the recommendation has already been made.

Mr. MONDELL. If this reward is to be given, I am not sure that it should not be given equally to the men who have retired from active service as well as to the men who are still in the active service. I appreciate these services, but I question this method of recognition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If that is true, then we should apply everything to the retired men. If we subsequently increase the pay of anybody now in the active service, I suppose the gentleman argues that we should make that retroactive. The question of unreasonableness may run to a tie here before we get through with it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the matter go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIMITATION ON MILITARY SERVICE IN FOREIGN POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2363) to abolish the limitation on military service without the continental limits of the United States imposed by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1915.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA INSURANCE FUND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10034) creating the District of Columbia insurance fund for the benefit of employees injured and the dependents of employees killed in employments, providing for the administration of such fund by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, and making an appropriation therefor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPROUL. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill. It has already had one day's consideration in the House on District of Columbia day. It is now the unfinished business on that day. I do not believe the bill should pass at the present time. Therefore I shall have to object.

Mr. FOCHT. I will ask the gentleman whether he will permit the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. SPROUL. No; I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SALE OF MILK, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7746) to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and certain milk products, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10390) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a bill to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I object.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, may I have the floor for five minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have that right except by the courtesy of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who objects.

Mr. FOCHT. I do not want to take up the time of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will not object to this bill being passed without prejudice, as the gentleman wishes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill being passed without prejudice?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADDITIONAL TERMINAL FACILITIES IN SQUARES 710 AND 712.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6650) providing additional terminal facilities in square east of 710 and square 712 in the District of Columbia for freight traffic.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not consider it now?

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman does not seem to think there is time enough to consider these bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have plenty of time for this bill. I am sure there is no objection to it.

Mr. FOCHT. It does seem to me very strange that this new leadership should be so arrogant, with all the bills considered before the Committee on the District of Columbia, that the gentleman is willing to have all his bills passed, and that he must object to the others. We just had called up one of the most important bills on behalf of the District of Columbia that we have had this session—the bill with respect to the salaries of teachers—and I do not see why the gentleman should object to the consideration of that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, what is before the House now?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOCHT. I withdraw objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That any railroad company now or hereafter having tracks in the District of Columbia, or operating over the line of any other railroad in the District of Columbia, shall have the right to have freight transported by it delivered upon the tracks of any other railroad in the square east of square 710 and in square 712 in the District of Columbia upon the payment to the railroad whose tracks are used for such purpose of a reasonable switching charge, which shall include the return of the empty car for every car so switched to said tracks; and if the parties be unable to agree upon such charges, then the same shall be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the petition of any party in interest.

SEC. 2. That all railroads described in section 1 of this act be, and they are hereby, required to accept shipments of freight for delivery in and upon said square east of 710 and in and upon square 712.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws that are in conflict with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOCHT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PREVENTION OF VENEREAL DISEASES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11021) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that if we should launch upon the consideration of this important bill, with which I am in sympathy, it would take an hour or two and perhaps all afternoon. It is too important a bill to consider on this calendar, and, therefore, I object.

Mr. FOCHT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXTENSION AND WIDENING OF NINTH STREET.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7454) to authorize the extension and widening of Ninth Street from Longfellow Street NW. to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue NW.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension and widening of Ninth Street NW. from Longfellow Street to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue, in accordance with the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages is hereby authorized, payable out of the revenues of the District of Columbia; the amounts collected as benefits to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. If my memory serves me aright, within the last few days a Senate bill of similar import to this came over to the House. I do not know whether the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has that bill in his possession or not.

Mr. FOCHT. No; I have not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The chairman of the committee advises me that he has not the bill.

Mr. FOCHT. It is identical, however, with this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over until the Senate bill can be obtained so as to make a motion to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily postponed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXTENSION OF PARK SYSTEM IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10275) authorizing the extension of the park system in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. FOCHT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS FOR MATERIAL AND LABOR FURNISHED FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUILDINGS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5027) to amend an act approved February 28, 1899, entitled "An act relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for the District of Columbia buildings."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings," approved February 28, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That hereafter any person or persons entering into a formal contract with the District of Columbia for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work, or for repairs upon any public building or public work, shall be required, before commencing such work, to execute the usual penal bond, with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligation that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them with labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract; and any person, company, or corporation who has furnished labor or materials used in the construction or repair of any public building or public work, and payment for which has not been made, shall have the right to intervene and be made a party to any action instituted by the United States or the District of Columbia on the bond of the contractor, and to have their rights and claims adjudicated in such action and judgment rendered thereon, subject, however, to the priority of the claim and judgment of the United States or the District of Columbia. If the full amount of the liability of the surety on said bond is insufficient to pay the full amount of said claims and demands, then, after paying the full amount due the United States or the District of Columbia, the remainder shall be distributed pro rata among said intervenors. If no suit should be brought by the United States or the District of Columbia within six months from the completion and final settlement of said contract, then the person or persons supplying the contractor with labor and materials shall, upon application therefor, and furnishing affidavit to the department under the direction of which said work has been prosecuted that labor or materials for the prosecution of such work has been supplied by him or them, and payment for which has not been made, be furnished with a certified copy of said contract and bond, upon which he or they shall have a right of action, and shall be, and are hereby, authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States or the District of Columbia, for his or their use and benefit, against said contractor and his sureties, and to prosecute the same to final judgment and execution: Provided, That where suit is instituted by any of such creditors on the bond of the contractor it shall not be commenced until after the complete performance of said contract and final settlement thereof, and shall be commenced within one year after the performance and final settlement of said contract, and not later: And provided further, That where suit is so instituted by a creditor or by creditors, only one action shall be brought, and any creditor may file his claim in such action and be made a party thereto within one year from the completion of the work under said contract, and not later. If the recovery on the bond should be inadequate to pay the amounts found due to all of said creditors, judgment shall be given to each creditor pro rata of the amount of recovery. The surety on said bond may pay into court, for distribution among said claimants and creditors, the full amount of the sureties' liability, to wit, the penalty named in the bond, less any amount which said surety may have had to pay to the United States or the District of Columbia by reason of the execution of said bond, and upon so doing the surety will be relieved from further liability: Provided further, That in all suits instituted under the provisions of this act such personal notice of the pendency of such suits, informing them of their right to intervene as the court may order, shall be given to all known creditors, and in addition thereto notice of publication in some newspaper of general circulation, published in the District of Columbia, for at least three successive weeks, the last publication to be at least three months before the time limited therefor."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is this bill approved by the authorities of the District of Columbia? I ask it because it seems to be a very important bill and not altogether uncomplicated.

Mr. FOCHT. I think it is the opinion of all that it ought to pass. It is simply enlarging and extending the rights of the man who furnishes the material and of the mechanics. In Pennsylvania we have a law which protected the mechanics and whoever supplied the material for six months and to the amount of $500. We enlarged that to a year, and that is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It varies very much in different localities, but I wanted to know whether there had been any objection raised to the bill or any controversy about it.

Mr. FOCHT. Not at all. They want better protection for the men that work who furnished the material.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION AND WIDENING OF NINTH STREET.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from further consideration of the bill S. 2377, and consider it in lieu of the bill H. R. 7454.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from further consideration of the bill S. 2377 in place of the House bill which has been reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2377) to authorize the extension and widening of Ninth Street from Longfellow Street NW. to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue NW.

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized, and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessaray for the extension and widening of Ninth Street NW. from Longfellow Street to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue, in accordance with the plan of the permanent system of the highways for the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages is hereby authorized, payable out of the revenues of the District of Columbia; the amounts collected as benefits to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The House bill was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. MILLSPAUGH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PARKWAY TO CONNECT OLD CIVIL WAR FORTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8792) to make the necessary survey and to prepare a plan of a proposed parkway to connect the old Civil War forts in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

INVESTIGATION OF TRI-COUNTY IRRIGATION PROJECT, NEBRASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 215, providing for reinvestigation of the tri-county irrigation project, Nebraska.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a reinvestigation of the tri-county project in Nebraska, comprising the counties of Gosper, Phelps, and Kearney, in said State, and to extend said investigation into Adams County, Nebr., with a view of ascertaining whether it is practicable to convey for irrigation purposes flood waters from the Platte River onto the lands of said counties

For the purpose of making said investigation and survey there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

In line 4, strike out the words "a reinvestigation" and insert in lieu thereof the words "an additional investigation."

In line 9, after the word "onto," strike out the word "the."

In line 9, after the word "lands," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "in."

Strike out all of lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment proposed by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 4, after the word "advance," insert the word "of."

Mr. HAYDEN. That was a clerical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in view of the amendment in line 5, should it not be amended so as to read "additional investigation"?

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps additional investigation might be something different from reinvestigation, but it is rather a fine distinction.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I notice the committee has stricken out the investigation and written additional investigation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I ask that the title be amended to conform to the text.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the title be amended to conform to the text. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. There are no further bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar which were put on in time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with the consideration of the bills remaining on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the remaining bills on the calendar, although not having been there three days, may be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Reserving the right to object, that means subject to the usual objection in each case?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Director of the Irrigation Service to the chairman of the Committee on Arid Lands in relation to the bill which we have just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., September 15, 1922.

Hon. ADDISON T. SMITH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: In response to your telephone inquiry in regard to House Joint Resolution 354 and the letters of the Secretary of the Interior of June 28 reporting thereon, the following memorandum gives the principal facts relating to our previous investigation of the tri-county project in Nebraska.

From the fourteenth annual report of the Reclamation Service, page 170:

"Claim has been made by the people living along the Platte River in Nebraska that sufficient water was available in that stream during the winter and spring months for the irrigation by direct diversion into canals of a considerable area of land in Gosper, Phelps, and Kearney Counties, Nebr. The Secretary accordingly approved orders for a preliminary survey and investigation to determine the feasibility and approximate cost of the necessary irrigation works, and on February 28, 1914, the comptroller approved an expenditure of $10,000, or such part thereof as may be necessary, for a preliminary investigation. Mr. Charles T. Pease, engineer, was assigned to this work, and was in the field with a survey party during June, July, and August, 1914, making a reconnaissance to ascertain the probable amount of water available, the area of land to which it could be applied, and the approximate cost of construction of a flood-water canal for this purpose. A report was submitted on October 16, 1914, signed by R. F. Walter, supervising engineer, United States Reclamation Service; C. T. Pease, engineer, United States Reclamation Service; G. E. Condra, director, Nebraska Water Supply Survey, who concurred in the conclusions of the report as affecting the tri-county project; and Donald D. Price, State engineer of Nebraska. The conclusions of this report are as follows:

"1. That there is during ordinary years flood water in the Platte River between March 1 and June 30 in excess of the present consumption, amounting to approximately 340,000 acre-feet, and that there is, as a rule, no flood water in the river above present consumption after July 1.

"2. That the outstanding appropriations amount to more than the river discharge, but that only 1,000 second-feet of water are now being used below North Platte.

"3. That in order to secure a reliable water supply it will be necessary for the State of Nebraska to cancel all appropriations from the Platte River east of North Platte in excess of the 1,000 second-feet now used.

"4. That no steps should be taken toward the construction of this project until all excess appropriations have been canceled.

"5. That after all excess appropriations have been canceled about 140,000 acre-feet of water can, under the plans submitted, be delivered to the land embraced in this project between March 1 and June 30 and none after July 1.

"6. That the cost of constructing this project, as outlined in the report, will be between $30 and $35 per acre for 140,000 acres of irrigable land.

"7. That there are no public lands in this project, all being in private ownership."

While, as noted above, the sum of $10,000 was allotted for this work, the actual expenditure was less than $3,400. It is also to be noted that the cost estimate under conclusion 6 above is based upon 1914 prices.

The complete report of October 16, 1914, referred to in the above, is on file in this office and may be consulted at any time.

Yours very truly,

MORRIS BIEN, Acting Director.

RELIEF OF CONTRACTORS FOR POST OFFICES AND OTHER BUILDINGS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7658) to amend the act approved August 25, 1919, entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LONGWORTH). Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire who is the individual who had the mental incompetency or was so otherwise afflicted mentally that he was not able to file his claim within the prescribed time allowed under the act of August 25, 1919?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Dall, who appeared before us, and, in the opinion of the committee, we thought a bill ought to be drawn to cover this case. It is a case in which a man named Dall prior to the war had a contract to construct a work at Baltimore. He also had a switch. They took the switch away from him, and the price of labor going up he was required to pay more than he expected under his contract. He went ahead notwithstanding and completed the contract. But the loss was so great that his mind was affected by reason of it and he went to a sanatorium.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of that statement of fact I withdraw the reservation of the right to object.

Mr. SPROUL. It is the man who had the contract for the building of the Central High School?

Mr. NORTON. This is the only claim that he makes.

Mr. SPROUL. He had a claim against the District for some ten or fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. NORTON. But he did not make any claim before the committee for that.

Mr. SPROUL. That is not covered in this?

Mr. NORTON. No.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, as the bill is drawn it would even cover a case where the claimant's lawyer or agent was mentally disabled.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The fact is that this is a close corporation where the man himself owned the stock. It was a one-man corporation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this man owned the stock?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This was a one-man corporation owning the stock, and he managed the corporation and nobody else had anything to do with it. The language of the bill was framed in this way in order to cover this case. I will say the gentleman from Cleveland [Mr. BURTON] talked to me about this case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would it not be rather difficult to establish the mental disability of a corporation? Does not the gentleman think there should be an amendment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I think an amendment would defeat the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In view of the explanation, that did not appear in the report, I believe the gentleman is correct in saying that the purpose of the bill would be defeated should it be amended, and I have no desire to obstruct the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I may state there is only one claim of this sort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EVANS. Do I understand that there was a claim for a school building?

Mr. SPROUL. No; he did not make a claim for the Central High School. I was on the subcommittee that investigated that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the original act the construction of that building would not have been within the purview of the Treasury Department, to which this bill is limited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved August 25, 1919, entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes," be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to consider and act upon any claim embraced within the provisions of the aforesaid act, approved August 25, 1919, where the failure to file said claim within the period of three months fixed in said act was due to mental disability on the part of the person in charge of such contract and claim, provided such claim be filed within 60 days from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FACILITATION OF WORK OF TRAVELING SALESMEN ABROAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2716) to give effect to certain provisions of conventions with foreign governments for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2716) to give effect to certain provisions of conventions with foreign governments for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Whereas the United States has entered into conventions with the Governments of Uruguay, Guatemala, Salvador, Panama, and Venezuela which were signed on August 27, 1918; December 3, 1918; January 28, 1919; February 8, 1919; and July 3, 1919, respectively, for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen; and

Whereas Articles I and II of each of said conventions read as follows:

"ARTICE I. Manufactures, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

"In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this treaty, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

"ART. II. In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I": Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce, or any person in the Department of Commerce designated by him, is hereby authorized to issue the licenses and certificates of identification which are provided for by the said Articles I and II, respectively, of the said conventions, or which may be provided for by similar articles in any convention or treaty that may hereafter be concluded by the United States with a foreign government, and is further authorized to collect a reasonable fee for each license and certificate of identification issued. The amount of such fee shall be fixed by regulations made by the Secretary of Commerce and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly.

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 1, on the third line of the second whereas, strike out the word "Manufactures" and insert the word "Manufacturers."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there anyone in charge of this legislation?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the representative of the committee think that the whereases should be stricken out and this bill enacted like ordinary legislation?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I believe that in this particular instance I would rather include some portions of the treaties which throw some light on the act itself.

Now, the ordinary method, I am sure, is to strike out the whereases and not have these preambles. But sometimes they are retained. For instance, you will notice in article 2, quoted on page 2, the treaty itself states how the certificate shall be viséed, and how, upon presentation of that viséed certificate to the country to which the commercial traveler is going, a license shall be issued. That itself is not stated in the body of the act, and inasmuch as it is taken in connection with the act itself, it occurred to the committee that it might be very advantageous to quote it. It shows plainly to the administrative officers how it is to be done.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That article, as well as the article which succeeds it, is part of the conventions entered into with the Governments of Uruguay, Guatemala, Salvador, Panama, and Venezuela. Therefore the treaties are already a part of the law of the land.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I know they are a part of the law of the land, and the point the gentleman makes is not objectionable under ordinary circumstances; but it was thought advisable by the committee in this case to keep it in there for the purpose of clarifying the act itself and avoiding the repetition of other matters in that act.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In this particular case, if the preamble is stricken out, the act itself would have to be amended, because instead of citing the necessary facts, the bill has the following language in line 6, "which are provided for by the said Articles I and II, respectively, of the said conventions." It would not do merely to strike that out.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I understand that. I would propose to follow it up with other suggestions. It is just as well to recite the conventions in the bill itself as in the preamble.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, that would not meet the issue, because the gentleman knows that this bill in its scope is intended not only to cover existing conventions but other conventions that will be executed in the future.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But by referring to these articles, and by reference to the conventions, you can certainly indicate the kind of future conventions that are to be executed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman wishes to revamp the whole bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will not press the point, but it is an inartistic way, in my judgment, of presenting a bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I understand that. But under the circumstances, and seeing the emergency that confronts us in the matter, I think it should go through as it is.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I think it is a good practice to print the bill in that way, because you are giving notice to whoever has occasion to examine into the facts.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman take the position that the whereases are a part of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No. I do not think it is necessary to determine whether they are a part of the bill or not, but they are valuable for giving information.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. I think it would be valuable in a lot of legislation, instead of making the citation to a treaty or act, to embody in the act itself what particular thing it was that was referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DAM ACROSS MAHONING RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3733) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Warren, in the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Warren, Ohio, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a dam across the Mahoning River, in the city of Warren, in the county of Trumbull, in the State of Ohio: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been filed with and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the use of such dam to develop water power or generate electricity.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam hereby authorized is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date hereof: Provided, That the consent hereby given shall terminate and be at an end from and after 30 days' notice from the Federal Power Commission, or other authorized agency of the United States, to said company or its successors, that desirable water-power development will be interfered with by the existence of said dam; and any grantee or licensee of the United States proposing to develop a power project at or near said dam shall have authority to remove, submerge, or utilize said dam under such conditions as said commission or other agency may determine, but such conditions shall not include compensation for the removal, submergence, or utilization of said dam if the water level to be maintained in said power project is higher than the level of the crest of said dam.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, W. VA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12473) granting the consent of Congress to the Wynco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Wynco Block Coal Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a suspension or foot bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and at or near Naugatuck, in the county of Mingo, State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE WEST BRANCH OF SUSQUEHANNA RIVER, LYCOMING COUNTY, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12170) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.," approved August 11, 1916.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved August 11, 1916, authorizing the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge hereby authorized be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS GRAND CALUMET RIVER, IND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3793) to authorize the Gary Tube Co. to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the State of Indiana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Gary Tube Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Grand Calumet River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the northeast quarter of section 3, township 36 north, range 8 west of the second principal meridian, in Lake County, in the State of Indiana, said bridge to be built across the Grand Calumet River in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS GRAND CALUMET RIVER, IND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3834) to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the State of Indiana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the States of Indiana and Illinois, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Grand Calumet River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the southwest quarter of section 36, township 37 north, range 8 west of the second principal meridian, in Lake County, in the State of Indiana; said bridge to be built across the Grand Calumet River in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, RAY COUNTY, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3938) granting the consent of Congress to the county courts of Lafayette and Ray Counties, State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county courts of Lafayette and Ray Counties, in the State of Missouri, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Lexington, in the county of Lafayette and State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11971) providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing general and special elections at which Representatives in Congress and Members of the United States Senate are elected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN LANDS IN FLORIDA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3641) to grant and confirm to the State of Florida title in and to sections 16 within the exterior limits of the area patented to the State of Florida April 23, 1903, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the unsurveyed sections 16 within the exterior limits of the area patented to the State of Florida April 23, 1903, under the provisions of the act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat. L., p. 519), embracing the so-called Everglades, not mineral in character and not occupied on May 27, 1922, by bona fide settlers under the homestead law, be, and the same are hereby, reserved, granted, and confirmed to the State of Florida for the benefit of public schools as though the official surveys had been extended over such lands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SEARS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BLACKSTRAP MOLASSES.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read House Concurrent Resolution 68, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 68.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the Clerk is hereby authorized and directed to insert in paragraph 502 of the bill as amended, after the word "gallon" in the last line, the following: "; testing above 52 and not above 56 per cent total sugars not imported to be commercially used for the extraction of sugar, or for human consumption, one-sixth of 1 cent additional for each per cent of total sugars and fractions of a per cent in proportion."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes in explanation of this concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was unanimously reported this morning from the Ways and Means Committee. There is no objection whatever to it that I know of on either side of the House. The purpose is to correct an error that inadvertently crept into the tariff bill with reference to the degree of total sugars in blackstrap, which was admitted at a low rate of duty. Owing to the fact that both the House and the Senate changed the test of molasses from the polariscope test to a test of total sugars, when we came to fix the degree of admission of blackstrap we overlooked the fact that those two tests gave quite different results as applied to molasses, with the result that the degree at which blackstrap might be admitted was inadvertently placed altogether too low, and if the provisions of the bill were carried out it would have the effect to place such a duty on quite a proportion of blackstrap as would probably prevent its importation, something that the conferees did not at all intend. The Senate placed it on the free list. The conferees agreed to a low duty on blackstrap, and the purpose of this resolution is to carry out the purpose of the conferees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. During the consideration of the tariff bill in the House there was a fight made either to lower the duty on blackstrap or else to put it on the free list. Did the Senate rates increase the duty or the rates agreed to in conference over those passed by the House bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On the contrary, the duties agreed upon by the conferees were lower than those in the House bill unless we leave the bill in its present erroneous form, which we did not intend.

Mr. ELLIS. The Senate put it on the free list.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is true, and the conferees agreed upon a low duty, but the paragraph as drawn did not carry out the intention of the conferees.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand this is partly a request for unanimous consent for consideration of the concurrent resolution?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I hope there will be no objection to that. I would like to have a few minutes when the gentleman gets unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, just one word further. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN] wanted me to state that while he would prefer that the rates in the bill would stand as they are, still he thought it was not fair to the conferees that the rates should remain that way, because this was an inadvertence, that it would not be keeping good faith with the conferees if he objected, and that he would not object to the resolution. Accordingly he told me to state to the House that under the circumstances he would make no objection to the correction of the error.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the House that, of course, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MARTIN] naturally agrees to this, although he would like to have the provisions of the bill remain as they are at present, because it would absolutely prohibit the importation of the larger portion of blackstrap molasses that comes in from Cuba.

I simply want to say that this is just the beginning, or rather the second effort of the committee to correct a bad job that has been in process of accumulation for the last 20 months. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], a member of the Ways and Means Committee, was very much opposed to any duty at all, as a matter of fact, on this particular article, but in the House he yielded and had to admit a certain degree of protection for this blackstrap molasses that is used by the people of his State. The bill went over to the Senate and the Senate put blackstrap on the free list. It came back to conference and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and the other conferees undertook to make it less than it was in the House, and compromised on a provision between the Senate and the House rate which had made it absolutely prohibitive. This is not the only strap that is going to be used on that committee and on the Republican Party during the next month or two, or the next two or three years, but there will be other straps that will be applied to them. They will be political straps mostly. The only thing I regret about it, Mr. Speaker, is that we can not change the work of the conferees in some of their commissions rather than omissions. I wish that we could change some of the things that were put into the bill deliberately by the conferees in place of some of the things that were put in by mistake. Nobody wants to keep the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] from correcting the bill as originally intended. So nobody objected to change of coconuts from the dutiable to the free list. No one will object to this. I do want to call the attention of the House to the fact that you gentlemen will be here for the next two or four years. [Applause on the Republican side.] You had better applaud now because all of you are not going to be here for the next year. Quite a number will go out. You have already made the calculations that you will not have 25 majority, and you had better enjoy it while you can. [Laughter.] But those of you who do remain will find that the Committee on Ways and Means will be coming before you with a number of popgun bills undertaking to correct mistakes, as they will term them, that have crept in under the administration of the law. Many of them under the pretense of mistakes will be the correction of things the people have discovered as omissions. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the tariff bill has over a thousand paragraphs and 10,000 items with 2,000 amendments. We have been very fortunate and have done very well to have found only two corrections.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the gentleman expect the Ways and Means Committee to bring in any independent legislation before the adjournment with reference to the dye embargo?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nothing further of this kind.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Nothing further of this kind, but is it contemplated that a resolution will be brought in extending the dye embargo?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am unable to answer the question. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 398, H. R. 11971.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 398, and that it be again submitted to the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11971?

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman from California objected to it a moment ago, but he has left the room.

Mr. CABLE. The gentleman from California stated that he withdrew his objection. Reserving the right to object, how much time will be allowed for debate?

The SPEAKER. That all depends on the House. The gentleman will be recognized for one hour. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, this is a privileged bill, and I think there ought to be some explanation by the gentleman in charge before we give consent for its consideration.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I will make a statement when we come to consider it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But I would like the statement before consent is given to consider it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the House bill (H. R. 11971) recasts the law as it formerly existed with respect to elections, omitting the question of primaries, which the decision of the Supreme Court laid aside. No new question was introduced in the House bill, and there is nothing new in the Senate bill. The Senate amended its bill, and it came over and was referred to our committee, but we were unable to secure a quorum of the committee to pass upon it. It is now the purpose, after conference with the members of the committee on both sides, to strike out the terms of the House bill and substitute the Senate bill therefor. That bill has already passed in the Senate, and if we take what they have sent over and send it back in that form we may secure a revival of the law relating to elections so that it will be effective this year.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the bill is passed as passed by the Senate, does it become effective and retroactive, or what is the effect?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It would apply from the date of its approval.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Suppose A and B are in a race for the Senate. A has already spent $18,000, and B has been here in the Senate and goes back home; is B limited under the terms of this bill to the amount set out in the bill and will A be allowed to go ahead and spend the same amount?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The gentleman is a lawyer, and he will readily see the application to each individual. My answer would be that the law would apply to both, that they could not exceed $10,000 as provided in the bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And the man who had already spent $18,000 could spend $10,000 more, and the man who had spent nothing could spend only $10,000.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It is the presumption that nobody will violate the strict spirit or principle of the law that we have had heretofore. I know that is a violent presumption, but at the same time it is a reasonable presumption.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Indiana deems it necessary to object to the present consideration of this bill. Under leave to extend my remarks, however, I invite attention to the existing situation.

The legislation proposed by this bill has become necessary on account of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Newberry case on May 2, 1921. The Federal corrupt practices act, as embodied in section 8, act of Congress, approved June 25, 1910, as amended by the act of August 19, 1911, was held by that decision to be unconstitutional in relation to primary and convention nominations of the United States Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Thus the most important part of the Federal corrupt practices act was nullified. So far as corrupt practices are concerned, the primaries are much more important than the elections, because in a majority of cases the nominations of Senators and Representatives in Congress are equivalent to an election. In view of this fact, the real contests that may call for the expenditure of larger sums of money will appear in the primaries rather than the elections. Thus it is clear that the United States Supreme Court set aside the most important part of the Federal corrupt practices act.

In order that this objection may be removed by the application of proper safeguards for the primaries, your committee intends to report a constitutional amendment, which, if passed and properly ratified, gives to Congress the authority to deal with primaries as well as elections.

Your committee believes, however, that some new legislation should be enacted as speedily as possible in relation to the election of United States Senators and Representatives in Congress. The pending bill is submitted for that purpose. It does not embody anything that is particularly new or untried. If the bill should be carefully compared with the acts of June 25, 1910, and August 19, 1911, a striking similarity will be observed between this bill and the phraseology of those acts. Instead of trying to cure the difficulty by amending the remnants of those acts, an entirely new bill has been drawn along the lines of those acts that are constitutional with respect to elections.

It is important to note the bearing of the decision of the court upon the corrupt practices acts mentioned above. The following letter of the Attorney General is quoted in explanation of this point:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, November 15, 1921.

Hon. ROBERT LUCE,
Chairman House Elections Committee No. 2, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LUCE: In yours of the 31st ultimo you request my opinion as to whether the decision in the case of United States v. Newberry et al. "should be construed as invalidating the whole of the corrupt practices act or only so much thereof as relates to primaries."

I have not been able to give the question sufficient consideration to fully answer your inquiry, but the following suggestions may be of some assistance to you:

It is my opinion that the Newberry decision should be construed as invalidating all of the provisions of the act referred to relating to nominations for the office of Senator or Representative in Congress, whether by primaries, nominating conventions, or by indorsement at general or special elections. I am also of the opinion that as to statements of receipts and disbursements to be filed by candidates for the office of Representative in Congress under section 8 of the act, the only provision now in force and effect is the one which requires such statements to be filed in connection with election of such candidates.

As United States Senators are not now elected by legislatures of the States as contemplated in the act, it is my opinion that this fact in connection with the holding in the Newberry decision makes it unnecessary for a candidate for United States Senator to file any statement whatever in connection with his nomination or election.

If the foregoing does not fully meet the requirements of the situation with which your committee is confronted, please advise me and I will be glad to give the matter further consideration.

Sincerely yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY, Attorney General.

The hearings on H. R. 8926, H. R. 9720, and H. R. 9809 proposing limitations of campaign expenses and providing for publicity have been taken into account in drafting a report upon the pending bill—H. R. 11971.

It is believed that the sentiment of the country calls for prompt legislation on this subject to the full limit of the authority of Congress.

This bill and the constitutional amendment suggested above will furnish a complete and effective program for the protection of public interests at the polls at both primaries and general elections.

COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2040) to provide for compulsory school attendance of children, to provide for the taking of a school census, to create the department of school attendance and work permits for the administration of this act and the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, within the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I object.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. HILL. This bill has only been reported one day. It deals with compulsory education and child labor in the District of Columbia. These are very important subjects. There are very many Members interested in them who are not present. There has been no new compulsory education law in the District for 15 years. It is impossible to give it the consideration it deserves during the brief time allowed to-day under unanimous consent, and I object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to object, what is the use of consuming time?

Mr. HILL. The chairman of the committee wants to make a statement.

Mr. FOCHT. I was thinking that if the gentleman knew of the importance and necessity of having this law passed at this time that he would withdraw the objection. The bill has passed the Senate and has been considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Doctor Ballou is extremely solicitous about it. We all know of the woeful conditions of the schools of Washington. At any rate they are back of the schools of many States, and I had hoped that the gentleman would withdraw his objection.

Mr. HILL. The committee having charge of such legislation has allowed 15 years to elapse without making a report, and I do not think it ought to be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOCHT. But I have been chairman only for one year.

Mr. HILL. I am not making any reflection on the chairman of the committee nor on the bill, but it should be given the fullest possible consideration, in the best interest of popular education.

Mr. FOCHT. I will say to the gentleman that during the previous years I had been diligently at work in Pennsylvania in procuring free school books and everything that would facilitate and advance the cause of education. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

COMPLETION OF BRIDGE NEAR LEUPP, ARIZ.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2563) to provide for the completion of a bridge across the Little Colorado River near Leupp, Ariz.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order now that this is a private and not a public bill. This bill provides for the payment of a claim of some contractors building a bridge near some Indian reservation, and it is clearly a private bill and not a public bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am not objecting, but I am simply saying that this is a Private Calendar bill, and it is not fair to single out one bridge claim bill to the exclusion of others. I am in favor of it, but I do not think it is right to allow it to be singled out in this manner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was under the impression it was a public bridge bill. The Chair will look and see. What does the gentleman from Arizona say?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have not given the matter thought, but I am sure that other bills of a similar character have been passed on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The SPEAKER. Is it a claim?

Mr. HAYDEN. It would be in the nature of a claim in that the amount provided for in the original bridge contract has been increased.

The SPEAKER. It looks to the Chair as if it was not a public bill and had no right to be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not prepared to argue the matter, because the Speaker's judgment in that respect is undoubtedly better than mine.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it ought to be on the Private Calendar.

NORTH RIVER BRIDGE CO.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 2799.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2799) to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to extend the time for the completion of the said bridge until 15 years from the date of the approval hereof; and said time is hereby extended for said period: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as authorizing the building of said bridge in accordance with the plans heretofore approved by the Secretary of War, under which construction of said bridge was heretofore commenced, but drawings showing the new location and plans of said structure shall again be submitted to the Secretary of War for his consideration and approval before construction shall be again commenced: And provided further, That actual work hereunder and in accordance with such plans so approved shall be commenced within five years after such approval by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin to 20 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, this is a bridge bill. Later I shall ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ACKERMAN] to make a more extended statement about it than I can now make.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. WINSLOW] asked me, inasmuch as he was busy with his coal conference, to make a statement about this matter. These are the facts, as I understand them: This bill calls for the extension of time for the completion of the proposed bridge across North River in New York City for 15 years.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question there?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there any opposition to the bill?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know whether there is or not. I have not heard of any.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is there a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. It has a unanimous report from the committee. There is no objection on the part of the committee. I know of none on the floor of the House. But inasmuch as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has asked for a second, I assume that he has some objection to it. I do not want to take very much time now. I want to give the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ACKERMAN] a chance to explain it fully.

In the year 1890 the act was passed authorizing this bridge. At that time, as I remember the testimony, it was to cross at about Twenty-third Street, New York City, over to the New Jersey side. They began condemnation proceedings under the original act, and those proceedings were in court until 1894. It was hotly litigated as to the rights of this company to condemn the land for its necessary approaches. After 1894 various financial crises came over the country, as the Members of the House will remember, so that it was practically impossible at that time for the company to finance its operations. The matter continued along until 1900, when an act of Congress was passed to extend the time to 1912. In 1912 another act was introduced into the House, which passed the House but failed to pass in the Senate on account of the jam in legislation at that time. So that at this time there is an interval of some few years in which there has been no extension of this act. This bill proposes to extend the time for the completion of this bridge for 15 years from the time of the passage and approval of this act.

Now, gentlemen, let me give you a brief idea of how extensive this work is. It will cost $150,000,000. The location has been moved up the river quite a distance, until now I think it is proposed to cross at about Fifty-seventh Street. The project has the indorsement of the Hudson River Association. If we do this, it will lead to an avenue of traffic across the North River in one of the most congested centers of population in the United States.

It is worthy of particular consideration in view of the fact that it is not an ordinary bridge bill, gentlemen of the House, but a bill respecting a bridge in this great center of population; and on that account our committee had extensive hearings concerning it, and spent quite a lot of time in hearing the testimony about this thing, because we thought it was such an important project that we ought to know the entire facts about it. We had the best testimony we could get on the subject, and we became convinced that the extension ought to be made. It will take that long to build this bridge.

As I say, the project has the indorsement of the Hudson River Association. A list of people who are interested in this association, which has nothing to do with the building of the bridge, contains 200 of the most prominent names in the business world of the city of New York as favoring this project. The other bridges that have been built in New York, such as the Brooklyn Bridge and the Hell Gate Bridge, have taken a long period of time for their construction. I have no doubt that the 15 years provided for in this act are a very meager period of time for the construction of this project.

This bridge will have a span of over 3,000 feet across the North River—the greatest bridge span in this country. I think there is no doubt about that. It is twice the length of the Brooklyn Bridge span.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Did your hearings disclose the fact that there was opposition on the part of those living near or contiguous to the approaches?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. When the act was passed in 1890 the people whose land was to be taken for the approaches—and you will remember the original act gave to this company the right to condemn and take land for the necessary approaches—some of those people objected, and said it was an unconstitutional act; that it gave to this company rights which the Constitution did not warrant. They contested, and the case went to the Supreme Court, and it was decided that the act was an act of constitutional power and that the bridge company had the right of eminent domain. At this time, frankly, I do not know of any opposition on the part of anybody to this project. It seems to have the united consensus of opinion of the people of that locality.

I will say to the gentlemen of the House that, for one, I was myself a little bit shy about this proposition at the beginning, and I think a majority of the committee were. I see several of them here, who can speak for themselves. We were a little bit shy about it on account of the magnitude and the immensity of the project; but we think now it is all right, and ought to be permitted to go through. We think we ought to pass an enabling act at this time, so that they can get started on the project.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do the hearings show whether the municipality of New York or any representative of the municipality are in favor of the building of this railroad bridge?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My memory is that we did not have any of the representatives of the city of New York before our committee. I had a general understanding—I will not state that this is based upon any authentic information, but I have an understanding—that the authorities of the city of New York were conversant with the situation and had no objection. I do not state that is true, but that was the understanding in the committee.

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman that, as a matter of course, this has the approval of the War Department.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. LAYTON. This will be the first bridge across the Hudson River, connecting the mainland with the island of Manhattan?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; that is true. The traffic over this bridge will be simply terrific.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman knows that extensive plans have been adopted, under the authority of the port authorities of New York and New Jersey, to get freight trains carried across the water barriers?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. By tunnels?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes; tunnels and marginal railways, and so forth; a very extensive development. Does this in any way interfere with those plans?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not in the slightest; and all the safeguards that ordinarily surround legislation of this kind are, we think, contained within this legislative act. If the bridge is built it will be of incalculable advantage to the people of the city of New York.

Mr. KINDRED. There is no question about that. May I ask the gentleman if after due notice to the responsible officials of the city of New York they entered no protest against this improvement?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. As I have said before, I can not speak as the chairman of the committee could speak if he were here, but my understanding and the understanding of the committee was that the officials of the city of New York were advised about these hearings.

Mr. ACKERMAN. At the hearing, was it not suggested that they wanted to have this charter granted if possible before certain other arrangements were made by the city of New York, in regard to underground railways, so that this might be in harmony with the general scheme of getting traffic across the river?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey was notified.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ACKERMAN].

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I do not know that I can add anything further to the information that has been given by the gentlemen representing the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

This matter has been under consideration for some time. Everyone who could be brought to the hearing was supposed to be there. Rather elaborate hearings were held, which were printed, and we have heard nothing against the granting of this permission. Mr. Lindenthal is an eminent engineer. He is the designer of this bridge, and he was for many years the consulting engineer of the city of New York. In fact, he had a great deal to do with all the East River bridges. He designed and supervised many of them. As the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois] said, the site originally selected was at Twenty-third Street, but traffic in New York has moved up the river and this site has been changed to Fifty-seventh Street. That on the Jersey side gives a certain level from which they will have to build only a small tower, whereas if they were lower down much higher towers would be necessary in order to suspend the cables.

Some one asked the question, "Did anyone object to the noise being made by the drilling machines originally?" My answer to that is yes; but that was carried through the courts and the right of the company to construct this bridge was sustained. I believe there will be less objection to the construction of the bridge at this site than upon the original site.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will my colleague yield for a short question?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Is it contemplated that any of the larger trunk-line railways entering New York will use this bridge?

Mr. ACKERMAN. It is expected that all of them will.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Some of them have tunnels.

Mr. ACKERMAN. The railroads that have tunnels at the present time are most zealous in advocating this bridge, because they see that traffic is growing so rapidly that the tunnels will not take care of it.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Has the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. a tunnel under the river at present?

Mr. ACKERMAN. No. The Pennsylvania Railroad has a tunnel.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the Baltimore & Ohio use this bridge?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Very likely.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from New Jersey state briefly the plan of this bridge, what it is to be used for?

Mr. ACKERMAN. It is to be used for traffic of all kinds—pedestrian, vehicular, and railway traffic, both passenger and freight. It is to have not less than 6 railway tracks, with provision for 10. This bridge was very completely described in an article in the Scientific American recently, and this article and the drawings were presented to the committee at the time of the hearing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is this a dormant proposition, or is the matter tangible, with the necessary capital in hand to go forward?

Mr. ACKERMAN. They claim they can get the capital whenever they can get the right to go ahead with the proposition, but the proposition is dormant at the present time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did the right to build this bridge expire by limitation or by nonuse?

Mr. ACKERMAN. By nonuse, and they did not revive it until the present time because on account of the war they did not think it a fortuitous time to attempt to raise the capital.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the gentleman give the House any assurance that, if the authority is given this company, they are going to organize and get the money to put this through, or is this simply a bill for the purpose of continuing an easement that they may have there?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I believe from the names of those who are connected with the proposition at the present time and from the testimony that has been placed before the committee in the hearings that this is a bona fide proposition.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. All rights of navigation are reserved, and there is no interference with navigation is there?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Absolutely none. It is all subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FESS. It will cost the Government nothing?

Mr. ACKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. FESS. Then what is the objection to granting the authority to building this bridge when commerce demands it?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I do not know.

Mr. FESS. It will make a thoroughfare where one is very greatly needed?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not a fact that vehicular traffic across the Hudson River is so congested that frequently people have to wait all night to get a ferryboat?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I have heard of their having to wait several hours.

Mr. DARROW. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DARROW. If this bridge is constructed, is it not a fact that it will be higher above the water by 15 feet than the Brooklyn Bridge or any of the other bridges?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I believe it is so stated.

Mr. DARROW. And there will be no piers to interfere with navigation?

Mr. ACKERMAN. There will be no piers. It is a single span across the river.

Mr. DARROW. And a double-deck bridge, so that it will accommodate not only railroad traffic but vehicular traffic and trolley cars and pedestrians?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Traffic of every description.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was placed on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent for the first time two weeks ago. It was then passed over without prejudice.

This bill amends an act passed by Congress in 1890 authorizing certain gentlemen named therein to build a bridge, primarily a railroad bridge, having at least six railroad tracks, with a capacity for four additional tracks. That act of 1890 was amended by the act of February 8, 1901, extending the time for the completion of it to January 1, 1912. In the 32 years which have elapsed since the passage of the original act nothing whatsoever has been done toward the building of this bridge. I thought the bill was of such importance that the people of New York at least should be apprised of the purpose of this measure in trying to revive a dead creature, because this project has been dead from its very inception.

The original purpose of the bill was for a railroad bridge, not a vehicular bridge. I did not think that on the Unanimous Consent Calendar we should revive a project of this magnitude, that might be held over the heads of rival bridge and tunnel companies and force them either to abandon existing projects or to come to terms with this one.

The modern method of transportation between Jersey and Manhattan Island is by tunnel. When the Pennsylvania Railroad built their tunnel, at great expense, they realized that that was the best method to provide railroad communication from the Jersey terminal over to Manhattan proper, and, so far as I know, no objection has been made to that character of construction. Recently, within the past year, a corporation has been formed to provide tunnels for vehicular traffic under the Hudson River, and I believe the capital has been raised and the work started.

Mr. KINDRED. The State of New York and the State of New Jersey equally bear that expense.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the gentleman from New York states, the State of New York and the State of New Jersey equally bear the expense of it as a public project. Now, with no one knowing who the people are who are trying to revive a statute which is so broad in its scope, occupying more than three pages of the Statutes at Large, and extending this privilege for 15 years, are we to pass this bill by unanimous consent? There are some bridge bills that the House passes without objection, but for bridges across the Mississippi River and across the Hudson River we hesitate until some showing is made that there is the necessary capital to put the enterprise through. Now, has that showing been made in this case? Is this anything more than a paper corporation to be used, perhaps, to raise funds, and for what purpose? Is it a railroad bridge? It must be a railroad bridge. The act provides that there must be at least six railroad tracks, with accommodations for four more.

I am not acquainted with what railroad wants it, but before we grant the right to construct a railroad bridge we should know the attitude of the municipal authorities of New York, as to whether they wish to have the railroads come into Manhattan Island overhead or not, or whether it is their desire to have them come in through tunnels. If it is for a vehicular bridge we should hesitate to grant that power, because the States of New York and New Jersey have launched into a proposition for a vehicular tunnel, and by this proposal you are going to divert vehicular traffic from a public project, which, perhaps, the States are counting on to maintain the operation of. Let the proponents of this measure come before us with something substantial and show that there are men of substance back of it and that it is not merely a paper scheme. It is worthy of our taking some time to find out who is back of it and what it is really for.

Mr. DENISON. If it is a mere paper scheme, then there is no danger of any harm from it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not say it is a mere paper scheme, except for the fact that for 32 years it has been on the statute books and during all that time it has been dead. It has been nothing but paper since then, and now you are trying to revive it for 15 years more.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I stated in my remarks that on account of the legal difficulties in connection with the blasting operations the matter had been in court for a number of years. That is why they have not gone ahead, and then the time expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman gives as an alibi for nothing having been done that there were some difficulties of litigation that prevented the construction of the bridge. The report shows that the litigation was decided in favor of the incorporators of this bridge in 1894—28 years ago. What is the alibi with reference to their not having done anything since that time? I yield to any gentleman to state.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman name one individual in New York or New Jersey who is against this bridge? Have you ever heard one?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman was asked for the sponsors of this and whether the municipal bodies were in favor of it, and he could not answer.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to say that the consulting engineer of the city of New York testified favorably. That was my understanding, and I have refreshed my memory, and I find that the consulting engineer of the city of New York testified in favor of this bridge.

Mr. SNELL. And in the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission nobody opposed it.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. I understand there is under development a comprehensive scheme to connect New York and New Jersey under the authority of the governments of New York and New Jersey, and they propose a comprehensive scheme that will mean the expenditure of $5,000,000 or more; they also propose to build a marginal railway and a tunnel. I would say at the present time that there is inadequate communication between New York and New Jersey leading to the south and west. I think it is a very pertinent question that has been suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] as to whether the city authorities that are responsible for the policy and the development of the city of New York have been properly notified and have been given any opportunity to express their views on this important question. I think it is very pertinent, and there will be no particular harm done in delaying the measure in this international question until we have a full expression from the authorities in New York City.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. APPLEBY] to make a statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I had the pleasure of attending the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission on this important project. The engineers from the city of New York told of the change of travel, and being well acquainted in New York I know that the travel has moved up to Fifty-seventh Street, being nearly on the line of King County Bridge connecting New York at Fifty-ninth Street with Long Island.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that Mr. Tuttle is the chief engineer of the city of New York and not Mr. Post who testified in the hearings?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more. May I say a word?

Mr. APPLEBY. I yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman from New York evidently has not read the hearings. We are not talking of Mr. Post, the consulting engineer of the city of New York, who testified in the hearings.

Mr. APPLEBY. Francis L. Stewart was the consulting engineer.

Mr. KINDRED. I am not opposing this, but I want to get the full information in regard to it.

Mr. APPLEBY. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin as to whether this is a mere matter on paper or a substantial lot of stockholders by referring him to the list of incorporators. Among them are Mr. Edward Dean Adams, director of the American Cotton Oil Co. of New Jersey; Mr. William O. Allison, director of the Empire Trust Co.; Mr. John Anderson, director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; Mr. Breed, director of the Irving National Bank; Mr. Dryden, president of the Prudential Insurance Co.; and many of them are persons with whom I have a personal acquaintance. There are at least 100 prominent men, headed by Mr. George A. Post, president of the Hudson River & Bridge Association. These directors mean business. They have to have a franchise before they can sell the stock. The proposition is to build a bridge in connection with the tunnels which are not sufficient to carry the travel between New York and New Jersey. The Pennsylvania tunnel only carries passenger traffic. This proposed bridge will carry railroad as well as automobile traffic. The span of the proposed bridge will be 3,240 feet, which span is twice the length of the span of the Brooklyn Bridge.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. May I suggest that Governor Edwards, of New Jersey, wrote a letter approving of this legislation?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes; that is correct. Manhattan Island, as you all know, contains New York City, the greatest city in the world. New York and New Jersey are separated by the Hudson River, and the facilities of communication are not adequate to take care of the enormous travel across the Hudson River.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. APPLEBY. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. In consultation with several Members of the House this question as it has been presented to the House seems to comprehend but one difficulty, and that is whether or not the authorities of that great city of New York are behind this proposition. Everybody is in favor of the bridge, provided it does not run counter to the tube proposition, which I understand is the official plan for increase in transportation across the Hudson River.

Mr. APPLEBY. The letter from President Rea of the Pennsylvania Railroad states that he is in favor of this bridge, that the facilities in and out of New York are entirely inadequate to handle the travel.

Mr. LAYTON. There is no question about that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ERECTION OF AN OFFICE BUILDING BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF ST. LOUIS.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the objection to Senate Joint Resolution 208 is withdrawn, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 208.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont again asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the House to indulge me for a moment to explain why I objected before.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the practice is questionable where a particular bill has been objected to and later on the objection is withdrawn to bring it up by unanimous consent. I think it should be brought up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass S. J. Res. 208 as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont moves to suspend the rules and pass the Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its head office and branches.

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 3, 1922, provided that no Federal reserve bank should have authority thereafter to enter into any contract or contracts for the erection of any building of any kind or character or to authorize the erection of any building in excess of $250,000 without the consent of Congress having previously been given therefor in express terms, which, however, did not apply to buildings under construction on June 3, 1922; and

Whereas many of the Federal reserve banks were not affected by this provision, since they had already completed or commenced construction of buildings for their head offices and branches; and

Whereas the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis had not on June 3, 1922, actually commenced the construction of a building for its head office but had acquired the ground for such building at St. Louis, Mo., and therefore the act of June 3, 1922, operates inequitably on the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, etc., That the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its head office on lots heretofore acquired for that purpose: Provided, That the total investment in such building shall not exceed an amount equal to 25 per cent of its paid-in capital stock and surplus.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Vermont is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky to 20 minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a moment ago, my only desire was to let the House understand why I objected to the consideration of this bill. The Chair will doubtless recall that some 10 or 12 days ago I raised the question as to which committee had jurisdiction of this bill—the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which it was referred, or the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I did not make a motion to have the bill transferred, because at the time I merely wanted to get some information from the Speaker as to the reasons for his reference, so as to advise some of the membership of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the reasons of the Speaker for making the reference which he did. I am not yet, I am frank to say, entirely satisfied that the reference was correctly made. I have no personal feeling about it whatever. I have never since I have been a Member of this House made a point of no quorum but once—and I have been here 16 years—and I regretted that. I have never but once or twice objected to a consideration of a private bill, and each time I did it I trampled on the toes of some of my best friends, just as I did in objecting to-day.

Mr. DYER. And probably ruined your chances.

Mr. LANGLEY. Maybe so. I feel, if the House will indulge me for a few moments, that there are one or two other matters in connection with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that I should refer to. I happen to know that there are a number of contracts in contemplation with private parties for the construction of office buildings for the accommodation of Government functions, and especially the Post Office Department.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from Kentucky, I take it, is referring to the city of Baltimore.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not recall the magnitude of the Baltimore proposition, but I will say to my friend from Maryland that I think he ought to take "pot luck" with the balance of us and wait for an omnibus public buildings bill, and I, as chairman of that committee, can assure him that his city will be fully taken care of in the bill. As he knows, several of us members of the committee have visited Baltimore and inspected the Federal building there and know the distressing conditions that exist, and I for one promise him now that I will endeavor to see that Baltimore receives liberal consideration in our bill.

Mr. HILL. I think the gentleman from Kentucky is quite correct, and I am willing for Baltimore to take its chances with the balance of the country in the forthcoming omnibus bill, because I know that it is the purpose of his committee to do equal and exact justice to the various sections of the country.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have been confident for quite a long while that we ought to have a general and quite a liberal omnibus public buildings bill. [Applause.] For example, the Post Office Department, under a provision in one of the annual supply bills enacted some years ago, is proceeding to make contracts with private parties to construct colossal buildings in large cities, which action I know it was not the intent of Congress to have taken under the provision referred to. I expect at an early date to obtain and insert a list of these with the amounts involved. In one instance it is proposed in this way to have constructed by private parties a colossal building costing, I think, about $10,000,000, and it is proposed to insert in that contract a provision that the Government shall pay the owners of the building 10 per cent a month on their investment, which, if my mathematics are correct, would reimburse these private constructors in 10 years for their entire investment, at the end of which period the building would revert to these private owners and the Government left without a building, and, of course, in a worse plight than it is now.

Mr. Speaker, if this scheme is permitted to go on it will result in the sacrifice of millions and millions of Government money. I am not criticizing my personal friend, Doctor Work, whom I very much admire and who is making a great Postmaster General. I do not know whether he has personal supervision of this business or not. I do not think he has. But, gentlemen of the House, whoever is doing it is not only perverting, in my judgment, the will of Congress but is deliberately seeking to side-step the jurisdiction of this committee, and I for one do not propose to stand for it. [Applause.] Moreover, it would result in the Senators and Representatives from these cities being ignored, which is not right. They know what their constituents want and need and that is what the people send them here to look after. All of this effort to evade the enactment of an omnibus public buildings bill in the manner in which I have indicated only emphasizes the view I have held, as you gentlemen know, for several years, that what the Government ought to do is to enact a liberal omnibus public buildings bill [applause], so that as soon as possible the Government may transact its business, as it should do, in Government-owned buildings. What I am saying now with regard to other sections is applicable also to the District of Columbia.

I happen to be a member of the Public Buildings Commission having jurisdiction of the disposition of space in Federal buildings in Washington and the rental of buildings for the housing of Government functions, and I have for a long while contended that we ought to get the Government business out of the hands of these real estate speculators, whether in Washington or elsewhere, and house Government functions as far as practicable in Government-owned buildings. In the end it will save us millions upon millions of dollars. Instead of being a pork-barrel bill, as some are pleased to term it, it will in reality be an economical measure that will save the Government in the end from a good deal of graft and unnecessary expense. [Applause.] The remedy for it all is to enact an omnibus public buildings bill. [Applause.] I think it should have been enacted long ago, but we have waited now for nearly 10 years since such a bill was enacted, and conditions have changed most radically in various sections of the country. Mr. Speaker, I am not authorized by my committee to make this statement, but so far as I am personally concerned I desire to make the announcement that it is the purpose of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to do his utmost to bring into this House for its consideration at the short session next winter a liberal public buildings bill [applause], and it will not be a bill for the big cities entirely, but will take care of the various worthy propositions throughout the country. The bulk of the money has always and of necessity been spent in the large cities, but I believe in taking care of the smaller places as well as the larger ones. In other words, I think that what is sauce for the city goose ought to be sauce also for the rural gander. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my objection to the pending bill.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is satisfied from a careful investigation of this bill and report that this building ought to be erected?

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, no; I will not say that. I have not investigated it very much, because I have not had the chance. It was referred to the wrong committee, I think; but I will say frankly to the gentleman and to the House that I have usually found the things advocated by the gentleman from St. Louis to be meritorious. [Laughter and applause.] I do not know much about this particular bill. I am not going to vote for it, however, but the gentleman will evidently have plenty of votes without mine. I am not opposing it. The main point with me is this question of jurisdiction.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am very much interested in the contention of the gentleman that this bill should have gone to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I would like to know the theory of the gentleman on which the gentleman contends that that should have been the case.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think we ought to take up the time of the House on that.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman think this money out of which these buildings are constructed belongs to the United States Government or to the banks?

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, the people look upon it as Government money, if it belongs to a national bank, which is a Government institution. If we are going to spend money for a building in one place, Federal reserve bank or what not, I think we ought to do it all over the country. I am not in favor of giving that money to two or three cities in the country to the exclusion of others.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The more bank buildings they build, the more they contract the currency.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am not a financial highbrow, but a plain, ordinary countryman. I do not know whether the building of some bank building would result in the contraction of the currency or not; but I do know that the more money that is expended in the construction of these public buildings the more employment there is for labor and the more benefit the money now in the banks and in the Treasury will be to the people who need employment. I have been contending for quite a while that the sooner these public works are started the more demand there will be for labor that is now unemployed, and that would also help the situation. It is my hope that the committee when it reports the omnibus bill will include in it a provision for an addition to the force of supervising architects or some other provision that will expedite the construction of these public buildings so that we will not have to wait four or five years for the drawing of the plans and four or five years more for the construction of the buildings. Let us cut out a lot of red tape, standardize these buildings, and put them up at least within the lifetime of the men who participate in securing the appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. LANGLEY. I hope the gentleman will not do that. I want, according to promise, to yield two minutes, first, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was up the last time on the Unanimous Consent Calendar I introduced a motion to delay its consideration until I could find out something about it. I can not find myself in harmony with this idea of spending large amounts of money to build extravagant buildings for the Federal reserve banks of the country. I do not believe it is a good scheme, and I believe it ought not to have been countenanced in the first instance. To undertake to spend $26,000,000 in New York City, and now four millions and a half in the city of St. Louis, or in any other city, is certainly an outrageous use of the people's money. I would not object to consideration of this bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, because I would not want to put my judgment against the judgment of the committee; but the Federal reserve banks were not created to go into a stupendous office-building program. They were not made for a bank system; they were made to be a stabilizing institution. Their management have a mistaken idea that they are the banking system of the country and that they have a right to erect extravagant buildings. It is the people's money that they are spending. It does not belong to them and for that reason I can not vote for this bill or any similar bill. I simply wanted two minutes in which to say so. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman, speaking of this case—of course, I am not speaking with respect to other places—but so far as St. Louis is concerned, this bill is for the purpose of taking care of the Federal reserve bank entirely, and not for the purpose of erecting an office building of itself.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Frankly, I do not believe it should require $4,500,000 to do it.

Mr. DYER. It will not cost $4,500,000. It will be nearer $3,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I do not believe it ought to cost even that amount. I think in these times somebody ought to be saving a little money instead of spending it. But that will get us nowhere. I think the House will pass the bill anyway.

Mr. BUTLER. How is the money procured?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. From the little banks, and indirectly from the people—from you and me. That is where it comes from.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Where would the money go, what would the profits of the Federal reserve banks go to, if they did not use them in building?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It would go to the member banks, the stockholders.

Mr. TINCHER. Does not the law require that they must retire Government bonds with it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes. It is just as much the people's money as any other Government money.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. As to these bank buildings, while, of course, I believe there has been some extravagance, they are buildings that are constructed out of the capital stock and the assets?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. All over 6 per cent goes to the Government for the franchise?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DYER. At this time at St. Louis they are paying out a great deal of money for rent, and they would save money if they had a building in which to transact the Government's business.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, there has been a desire manifested on the part of many Members to learn where this money comes from with which the buildings are constructed. Under the Federal reserve act, after 6 per cent is paid on the stock held by the member banks, then the net earnings of the Federal reserve banks go to a surplus, until the surplus reaches 100 per cent of the paid-in capital stock, and when it reaches 100 per cent of that, 90 per cent of all the net earnings of these banks go to the Government as a franchise tax.

Now, the fact is that every one of these 11 Federal reserve banks, head banks, with one exception—all the others now have their 100 per cent—and they will all this year have their 100 per cent, and they paid in as franchise tax to the Government last year over $60,000,000. The Federal reserve bank at St. Louis itself paid in a million and a half dollars in franchise tax last year, and this year St. Louis will pay in enough more as franchise tax to build this building.

Now, the delay in the construction of this building is not any economy to the Government. It is not any saving to the Government. It simply delays the time when the Government will get this 90 per cent from the St. Louis bank in larger amounts, because the lack of this building puts the St. Louis bank to the expense of paying these rents, at present having no building of their own, but being scattered around in different places throughout the city, and having to pay for extra help to care for their deposits and capital. In fact the risk is something that no reputable institution should take.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the investment in this case be carried as a part of the capital assets of the bank? Does it come out of the earnings, or what?

Mr. DYER. Out of capital and surplus.

Mr. DALE. It comes out of the capital and surplus after the paid-in capital stock has a surplus of 100 per cent back of it. Then they carry this bank building, and they can not charge off for depreciation except to the extent of 2 per cent, so that the fact that they have this building does not give them any advantage in the way of taking from the surplus amounts which they would naturally give to the Government under the 90 per cent.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. It does not curtail the amount of money available for the other banks of the country or for commercial purposes?

Mr. DALE. No.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I notice the limit of cost of the building proposed by this bill is 25 per cent of the paid-in capital and surplus. Can the gentleman tell me what is the limit of cost of construction for buildings owned by national banks?

Mr. DALE. Member banks?

Mr. BURTNESS. No; any ordinary bank organized under the general law.

Mr. DALE. Under the present Federal reserve system they are all member banks, and there is no limit excepting under the legislation passed by Congress last June.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. DALE. The limit was placed at $250,000 unless consent was gained from Congress to increase that limit.

Mr. BURTNESS. If I understand the gentleman correctly, then, there is no limit to the cost of a building that may be erected by an ordinary bank, by legislation?

Mr. DALE. By legislation of Congress?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. DALE. Oh, no; there is no limit if Congress wants to give them the permission.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman does not mean that there is not a limit on the cost of a national bank building. They can invest only a certain percentage of their capital and surplus.

Mr. DALE. There used to be a limit under the old national banking act.

Mr. TINCHER. That still applies to the national banks, and the State banks are limited by State laws.

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is not that limit 15 per cent of the capital and surplus?

Mr. DALE. I can not tell the gentleman about that. Probably the gentleman is correct.

Mr. BURTNESS. At any rate that is the very usual limit that is created by legislation applicable to State banks, and, to my mind, it seems unreasonable for a Federal reserve bank such as this to be allowed to spend so large a part of its capital and surplus by putting it into the construction of a bank building, so much more than is allowed any other banking institution.

Mr. DALE. These head offices have in their keeping the whole Federal reserve district, and they have a tremendous amount of currency, bonds, notes, and other collateral to take care of.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does not the gentleman believe that if the limit was placed at 15 per cent of the total paid-in capital and surplus they could construct a building that would be ample for the purposes of such an institution?

Mr. DALE. I think that might have been so if we had started out in that way, but the others are all built. This is the only one that is not.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, it is good business policy for the system to have its own building, but when you put 25 per cent of the entire capital and surplus into this building, I think that is going the limit, and going beyond what is a reasonable business policy.

Mr. DALE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois was entirely right in his criticism of the expenditure of large amounts of money in the erection of these buildings. I sympathize with him entirely in his statement concerning the New York building, where, I understand, over $25,000,000 was invested in the bank building. But I understood from some questions this morning that all of the cities entitled to these banks have spent a considerable amount of money in the erection of buildings, and that this is the last one left, and that while perhaps this amount is large, it is not as large as several cities of no larger population than St. Louis have invested in this way. Under the circumstances I think it would be only fair to grant this leave to this particular bank.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a brief statement?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. In reference to the New York building, it has been stated by several gentlemen in this debate that the expenditure on that building was $25,000,000 or $26,000,000. The figures, as I now recall them, are only about $19,000,000, and with the permission of the House I will insert the correct amount. I think the amount was extravagant and much more than ought to have been expended, but I am sure that in the discussion of an item of this kind we are all anxious to have the correct figures. With the permission of the House I will insert at this point the figures relating to the building of the Federal Reserve Bank Building in the city of New York, and also the annex building. These figures are taken from the last annual report of the Federal Reserve Board, pages 52 and 53. They are:

NEW YORK.

June, 1918: Purchased property for banking-house site at corner of Liberty, Nassau, and Maiden Lane.

February, June, 1919: Purchased adjoining properties running through from Liberty Street to Maiden Lane. Total cost of property purchased in 1918 and 1919, which covers 45,950 square feet, was $4,797,881.72.

Total cost to December 31, 1921, of new building in course of construction, $1,703,074; estimated cost upon completion, including cost of land, $19,976,368. Building will not be completed for about two years, and there is no basis at present on which to estimate the cost of furniture and fixtures.

April, July, 1920: Purchased, for annex-building site, properties at corner of Gold Street and Maiden Lane and at 10 Gold Street and at 89 Maiden Lane at a total cost of $681,531.17; total cost, including land, $2,136,447; cost of furniture and fixtures, $66,730.78. The annex building is commercial in type and was constructed with a view to its sale if not needed upon completion of the main building.

Mr. DALE. The gentleman is correct about that, and I should like to state in that connection that the New York bank paid in franchise tax alone to the Government last year an amount almost equal to every dollar that was paid for this building. Now, I am not arguing in defense of these big buildings, but I think the discussion in this House and in one other place over the New York building has got to be a kind of bugaboo, and it is like going after Bolshevism when you can not go after anything else—to hit the New York bank building.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman think we ought to permit ourselves to compliment the Federal reserve system for the money that they made within the last year or two?

Mr. DALE. That they put into these buildings?

Mr. TINCHER. No; that they made; that they took away from the American people and from other banks and from borrowers in the manner that they did.

Mr. DALE. The gentleman is getting off onto another matter.

Mr. TINCHER. I know, but I do not want to be a party to letting go unchallenged any compliment to the Federal reserve system for the money they made out of the people immediately following the World War.

Mr. DALE. I will make the prophesy that in, say, 10 years from now every one of these buildings now considered so beyond the necessity of the present time will either be found to be inadequate or not in excess of what these banks will need.

Mr. TINCHER. I make this suggestion, that within 10 years from now everyone connected with the Federal reserve system will be trying to forget that they ever indulged in such practices as they have in the last two or three years in the way of charging other banks interest for the purpose of producing deflation in the agricultural sections of this country.

Mr. DALE. I would not like to have the gentleman think that I contradicted that statement.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that in my statement awhile ago, when I mentioned $26,000,000 as the cost of this New York bank building, perhaps I did not do what I usually do, and that is verify the figures before I stated them; but I have heard that amount stated on the floor here many times in debate. I never heard it contradicted before, and I assumed that that was the correct figure—$25,000,000 or $26,000,000. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] now says that it is $19,000,000. I am willing to take his word for it.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes or the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am surprised at the opposition to this bill. All of the 12 Federal reserve districts except St. Louis have their buildings. Down in St. Louis they have offices scattered through various buildings and the department has reported that they have no assurance that they can renew the leases on reasonable terms, and it expires in less than 16 months. Unless they can make some other provision they are up against it. These other cities have built expensive buildings and now the city of St. Louis is being penalized because the Federal Reserve Board in that district tried to economize and save the Government money by delaying the building until the cost of construction came down. After all the other buildings had been contracted for, many of them at an exorbitant price, this Congress on June 3 last passed a bill with a provision that no building should cost more than $250,000.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman the figures showing what the other buildings have cost? This is the only remaining city where they have not a building.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Yes; the building in New York cost more than $23,000,000; the building at Kansas City cost $5,000,000; the building at San Francisco cost $5,000,000; the building at Cleveland cost $7,000,000; the building at Boston cost $5,000,000; and the building at Chicago cost $10,000,000. The Federal Reserve Board at St. Louis has bought a lot as cheaply as you could get it in that business section, and it cost $1,300,000. To construct a $250,000 building on that lot would be ridiculous. Furthermore, it would be penalizing St. Louis for the good business economy of the board and would be a gross injustice to St. Louis when compared with what has been done in other cities.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman the figures of the cost at Atlanta?

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. I think $2,000,000. Now, they have to have this building or run the risk either of paying exorbitant rents or being evicted. They now have the second floor and part of the sixth floor of one building. They have five floors in another building. They have a vault four blocks away. This bill will enable them to put their offices and vault all in one building, will aid in the economy and efficiency of the operation of the business, and will save the Government the enormous rents they are now paying.

The SPEAKER. The time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS of Arkansas) there were 84 ayes and 9 noes.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 174, nays 50, answered "present" 3, not voting 200, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a brief history of the North River Bridge.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HISTORY OF NORTH RIVER BRIDGE CO.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, the act incorporating the North River Bridge Co. was approved July 11, 1890. The company was fully organized September 19, 1890.

Plans for the bridge were approved by the Secretary of War on December 29, 1891.

The date for the commencement of construction was extended by the Secretary of War on June 2, 1893, for one year, and because of delay growing out of condemnation proceedings for property on the New Jersey side another extension was granted for one year on May 15, 1894.

In the meantime litigation arose with contending landowners which was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and decided in favor of the company by the Supreme Court of the United States on May 14, 1894. (Case No. 1040, October term, 1893, and reported as Luxton v. North River Bridge Co., 153 U. S. 525.)

Construction work was commenced on the New Jersey anchorage for the suspension bridge, but was interrupted by an injunction obtained by the property owners of the neighborhood in the New Jersey courts, complaining about the disturbing noises from boring machines and blasting. After hearings the injunction was dissolved by the court. In the meantime the severe money panic in 1893 had caused all but two railroads in New Jersey to go into receivers' hands and traffic agreements from these railroads for the use of the bridge could therefore not be obtained, such traffic agreements being necessary for financing the undertaking. Before the railroads recovered from insolvency almost 10 years had elapsed since the bridge had been authorized.

Again an attempt was made to continue work and to come to an agreement with the railroads, without which the undertaking could not be financed. The time of completion was extended by act of Congress approved February 8, 1901, to January 1, 1912. It was, however, found impossible to get the railroads into an agreement with the bridge company because, in the meantime, the Pennsylvania Railroad, having the largest traffic, had decided to build tunnels under the North River for its own traffic, independently of the other railroads, instead of using the bridge. This fact and the next financial panic, which occurred in October, 1907, made the financing of the undertaking again impossible. As soon as the business and financial conditions of the country had improved another attempt was made to build the bridge, and to that end application was made in Congress in 1912 for an extension of time for completion, also for authority to relocate the bridge, because in the meantime the commercial trade centers of New York had moved farther north and expensive wharves and pier facilities had been erected on the location already approved by the Secretary of War. Compensation for these costly improvements would have been prohibitively high, and a location farther north below Fifty-ninth Street was therefore taken under consideration and found very suitable from an engineering point of view.

The bill for authorizing the structure was introduced in the Senate on February 29, 1912. It passed in the Senate, but was not reached on the House Calendar before adjournment of Congress.

When the next move for the building of the bridge was being planned the war in Europe broke out, and foreseeing that it would produce financial disturbances also in the United States no attempt was made to obtain congressional action. In the meantime the demand for a bridge has become more urgent than ever. The traffic had increased to such an extent that new plans had to be studied for a bridge much larger and four times heavier than the one already approved by the Secretary of War in 1891.

The bad financial conditions of the country are now rapidly improving, so that the capital for the building of the bridge can now be obtained. In preparation for it the new plans have been prepared and thoroughly studied. The great need and urgency of this great work are well known to the whole country. The project is in a true sense a national undertaking, supported by public-spirited men.

The period desired for extending time of completion is 15 years. This margin of time is needed not only to give assurance to the capital to be invested in this undertaking that it will not be in jeopardy by any interruption from economic or political vicissitudes, but as the bridge will be of unprecedented size it requires special plant at the steelworks and shops which must first be built for its fabrication. It will require over 450,000 tons of steel. This is more than double the amount of steel in all the five big East River bridges combined. There will be 16 deep foundations of 80 feet diameter from 120 to 160 feet below water to rock, which alone require several years for sinking. Most of the large bridges of the world required 10 to 17 years for construction, although their size is many times smaller than the Hudson River Bridge will be. Many new problems of construction must be met. Untoward circumstances likely to happen on any unprecedented work may cause delays. Unpreventable litigation may consume time. Making allowance for all these, an extension of 15 years is deemed necessary as a safe and reasonable margin for completing the work.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the many questions asked to-day during the debate on the subject of the North River Bridge bill, I am of the opinion that in the years to come it will be of value to have had incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a full and complete statement giving the reasons for the establishment thereof of the structure and the great usefulness to the public upon its completion, as well as the timeliness and importance of its consideration. Therefore I have liberally drawn upon the facts so generously furnished me, in order that a complete picture of this gigantic project, which will be one of the world's wonders, may be easily visualized by anyone who might desire full information on this subject, which can not fail to be of widespread interest. The story runs as follows:

The act incorporating the North River Bridge Co. was approved July 11, 1890. The company was fully organized September 19, 1890.

The new plans have been prepared and thoroughly studied. The great need and urgency of this great work are well known to the whole country. The project is in a true sense a national undertaking, supported by public-spirited men.

The period desired for extending time of completion is 15 years. This margin of time is needed not only to give assurance to the capital to be invested in this undertaking that it will not be in jeopardy by any interruption from economic or other vicissitudes, but as the bridge will be of unprecedented size it requires a special plant at the steelworks and shops which must first be built for its fabrication. It will require over 450,000 tons of steel. This is more than double the amount of steel in all the five big East River bridges combined. There will be 16 deep foundations of 80 feet diameter from 120 to 200 feet below water to rock, which alone require several years for sinking. Most of the large bridges of the world required 10 to 17 years for construction, although their size was but a fraction of what the Hudson River Bridge will be. Many new problems of construction must be met. Untoward circumstances likely to happen on any unprecedented work may cause delays. Making allowance for all these, an extension of 15 years is deemed necessary as a safe and reasonable margin for completing the work.

REASONS FOR CHANGING LOCATION.

When the bridge was first planned, 30 years ago, the intention was to build it from Hoboken to Twenty-third Street, New York. That location was approved by the Secretary of War December 31, 1891. It was the most advantageous and central location at that time. But it is so no longer. The present location is intended from the heights of Weehawken to the vicinity of Fifty-seventh Street, Manhattan, because the center of cross-river traffic has in the meantime shifted north.

At this point the banks are high and rocky, providing solid anchorages without undue expense and making it possible to build the bridge with short approaches and easy grades. The width of the river channel is about the same as on the former location.

Considered geographically, this spot is almost in the center of the so-called metropolitan district and near the middle of Manhattan Island. It is also in a direct line with the Queensborough Bridge over the East River, thus forming a continuous highway from New Jersey across Manhattan to Long Island.

The reasons why the bridge could not be built sooner are given in the history of this undertaking, which was presented in committee. They were beyond the control of the company. This colossal work could not have been undertaken under the adverse circumstances encountered. The two States of New York and New Jersey have attempted, through commissions, to provide for a bridge for highway traffic only, and have given it up as too costly.

DESIGN.

A bridge across the Hudson must be built with a single span of over 3,000 feet over the river channel. There are two reasons for this, either one sufficient. First, the rocky bottom of the river bed, which is a preglacial canyon, is from 300 to 400 feet below water level. Above this rocky base is a deep mass of blue loam mixed with gravel and mud quite thin and fluid at the top. A pier in the middle of the river would have to rest upon the rock below this mass of mud, and the cost of laying the foundation at such unprecedented great depth and under such conditions would be prohibitive. A single span of 3,000 feet is in this particular case cheaper than a bridge with a pier in the river, which by itself would cost many million dollars.

The other reason why a single span is necessary is that the War Department, which has jurisdiction over all navigable waterways, will not allow any structure that would obstruct navigation between the established pierhead lines. The height from water level at the center of the span will be 150 feet, which is 15 feet higher than under the Brooklyn Bridge or the recently authorized Delaware River bridge at Philadelphia; it is high enough to allow clear passage to all vessels ordinarily passing up and down the river. Ships with exceptionally high masts are few and usually provided with collapsible tops. If the North or Hudson River could be bridged with no more difficulties than the East River, then it would have been bridged long ago with several bridges, just as the East River is. But the first bridge over the North River is yet to be built, and with its connections and terminals will be the most stupendous engineering work yet undertaken, surpassing in that respect and also in final cost the Panama Canal.

THE TOWERS.

The towers will consist of steel skeletons inclosed by masonry for protection against corrosion and for better appearance. The steel skeletons will be 685 feet high, and at their tops carry the weight of the suspended structure.

Although steel towers are stronger and safer than stone masonry, they are not so satisfactory from an æsthetic viewpoint. The shell of masonry surrounding the steel towers will cost less than the capitalized cost of painting the metal, and will protect it against corrosion from the weather and against harmful temperature effects.

Each tower at the base will have an area of 200 by 400 feet, and will rest upon 8 caissons, each 80 feet in diameter, sunk to deep rock bottom by open dredging.

CABLES AND FLOORWAY.

There will be four cables. Two on each side and above each other forming braced and rigid reversed arches. Each cable will be in a shell of light bronze 12 feet in exterior diameter.

The floorway of the bridge is suspended from the cables and consists of two decks. The upper deck carries the promenades, four surface tracks, and the very wide roadway, two and one-half times the width of Fifth Avenue, New York City, between curbstones. It will form a solid fireproof and water-tight roof over the lower deck, which carries 12 railroad tracks, each track strong enough for the heaviest locomotives and trains, besides having place for conduits, telegraph, and telephone lines.

The cross girders which carry the two decks consist of huge single-plate girders suspended every 60 feet from the cables. These plate girders have large openings to allow the trains on the lower deck to pass through.

The greatest weight that the towers and cables will have to support is the dead weight of 400,000 tons of the suspended spans. Compared with this the live loads will be inconsiderable.

CAPACITY OF BRIDGE.

It is necessary to provide for a transportation capacity and trackage about equal to that of all four highway bridges over the East River combined. These four bridges have now 16 lines for vehicle traffic and 22 lines of rail traffic. If passed through tunnels, that traffic alone would require 30 tunnels under the river in addition to the 16 rapid transit and railroad tunnels in existence under the East River.

The bridge will ordinarily never be called upon to carry at any one time more than one-fourth of the density and maximum loads for which it is designed; nevertheless it must be strong enough for an emergency, and the plans fully so provide.

The passenger traffic available over the North River Bridge in 1900 was estimated at 40,000,000 per year; for the year 1940 the estimate is 200,000,000, not including 100,000,000 passengers who are using the existing six tunnels under the North River.

The vehicle traffic in 1900 was comparatively small, but with the modern automobile and motor truck this traffic is estimated at 25,000,000 vehicles over the bridge in 1940.

The trackage over the bridge is so arranged that at hours of maximum traffic all 12 tracks can be given over, if necessary, entirely to passenger traffic, while freight transportation can be accommodated over half the tracks during hours of light passenger traffic.

Similarly, traffic on the wide roadway of the proposed bridge can be so regulated that passenger traffic and freight-truck traffic can each be accommodated to the fullest possible extent.

The grades over the bridge will not exceed those over the East River bridges, and they are less steep than they would be through tunnels under the river at this location.

THE ECONOMY OF COMBINING DIFFERENT CLASSES OF TRANSPORTATION.

A bridge over the Hudson at New York City designed only for highway traffic or only for railroad traffic would be economically wasteful, because the right of way is very costly, and a double-deck bridge can accommodate both highway and railroad traffic for both passengers and freight, with a great saving in cost of construction.

To attain greatest efficiency and usefulness, both must be provided for on the same structure in this case. Right of way must be purchased, whether for tunnels or bridges. A series of separate crossings, each accommodating only one kind of traffic, is therefore very much more costly than a large bridge structure of equivalent value. This is the crux of the problem. But a bridge must be built as a whole; it can not be built, like tunnels, gradually, one track at a time. If the necessity for multiple tracks and for multiple lines of highway exist, as it certainly does here exist, then it can be shown that the bridge costs only half as much as an equivalent number of tunnels. It can also be maintained more cheaply, since no ventilation and lighting are necessary in daytime.

QUALITY OF MATERIALS AND MAINTENANCE.

The Hudson River Bridge will contain thirty times as much steel as the great Brooklyn Bridge and it will require ten times the tonnage of steel of the great cantilever Forth Bridge in Scotland, which is the largest steel bridge in the world. The amount of masonry will be in like proportion. In such a colossal structure, of course, only the highest quality of materials must be used.

The steel in the towers will be of a grade 50 per cent stronger than the steel used in standard structural work. The special high-grade steel of the eyebar chains will be 100 per cent stronger than standard steel. This greater strength is obtained by a special heat treatment, increasing not only strength but also durability.

Just as true economy requires the use of the best materials in construction, so it requires lowest cost of maintenance after the bridge is completed. Corrosion is the greatest enemy of steel in our climate. Nature is constantly at work changing steel to its primary condition of iron ore. Therefore weather-proof bronze sheathing will protect the cables. The great shells of masonry will likewise protect the steel towers. This will save large sums for upkeep. For the painting of the famous Firth of Forth Bridge, already mentioned as the largest steel bridge in existence, there is required, for instance, a perpetual force of 30 painters year in and year out. After reaching one end of the bridge in three to four years, they return to the other end for the next coat, and so on forever, to save the structure from corrosion. In the Hudson River Bridge that force of men would have to be 10 times larger. The expense of maintenance would be enormous. But with the steel protected there will remain about 8 per cent exposed to the weather. That will reduce the expense of painting and maintenance to a minimum.

TIME OF COMPLETION.

The present design provides for a structure four times stronger and heavier than the Hudson bridge approved by the Secretary of War in 1891.

The time of completion was at that time estimated at 10 years. It is evident that for the new structure, which will require at least four times the amount of steel and masonry, the legal time limit for completion should be at least 15 years to guard against forfeiture and confiscation.

It will be instructive to point out in this connection the time consumed in the construction of several of the world's largest bridges.

The oldest large iron bridge is the Britannia Bridge in England. It was building nine years, from 1841 to 1850.

The Brooklyn Bridge required 14 years, from 1869 to 1883.

The Eads Arch Bridge, at St. Louis, in its day the largest railroad and wagon bridge, required seven years, 1867 to 1874.

The Firth of Forth Bridge, which is still the largest steel bridge in existence, required 12 years, 1878 to 1890.

The Quebec Bridge in Canada, the longest span in North America, required 17 years, 1900 to 1917.

The Hell Gate Arch Bridge, the largest arch bridge in the world, designed for the heaviest railroad loads for future use, and which was under the same engineering management as the North River Bridge, required only four years—1913 to 1917—for construction, but the legal and technical preparations for it extended from 1894 to 1913, altogether 23 years. It was the thorough preparation which permitted the swift execution in four years.

The Hudson River Bridge will contain 450,000 tons of steel, which is twice as much as in all five East River bridges combined, and far exceeds the tonnage of steel in all the existing bridges over the Missouri, Ohio, and Mississippi Rivers combined. To be on the safe side for all vicissitudes of execution the time limit for completion should therefore reasonably not be less than 15 years, which is still less time than was required for the great Quebec cantilever bridge, built by the Canadian Government.

The Hudson River Bridge will contain more than ten times the tonnage and masonry of the Quebec Bridge. Special fabrication shops were necessary for that bridge and will be necessary for the much greater Hudson bridge. The possible delays from severe winter weather, when the men can not work in mid-air, the many vicissitudes possible from delays in fabrication and erection, of the unparalleled tonnage, are such as to make 15 years the shortest safe limit for construction.

The extraordinary nature of this structure is such that every encouragement should be offered to the North River Bridge Co. for its construction, the more so as the United States Government is not asked to furnish any money or credit for it.

BENEFITS OF THE BRIDGE.

Automobiles and motor trucks will be able to cross from New York to New Jersey in a few minutes instead of being delayed, as at present, for hours.

A saving in the cost of delivery and a certainty of supply of food, fuel, and other necessaries to the metropolis.

Development of home building and its accompaniments in New Jersey and northward along the west bank of the Hudson and a compensatory benefit to the great city.

Reduction of shipping costs to and from the port of New York and consequent benefit to the Nation's commerce.

Through railroad connections north, south, east, and west, consequent speed and comfort of travel, and elimination of unnecessary charges.

Orderly expansion of population, industry, and commerce, and reduction of traffic congestion in Manhattan and on both banks of the Hudson.

An important element of safety and efficiency in the event of war.

As the structure will reach into two States, the company will necessarily cooperate with the local authorities on both sides of the river in the carrying out of its plans.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the 3 per cent immigration law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE 3 PER CENT RESTRICTIVE IMMIGRATION LAW A SUCCESS.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, a law of Congress should be judged by its benefits. If no good results ensue it should be promptly repealed. What, then, of the 3 per cent restrictive immigration law of May 19, 1921? It has been in actual operation for the entire fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

That a supplemental immigration law was needed at the beginning of the special session of Congress only those opposed to restrictive immigration will deny. For a few years prior to the war the average net increase of aliens admitted into the United States was approximately 850,000 each year. Then came the World War. It acted as a barrier, cutting down the net immigration to as low as 19,000 in the year 1918. Since the war immigration has increased by leaps and bounds. For the fiscal year prior to the time when the 3 per cent law went into operation the net gain was 552,000. Evidence was introduced before our committee that the ports of southern Europe were congested with those seeking to come to this country; that unless a restrictive immigration law was passed there would be a virtual migration of foreign born to this country numbering from one to two million. The large number of ships created for war purposes were without goods to transport; they would be idle unless the owners could enter into the lucrative business of immigration transportation. But what was the condition in America? During the war the construction of homes and schools was stopped almost entirely. Congress was confronted with the proposition that there were no homes wherein these people could live, no schools whereby their children could be educated, and the American workingman should not be compelled to compete for his work with those seeking to come here. It was not a fair proposition either to the American people or to the foreign born. Prompt and proper solution of the problem was the passage of the 3 per cent restrictive immigration law.

This law in brief simply provides that new immigrants equal in number to 3 per cent of those foreign-born nationals who resided in the United States as determined by our 1910 census could be admitted during the fiscal year, and that not more than 20 per cent were admissible during any one month.

Not included in this count, however, were government officials of foreign countries and their families, aliens visiting the United States as tourists, or temporarily for business or pleasure, aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year immediately preceding the time of their entrance into the United States in other countries of North, Central, or South America, or adjacent islands, and aliens under the age of 18 years who are children of citizens of the United States.

That this law is a success is proclaimed by the good and beneficial results it has accomplished. Not only has the number of immigrants been reduced to a minimum, but the quality of those who came and remained here is of the highest standard obtainable from other countries. The workman is protected from foreign competition.

Because of the law we have been able to learn many characteristic facts concerning the nationals of other countries. For example, the people of southern Europe are more anxious to come to the United States than those of northern Europe. This is shown by the records. The people of Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Rumania, and such countries exhaust their entire quota and every person who, under the law, was permitted to come did come to America. On the other hand, the countries of northern Europe were not inclined to permit their nationals to leave for our shores and but a portion of the percentage allotted to such nationals was exhausted. For example, the people of France used but 75.9 per cent; Germany, 28 per cent; Norway, 48.7 per cent; Sweden, 43.8 per cent; and the United Kingdom, 55.2 per cent.

Another interesting fact was disclosed in the operation of this law. While the nationals of the southern countries of Europe exhausted their full quota in coming to the United States, yet, instead of being a net gain, it was a loss in the number of immigrants from those countries for the entire fiscal year, because more nationals emigrated from the United States than entered here from those southern countries. On the other hand, when the English, French, Germans, Irish, Scandinavians, Scotch, Slovaks, and Welsh come to the United States they have the purpose of remaining here, making this their permanent home and the United States the new country of their allegiance, because but few of these nationals return to their old countries.

The most peculiar result of the operation of the law is that our net gain consists entirely of women and girls. The number of male aliens who departed from this country during the fiscal year just passed exceeded those admitted by almost 12,000, while the number of females who were admitted to this country during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, exceeded those who departed by more than 98,000, so that the net gain in the number of aliens for the fiscal year last past, from both quota and non-quota countries, is 87,121—all females.

In addition, the immigration laws have been better administered. The percentage of those usually debarred has been less than 2 per cent each year of those who seek admission, while under the administration of the 3 per cent law the percentage of debarred has almost doubled. Another fine result of the law is the fact that under restrictive immigration naturalization of foreign born is on the increase. We have approximately 14,000,000 foreign born in this country and less than half are naturalized. As is well known, when a man is naturalized his wife, and also his children who are under 21 years of age and residing in this country, automatically become American citizens. This process takes at least five years for the man. About 12 years ago naturalization was granted to a number equal approximately to 10 per cent of the new immigrants who came to this country. During the last fiscal year this situation has been reversed, and, while the net gain of foreign born is about 87,000, the naturalization amounts, in round numbers, to approximately 262,000. I am one of those who believe that a foreign born who comes to this country to make a living should think enough of the United States to renounce allegiance to his foreign ruler and become a citizen of the United States. Sometimes those seeking to be naturalized fail, but generally through no fault of the Government. Of the 29,000 who were denied naturalization in the last fiscal year, 10,000 were refused because they had claimed exemption from military service of the United States on the ground that they were aliens.

This law has been operating so successfully that it has been extended for two additional years with some amendments. For example, a penalty is imposed upon steamship companies who bring aliens here in excess of the quota; also, instead of one year, aliens must reside continuously for five years immediately preceding the time they seek admission to the United States from Canada, Newfoundland, Cuba, Mexico, and countries of Central and South America or adjacent islands.

The duty of Congress is first to legislate for American people. The 3 per cent restrictive immigration law is a fitting example. Its results are a success of which the American people may be proud.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. KRAUS on account of death in family.

To Mr. WHITE of Maine, indefinitely, on account of death of a member of his family.

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, a copy of which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3890) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920.

Be it enacted, etc., That the second paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920, hereinafter referred to as the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"After the completion of the initial General Staff Corps eligible list, the name of no officer shall be added thereto unless upon graduation from the General Staff School he is specifically recommended as qualified for General Staff duty, and hereafter no officer of the General Staff Corps, except the Chief of Staff, shall be assigned as a member of the War Department General Staff unless he is a graduate of the General Staff College or his name is borne on the initial eligible list: Provided, That the name of any National Guard or reserve officer who has demonstrated by actual service with the War Department General Staff during a period of not less than six months, as hereinafter provided for, that he is qualified for General Staff duty, may, upon the recommendation of a board consisting of the general officers of the War Department General Staff, assistants to the Chief of Staff, be added to said eligible list at any time. The Secretary of War shall publish annually the list of officers eligible for General Staff duty, and such eligibility shall be noted in the annual Army Register. If at any time the number of officers available and eligible for detail to the General Staff is not sufficient to fill all vacancies therein, majors or captains may be detailed as acting General Staff officers under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That in order to insure intelligent cooperation between the General Staff and the several noncombatant branches, officers of such branches may be detailed as additional members of the General Staff Corps under such special regulations as to eligibility and redetail as may be prescribed by the President, but not more than two officers from each such branch shall be detailed as members of the War Department General Staff."

SEC. 2. That section 37 of said act, as contained in section 32 of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 37. Officers' Reserve Corps: For the purpose of providing a reserve of officers available for military service when needed there shall be organized an Officers' Reserve Corps consisting of general officers of sections corresponding to the various branches of the Regular Army, and of such additional sections as the President may direct. The grades in each section and the number in each grade shall be as the President may prescribe. Reserve officers shall be appointed and commissioned by the President alone, except general officers, who shall be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Appointment in every case shall be for a period of five years, but an appointment in force at the outbreak of war or made in time of war shall continue in force until six months after its termination. Any reserve officer may be discharged at any time in the discretion of the President. A reserve officer appointed during the existence of a state of war shall be entitled to discharge within six months after its termination if he makes application therefor. In time of peace a reserve officer must at the time of his appointment be a citizen of the United States or of the Philippine Islands, between the ages of 21 and 60 years. Any person who has been an officer of the Army at any time between April 6, 1917, and June 30, 1919, or an officer of the Regular Army at any time may be appointed as a reserve officer in the highest grade which he held in the Army or any lower grade. Any person commissioned in the National Guard and recognized as a National Guard officer by the Secretary of War may upon his own application be appointed as a reserve officer in the grade held by him in the National Guard. No other person shall in time of peace be originally appointed as a reserve officer of Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, or Air Service in a grade above that of second lieutenant. In time of peace appointments in the Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, and Air Service shall be limited to former officers of the Army, officers of the National Guard recognized as such by the Secretary of War, graduates of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, as provided in section 47b hereof, warrant officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, National Guard, and Enlisted Reserve Corps, and persons who served in the Army at some time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. Promotions and transfers shall be made under such rules as may be prescribed by the President, and shall be based so far as practicable upon recommendations made in the established chain of command. So far as practicable reserve officers shall be assigned to units in the locality of their places of residence. Nothing in this act shall operate to deprive a reserve officer of the reserve commission he now holds. Any reserve officer may hold a commission in the National Guard without thereby vacating his reserve commission."

SEC. 3. That the second paragraph of section 67 of said act be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"The appropriation provided for in this section shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories under just and equitable procedure to be prescribed by the Secretary of War and in direct ratio to the number of enlisted men in active service in the National Guard existing in such States and Territories at the date of apportionment of said appropriation, and to the District of Columbia, under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That the sum so apportioned among the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia shall be available under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War for the actual and necessary expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army when traveling on duty in connection with the National Guard; for the transportation of supplies furnished to the National Guard for the permanent equipment thereof; for office rent and necessary office expenses of officers of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard; for the expenses of the Militia Bureau, including clerical services; for expenses of enlisted men of the Regular Army on duty with the National Guard, including an allowance for quarters and subsistence provided in section 11 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, medicine, and medical attendance; and such expense shall constitute a charge against the whole sum annually appropriated for the support of the National Guard, and shall be paid therefrom and not from the allotment duly apportioned to any particular State, Territory, or the District of Columbia; for the promotion of rifle practice, including the acquisition, construction, maintenance, and equipment of shooting galleries, and suitable target ranges; for the hiring of horses and draft animals for use of mounted troops, batteries, and wagons; for forage for the same; and for such other incidental expenses in connection with lawfully authorized encampments, maneuvers, and field instruction as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and for such other expenses pertaining to the National Guard as are now or may hereafter be authorized by law."

SEC. 4. That section 81 of said act, as contained in section 44 of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 81. Militia Bureau of the War Department: The Militia Division of the War Department shall hereafter be known as the Militia Bureau of the War Department. After January 1, 1921, the Chief of the Militia Bureau shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by selection from lists of present and former National Guard officers, recommended by the governors of the several States and Territories as suitable for such appointment, who hold commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps, and have had 10 or more years' commissioned service in the National Guard, at least five of which have been in the line, and who have attained at least the grade of major. He shall hold office for four years, unless sooner removed for cause, and shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general of the Regular Army during his tenure of office, but shall not be entitled to retirement or retired pay. While serving as chief his reserve commission shall continue in force and shall not be terminated except for cause assigned. Until the chief is appointed, as provided in this section, the President may assign an officer of the Regular Army, not below the grade of colonel, to perform the duties of chief. For duty in the Militia Bureau and for the instruction of the National Guard the President shall assign such number of officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army as he may deem necessary. He may also assign for duty in the Militia Bureau three officers who hold or have held commissions in the National Guard and who at the time of assignment are reserve officers, and any such officer while so assigned shall receive out of the whole fund appropriated for the support of the National Guard the pay and allowances provided in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for officers of the National Guard when authorized by law to receive Federal pay. The President may also assign, with their consent, and within the limits of the appropriations previously made for this specific purpose, not exceeding 500 officers of the National Guard, who hold reserve commissions, to duty with the Regular Army in addition to those attending service schools, and while so assigned they shall receive the pay and allowances authorized in the preceding sentence, to be paid out of the whole fund appropriated for the support of the militia."

SEC. 5. That section 99 of said act be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 99. National Guard officers and men at service schools, etc.: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the Secretary of War may, upon the recommendation of the governor of any State or Territory or the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, authorize a limited number of selected officers or enlisted men of the National Guard to attend and pursue a regular course of study at any military service school of the United States, except the United States Military Academy, or to be attached to an organization of the same arm, corps, or department to which such officer or enlisted man shall belong, for routine practical instruction at or near an Army post during a period of field training or other outdoor exercises; and any such officer shall receive out of any National Guard allotment of funds available for the purpose, the pay and allowances provided in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for officers of the National Guard when authorized by law to receive Federal pay and the travel allowances provided in section 12 thereof, and any such enlisted man shall receive therefrom, except as otherwise provided in section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, the same pay and allowances, including allowances for quarters, subsistence, and travel to which an enlisted man of the Regular Army of like grade would be entitled for attending such school, college, or practical course of instruction under orders from proper military authority, while in actual attendance at such school, college, or practical course of instruction, and for the necessary period of travel from and to his home station."

SEC. 6. That section 110 of said act, as amended by section 48 of the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 110. Pay for National Guard enlisted men: Each enlisted man belonging to an organization of the National Guard, other than enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades, shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the initial monthly pay of his grade in the Regular Army for each drill ordered for his organization where he is officially present and in which he participates for not less than one and one-half hours, not exceeding eight in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 drills in one year: Provided, That no enlisted man shall receive any pay under the provisions of this section for any month in which he shall have attended less than 60 per cent of the drills or other exercises prescribed for his organization: Provided further, That the proviso contained in section 92 of this act shall not operate to prevent the payment of enlisted men actually present at any duly ordered drill or other exercise: And provided further, That periods of any actual military duty equivalent to the drills herein prescribed (except those periods of service for which members of the National Guard may become lawfully entitled to the same pay as officers and enlisted men of the corresponding grades in the Regular Army) may be accepted as service in lieu of such drills when so provided by the Secretary of War.

"All amounts appropriated for the purpose of this and the last preceding section shall be disbursed and accounted for by the officers and agents of the finance department of the Army, and all disbursements under the foregoing provisions of this section shall be made as soon as practicable after the 31st of March, the 30th day of June, the 30th day of September, and the 31st day of December of each year upon pay rolls prepared and authenticated in the manner to be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That stoppages may be made against the compensation payable to any officer or enlisted man hereunder to cover the cost of public property lost or destroyed by and chargeable to such officer or enlisted man.

"Except as otherwise specifically provided herein no money appropriated under the provisions of this or the last preceding section shall be paid to any person not on the active list, nor to any person over 64 years of age, nor to any person who shall fail to qualify as to fitness for military service under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, nor to any State, Territory, or District, or officer or enlisted man in the National Guard thereof unless and until such State, Territory, or District provides by law that staff officers, including officers of the finance, inspection, quartermaster, and medical departments hereafter appointed shall have had previous military experience and shall hold their positions until they have reached the age of 64 years, unless retired prior to that time by reason of resignation, disability, or for cause to be determined by a court-martial legally convened for that purpose, and that vacancies among said officers shall be filled by appointment from the officers of the militia of such State, Territory, or District."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1923.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a report on the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1243).

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill. Mr. Speaker, this measure which the gentleman from Iowa calls up seems to be, from the reading of it, a pretty important measure. It is a long measure, and it seems to me we ought to have a quorum here while the discussion is going on.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that it sounds like a long bill, because certain sections of the national defense act are printed out in full, while, as a matter of fact, the legislation involved covers only a few lines in different sections in the nature of amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the measure has never been reported from the House committee. I understand that the matter has been considered by the House committee, but the bill has not been reported. Can the gentleman tell us why it has not been reported if the committee is favorable to it?

Mr. HULL. The Committee on Military Affairs failed to have a quorum, and therefore they could not report it out.

I might say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the bill relates entirely to the National Guard. It has nothing to do with the Regular Army. Every amendment here has been indorsed by the National Guard officers, and has also been indorsed by the several adjutants general of the several States that make up the National Guard.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. All the adjutants general of the several States have indorsed this bill, have they not?

Mr. HULL. They have.

Mr. HILL. They are anxious to have it passed promptly?

Mr. HULL. All the National Guard, so far as I have ever heard, are anxious to have this bill passed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is this bill similar to the bill that was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HULL. It has been considered by the House Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Covered in Report No. 675?

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would say to the gentleman from Virginia that the bill he has in mind was introduced and referred to our committee, and referred by our committee to the Militia Bureau in the War Department, and reported out prior to the passage of the service pay bill. When the service pay bill was enacted into law it took care of a number of provisions that had been in the bill that the gentleman has in mind. Then we thought the better thing to do would be to reintroduce the bill in the Senate, taking cognizance of the action of Congress in taking care of what had been taken care of in the pay bill, and that brought this bill into existence in the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then it is fair to say that the matters covered in this bill have all been considered by the House committee?

Mr. McKENZIE. Absolutely.

Mr. HULL. Certainly. The most important amendment, in my opinion, is the amendment which permits a National Guard officer to be put on the General Staff of the Army. There is also a provision in here permitting National Guard officers to become members of the Officers' Reserve Corps at once.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. After all, the bill is more in the nature of a little bit of carpenter work and refitting, after the passage and two years of the operation of the national defense act?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When it was found that the National Guard did not articulate with ease in all respects with the other establishment?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. So, at the suggestion of the National Guard itself, this legislation is proposed so that the National Guard may have additional opportunities beyond those they have under the national defense act and so that they will have broader scope for ambition than they have under the general provisions of the national defense act. Three or four little spots like that are ironed out, so that the National Guard and the Regular organization may function quite smoothly.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I assume that this bill was not drawn by the General Staff, if it enlarges the privileges of the National Guard.

Mr. HULL. This bill was drawn by several adjutants general at a meeting they had here in Washington. They drew it themselves and asked for its passage.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. What other changes does it make in the present law?

Mr. HULL. In the first place, it is provided that a National Guard officer shall be put on the General Staff, which I think is a fine thing to do. Next, it amends the national defense act and the Army reorganization act so that a National Guard officer can become a member of the Officers' Reserve Corps at once, without going in. They have had the experience, and they go back a member. Slight changes have been made in the pay of the National Guard, so that they will get their pay more promptly. There has been complaint about that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is there any increase in the pay?

Mr. HULL. No; there is no increase in the pay.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I think perhaps I can make this bill plain in five minutes. At least I shall try to do so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] refers only to the National Guard officers. There are also provisions here with reference to reserve officers.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman give attention to that?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will if I have the time. Let me first explain the bill generally. The first amendment refers to section 5 of the national defense act. That section of the national defense act provides for the making of the official continuous eligible list of officers to be placed upon the General Staff. Now, in making that up, when we wrote the national defense act, we provided that the officers of the Regular Army and those who had graduated from certain colleges, staff colleges, could be put on the eligible list. The amendment effecting that is as follows, on page 2:

Provided, That the name of any National Guard or reserve officer who has demonstrated by actual service with the War Department General Staff during a period of not less than six months, as hereinafter provided for, that he is qualified for General Staff duty, may, upon the recommendation of a board consisting of the general officers of the War Department General Staff, assistants to the Chief of Staff, be added to said eligible list at any time.

That means simply this: That any National Guard officer who passes the examination may have his name put on the eligible list, to be hereafter appointed on the General Staff.

Mr. LONDON. Under the conditions of the General Staff?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; or if he is an officer holding a commission in the reserve. That is the only amendment to that section. It is the only change. I think it is a good change. I am sure there will be no criticism of it.

The next amendment is to section 37 of the national defense act, for the creation of the Officers' Reserve Corps. On page 4 there is an amendment commencing on line 13. In the National Guard act it read:

Any person serving in the National Guard.

That is changed to "Any person commissioned in the National Guard." And the language is transposed somewhat so as to make it more clearly understood.

Then again, at the bottom of the page, insert the following words on line 22:

Officers of the National Guard, recognized as such by the Secretary of War—

And so forth, clarifying that.

On page 5, in lines 9 to 12, in order that there may be no question about a man's reserve commission, the following was added:

Nothing in this act shall operate to deprive a reserve officer of the reserve commission he now holds. Any reserve officer may hold a commission in the National Guard without thereby vacating his reserve commission.

There has been some question whether an officer holding a commission in the National Guard could at the same time hold a Federal commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps. This simply clarifies that point.

The next amendment is in section 3 of the national defense act. On page 6, in line 11, we simply put in the language:

In section 11 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922.

That is, they are paid under the provisions of the service pay bill that we passed a short time ago.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman tell us what appropriation is referred to in line 15 on page 5?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the appropriation that is provided for in the national defense act.

Mr. SPEAKS. For the National Guard?

Mr. McKENZIE. For the National Guard.

Mr. SPEAKS. In other words, then, all the various things that are enumerated here are to be charged to the appropriation for the National Guard?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the law now.

Mr. SPEAKS. That is different from the present law, is it not?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; that is the law now. That is the way the section reads. I have a copy of it on the desk there which the gentleman can read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will be glad if gentlemen will let me finish stating these amendments. Then I will be glad to yield for any question. The language beginning with the word "for," in line 16 on page 6—

For the hire of clerks in the offices of United States property and disbursing officers, as approved by the Secretary of War.

That language is stricken out, because we felt that it was unnecessary to go to that expense.

Now, the next amendment comes on page 8, in section 81 of the national defense act, by inserting, on page 8, in line 6, after the word "necessary," the following language:

He may also assign for duty in the Militia Bureau three officers who hold or have held commissions in the National Guard, and who at the time of assignment are reserve officers, and any such officer while so assigned shall receive out of the whole fund appropriated for the support of the National Guard the pay and allowances provided in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for officers of the National Guard when authorized by law to receive Federal pay.

That provision simply means that while under the national defense act the Chief of the Militia Bureau is now a National Guard officer selected from officers recommended by the governors of the various States, who have had at least 10 years' service, and General Rickards, of the State of Pennsylvania, is now at the head of the Militia Bureau, this provides that he may have three assistants taken from officers of the National Guard who hold reserve commissions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman go back to section 3 and say exactly what he meant by the statement that the words were stricken out? We do not understand that here.

Mr. McKENZIE. On page 6?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. On page 6, after the word "Columbia," in line 16, this language was in the original bill:

For the hire of clerks in the offices of United States property and disbursing offices, as approved by the Secretary of War.

That would entail an unnecessary expense.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Those words still remain here in the copy of the bill which I have.

Mr. McKENZIE. No; they are stricken out in the bill that you are to vote upon, because we did not want to incur that expense.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Why do you limit it to three officers?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not know. That is probably an arbitrary number, but it is the number asked for by the Militia Bureau. The Chief of the Militia Bureau, when he appeared before the committee, said that was what they wanted, and we gave them what they asked for.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. QUIN. Why could not this bill go before the Military Committee and be considered?

Mr. McKENZIE. It has been before the Military Committee, practically the same bill.

Mr. QUIN. This bill shows on its face it was not.

Mr. McKENZIE. I explained a moment ago to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] that the bill which we considered in our committee was considered prior to the passage of the pay bill, the passage of which eliminated from the bill that we considered a number of sections which were unnecessary to be enacted into law. Therefore we had it reintroduced in the Senate with those provisions eliminated.

Now, on page 9, the next amendment comes in section 99 of the national defense act, and is as follows:

SEC. 99. National Guard officers and men at service schools, etc.: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the Secretary of War may, upon the recommendation of the governor of any State or Territory or the commanding general of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, authorize a limited number of selected officers or enlisted men of the National Guard to attend and pursue a regular course of study at any military service school of the United States, except the United States Military Academy, or to be attached to an organization of the same arm, corps, or department to which such officer or enlisted man shall belong, for routine practical instruction at or near an Army post during a period of field training or other outdoor exercises; and any such officer shall receive out of any National Guard allotment of funds available for the purpose the pay and allowances provided in the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for officers of the National Guard when authorized by law to receive Federal pay and the travel allowances provided in section 12 thereof, and any such enlisted man shall receive therefrom, except as otherwise provided in section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, the same pay and allowances, including allowances for quarters, subsistence, and travel to which an enlisted man of the Regular Army of like grade would be entitled for attending such school—

And so forth.

That simply puts the National Guard officers on the same footing as the officers in the reserve and in the Regular Army.

The next amendment comes to section 110. You will find it on page 11. It simply changes the pay from the Quartermaster Department to the Finance Department, which is now the department which does the paying. On page 12 in line 4 you will find the same insertions of the finance, inspection, and so forth, including the Finance Department.

Now, gentlemen, that is all there is to this bill. It is simply the amendments mentioned put into the sections named. Now, I will yield first to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box], who desires to interrogate me.

Mr. BOX. Can the gentleman tell me why this legislation was not presented while the House had plenty of time to consider it, and why it is now brought up in this hasty manner under suspension of the rules?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that we have been doing our very best to get these matters up before Congress, and I want to say further to him that in my judgment there is not anything complex about this. There is not anything difficult to understand. It is a simple proposition and one that does not require very much discussion.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JEFFERS].

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama. The gentleman referred a moment ago to the amendment about pay and travel allowance for officers of the National Guard. The provision for such pay and travel allowances for enlisted men also is a new proposition; is it not?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; that is provided in the service pay bill. This simply makes it comply with that law; that is all.

Mr. QUIN. My recollection is that the bill that the Military Committee of the House had before it was a bill that the National Guard indorsed. Do they indorse this bill?

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. QUIN. There is no question about this bill being indorsed by them?

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. QUIN. Nothing has been put in here to undo what we tried to do?

Mr. McKENZIE. No. I want to say to my friend from Mississippi that we did a good many things for the National Guard in the service pay bill for which they were very thankful, and they simply asked us to do for them in this bill the things that we did not do in the service pay bill—things that they wish to have done.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DENISON. What is the attitude of the War Department toward this bill? Do they approve of it?

Mr. McKENZIE. They do. They have no objection to it. I have not found anyone who objected to it.

Mr. BUTLER. This does no more than to simply explain our former act. It does not involve promotions in any way.

Mr. McKENZIE. It does extend the law and gives the National Guard officers some things they have not heretofore enjoyed, but the committee felt that they were doing them no more than justice.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a further relief of the guard and the reserve officers.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; to the National Guard.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. yes.

Mr. CANNON. Are they paid from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. McKENZIE. The National Guard officers? The gentleman will remember that we provided in the national defense act that when they are in the Federal service in training the Federal Government appropriates a certain amount of money to help pay the National Guard.

Mr. CANNON. An officer of the National Guard might be on the staff.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then he would be paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. CANNON. At a certain age a Regular Army officer is retired. Does this apply to the officers of the National Guard?

Mr. McKENZIE. It does not bring in any retirement; he is not a Regular Army officer on the staff; he is there simply for detail.

Mr. CANNON. We have got a militia and the Regular Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. Not much of a Regular Army; we have a little left.

Mr. CANNON. I thought we had a good deal of it.

Mr. VAILE. Not enough of it.

Mr. CANNON. The State contributes to the National Guard, and does the National Treasury contribute?

Mr. McKENZIE. A part of the appropriation every year for the National Guard.

Mr. CANNON. This is enlarging that?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would not say that it enlarges it. An officer detailed is drawing his full pay while serving, and we felt that what little expense there was is well expended.

Mr. HULL. It can not increase the appropriation because it is out of the appropriation that you make every year. It is made annually.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not proposed in the interest of the Regular Army, and their being on the staff is not for the benefit of the Regular Army but for the benefit of the National Guard—to give them training to better supervise the affairs of their branch of the Army.

Mr. McSWAIN. It is for the benefit of the Regular Army in an educational way. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to use his time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

UNITED STATES MILITARY RESERVATION, FORT DE RUSSY, HONOLULU, HAWAII.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 3424.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 3424) to provide for the reclamation of the United States Military Reservation, Fort De Russy, Honolulu, Hawaii.

Be it enacted, etc., That such portion of the United States Military Reservation, Fort De Russy, Honolulu, Hawaii, as is low, marshy, or insanitary shall be filled in and raised to the grade of other marshlands now in process of reclamation by the Territory of Hawaii in the immediate vicinity of said reservation, and for this purpose there is hereby authorized to be expended under the direction or supervision of the Secretary of War a sum not to exceed $100,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I demand a second.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is a Senate bill. Has it been considered by any committee?

Mr. ROGERS. The Committee on Military Affairs has taken favorable action on the bill, and it was referred to a subcommittee to draw the report.

The chairman of the subcommittee was called away from the city for a considerable period, I think on account of illness, and the bill has not actually been placed on the calendar. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE], acting chairman of the committee, is prepared to corroborate this statement, and I explained the situation to the Speaker before I asked to be recognized under suspension of the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I shall be glad to. Everyone who goes to the Hawaiian Islands goes to the city of Honolulu first, and secondly everyone goes to Waikiki. About halfway between the city and Waikiki is the Government reservation known as Fort De Russy, one of the principal military reservations of the Hawaiian Islands. The area which the Government owns within that reservation is about 76 acres. Fifty-six acres are either on high land or on reclaimed land. The other 20 acres are marshlands. Hawaiian marshlands—that is, territory owned by the Hawaiian government or by private owners—adjoin the marshlands of Fort De Russy.

The Hawaiian government has found that the marshlands are exceedingly insanitary and dangerous to the public health. Epidemics have started there in the past, and it is feared that worse epidemics may arise in the future. The Hawaiian government has appropriated about $1,000,000 to reclaim its marshlands. But, of course, it has no jurisdiction whatever over the 20 acres of marshlands within the Federal reservation. So they have come to the United States Government and to Congress and asked this Congress to appropriate $100,000 for the completion of this reclamation project, so as to eliminate the marshlands of Fort De Russy.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. In just a moment I shall be glad to. It is obvious to Members of the House that the Hawaiian government can not get very far in the reclamation of its own marshlands unless the Government of the United States is at the same time doing its part, because the two areas of marshland are a part of one indivisible whole. It is estimated that if the Federal Government does the work at the same time that the Territory is doing it the cost will be only about one-third as much. It is stated in the hearings that the marshlands now owned by the United States Government, which comprise 20 acres, are now worth something like $500 an acre. If this project is completed, they will be worth, if put on the market, from $20,000 to $40,000 per acre, or $400,000 to $800,000 for the entire 20 acres. This matter has been favorably reported upon by the department commander of the Territory of Hawaii and is recommended to Congress by the Secretary of War. It has already passed the Senate by a unanimous vote.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The proposition is to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase of the land?

Mr. ROGERS. Not for the purchase but for the reclamation of 20 acres already owned by the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Senate bill authorizes the expenditure of this money without any reference to the Appropriations Committee of the House?

Mr. ROGERS. No; this is simply an authorization; it is not an appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I read the language of the bill:

There is hereby authorized to be expended under the direction or supervision of the Secretary of War a sum not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. ROGERS. My understanding of the language is that it is simply an authorization of appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is not, though. The Senate was within its rights, of course, in passing the bill in this form. The bill comes in here for final action, and if the bill is passed in this language the expenditure can be made by the Secretary of War without referring it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. VAILE. The word "reclamation" seems to have aroused a good deal of hostility from time to time among some Members from the gentleman's part of the country when they are referring to lands in the United States. There is no objection to the use of the term applied to these 20 acres in Hawaii?

Mr. ROGERS. This looks like a sensible project from the standpoint of public health and of public finance.

Mr. STAFFORD. But not in the same plane as the reclamation projects involving hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS. If this 20 acres cost $100,000, that will be $5,000 an acre. Would it be worth $5,000 an acre if it be reclaimed?

Mr. ROGERS. The undisputed testimony before the Military Affairs Committee was that it would be worth $20,000 to $40,000 an acre. This area is in a very popular part of the island of Oahu. If the gentleman is familiar with the geography there, he will recall that one passes this tract on the way from Honolulu to Waikiki, and that the residential and the real estate development extends out along the sea coast in the neighborhood of the fort.

Mr. STEPHENS. How will these 20 acres be reclaimed?

Mr. ROGERS. Primarily by a drainage canal which will bring the 20 acres above the sea level about 5 feet.

Mr. STEPHENS. In other words, it will have to be drained?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. The drainage canal will be the principal element of drainage. There may be some filling also.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the Government then dispose of the 20 acres?

Mr. ROGERS. The Government will be able to dispose of it, if it desires, to very considerable advantage. It has been suggested, however, that there might be an additional use made of the reclaimed land for barracks and for various other uses of a military character.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a pretty large amount of money to be expended in reclaiming 20 acres of land.

Mr. ROGERS. The Hawaiian government itself think it worth while to appropriate a million dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. How much land has it?

Mr. ROGERS. About four times the Federal acreage.

Mr. MADDEN. How much did the gentleman say it was worth?

Mr. ROGERS. The undisputed testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs is that it will be worth from $20,000 to $40,000 an acre. It is not worth much of anything now because of its being swamp land. As I have said, the area is extremely malodorous and insanitary and has been responsible for epidemics in the past and may be responsible for an epidemic in the future.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think the bill should be modified in some way so as to investigate how the money is to be expended if authorized?

Mr. ROGERS. It is under the direction of the Secretary of War. I do not know quite what restrictions Congress may impose beyond those imposed in this way. This is a Senate bill passed unanimously by the Senate.

Mr. MADDEN. The Senate passes almost anything.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk the Senate report, which is extremely full, and which includes a letter from the Secretary of War, in which he goes over this project very thoroughly, indeed.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. If the bill is passed in this form, does the gentleman understand that the Secretary of War would be authorized to proceed to expend $100,000 without an appropriation reported from the Committee on Appropriations; and if so, from what fund would he take the $100,000?

Mr. ROGERS. My understanding has been that this simply authorizes an appropriation. But as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] suggests, possibly it is an actual appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. Just a moment, if the gentleman will permit me. It may be simply a question of punctuation. If there was a comma used after the word "authorized" in the phrase, "There is hereby authorized," then it would mean that it was simply authorized, and was to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. The query to my mind is from what fund it is to be taken if it does more than authorize an appropriation. From what fund is it authorized to be expended?

Mr. ROGERS. I suppose it goes without saying that it would be expended from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TILSON. But there would be no fund under the control of the War Department that might be used for this purpose. Certainly the contingent fund, available for unforeseen expenses, would not be so large as this, and there would be no fund from which it could be expended. It seems to me that it would amount to a mere authorization.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman is correct, then the bill is valueless. If the gentleman is not correct, then——

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, in order to simplify this discussion and follow out what I understood to be the preference of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, as disclosed at the hearings, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "expended" in lines 8 and 9 and substitute therefor the word "appropriated."

Mr. MADDEN. I object to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then it would read "Appropriated under the direction and supervision of the War Department."

Mr. ROGERS. It should be "authorized to be appropriated."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: In lines 8 and 9 strike out the word "expended" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "appropriated."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention now to the fact that if that is agreed to, the bill will then read "Authorized to be appropriated under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War." [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that as now worded it is simply an authorization and not an appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend——

Mr. BUTLER. You can not amend anything here under the present condition.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent, rather, to amend by inserting after the word "be," in line 8, the words "appropriated, to be," so that it will then read, "Hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be expended," and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Amend, on page 1, line 8, by inserting after the word "be," in line 8, the words "appropriated, to be."

Mr. MONDELL. With a comma after the word "appropriated."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object I would like to be recognized in my own right for a few minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman gets recognition, may I inquire briefly of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] whether this reclaimed land will be of any value to the Government for military purposes, or merely of value for residential purposes? I understood that Fort De Russy is not one of the important forts on the island of Hawaii.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not as important as Schofield Barracks, but it is distinctly one of the most important forts of the islands, because it is one of the starting forts to Honolulu Harbor. The plan of the War Department, as I understand it, is to take full advantage of this 20 acres when reclaimed, and the Secretary of War refers to that in his report to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I interrupt?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. For residences for officers?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says it is for residences for officers. It is a very desirable place on the beach there for officers?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes. It is unhealthy there now because of this swamp.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not one of the particular interests of this thing the fact that if the United States does not cut out its own nuisance it does not do much good to the Territory of Hawaii to spend its own money on it?

Mr. ROGERS. That is exactly the idea of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have followed the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] as closely as I could. Peculiarly enough, this bill, although it is in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, is called up by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have not heard any gentleman who is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, which I understood in some sort of way had given some consideration to the bill, attempt to throw any light upon it at this time. It is true the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] asked a question about it, intended to elicit information, but I do not think any information was forthcoming.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think the gentleman listened to what response came to that question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman from Vermont this question: Is this reclamation needed for military purposes?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not at present needed for military purposes. The question I asked of the gentleman from Massachusetts was to that point. The principal reason is that if the United States does not clean up its own nuisance there, which is a menace to health and which is in contravention of the laws of health and sanitation—if it does not abate that nuisance, then there will be no reason for the people of Hawaii to clean up their own quarters. It is likely to start an epidemic.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not understand why the Government of the United States should have a lot of swamp land over there at a military reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the situation to be this: There is a swamp area of considerable extent, 20 acres of which is the property of the Government. The people of Hawaii feel that it is essential to the health of the community that that area be drained and filled, and they are about to undertake the work, and the Government has a property near by. The Government, as a landowner and a sovereign, can not be brought in as a private owner could be; it is asked to contribute its share to this work.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If we do not need it as a military reservation, let us give it to somebody over there and let them expend $100,000 on it.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a portion of the reservation. I suppose we do own it.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman from Tennessee mean that he wishes to give away property which the evidence here indicates, if $100,000 is expended upon it, will be worth $800,000? Does the gentleman mean to say that he would give it away? If so, it is perfectly clear that it could be given away easily.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is not anyone willing to assert here that it is necessary for the military reservation. That is the only purpose on earth that the Government had for it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I recollect that when the matter was before the Committee on Military Affairs I asked the representative of the War Department if it was needed for military purposes, and he said it was needed for military purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how long have we owned this property?

Mr. HILL. Apparently this property has belonged to the Government ever since we have had a reservation in Hawaii. They are putting in a sewerage system in Hawaii, and part of it is right in the city. But I call your attention to page 4 of the report, which says:

> The land is low and partly covered with water. It is incapable of effective drainage unless it is to be filled, and it is so foul smelling and disease breeding that the health authorities have especially protested against its not being filled.

It was testified before the Military Affairs Committee that if the Government did not come into this sewerage scheme at this time—for that is what it virtually is—it would cost the Government a great deal more later on when the Hawaiian Territory dredge was taken away.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How did we acquire this property?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. I did ask if it was necessary for military purposes, and they said that it was part of the reservation and was necessary, and I understood it had been there ever since we have had a reservation there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We have not needed it heretofore very much for a military reservation. We went through the greatest war in the history of the world without needing it for that purpose.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I am sure the gentleman was facetious when he said the Government was about to give this away. Otherwise, I would very gladly say that I would be delighted to take it and to spend the money on it personally to make the improvement, if you can get the property for me. I am saying that because I know the property. I am not personally interested in it in any way whatever; but it ought to be done in the interest of the people over there. I do know that they were willing to spend the money that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] says they are willing to spend and I do know the location of this particular piece of swamp land. It is part of a swamp that the people of Hawaii are trying to do away with, and personally knowing the location of the land, I will say that if the gentleman will get the necessary bill through the House I will take the land and spend the money to drain it.

Mr. CANNON. Where is this with reference to the city of Honolulu?

Mr. HILL. It is between Honolulu and Waikiki Beach.

Mr. CANNON. There is a military reservation 4 or 5 miles south of Honolulu.

Mr. HILL. Yes; the reservation begins on top of the mountain and runs down into the swamp land.

Mr. CANNON. Is this a part of the reservation?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The military reservation is south of Honolulu.

Mr. HILL. There are two or three military reservations, but this is between Waikiki Beach and Honolulu.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. I want to ask the gentleman for a little information. How many acres of this swamp land are there in Hawaii to be drained, not owned by the Government, upon which $5,000 an acre is to be expended?

Mr. ROGERS. May I answer that question?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. My understanding is that there are approximately 100 acres in this swamp, and that this is the only swamp near Honolulu. As I said in my opening remarks, this particular swamp is directly on the boulevard leading from Honolulu to Waikiki. Of the 100 acres there are 20 acres belonging to the Government and 80 acres Territorially or privately owned.

Mr. LANHAM. How much is to be expended on the 80 acres?

Mr. ROGERS. A million dollars has already been set aside.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, $5,000 an acre for the reclamation of swamp land is a good deal of money. We have a good many acres of swamp land in the United States, but I do not presume anybody would say that we ought to spend $5,000 an acre for its reclamation. We do not know whether it is going to cost $100,000 or $1,000,000 to reclaim this 20 acres of land owned by the Government of the United States, and we do not know what is going to be done with it after it is reclaimed. Why should we sit here to-day and vote $100,000 to do something we do not know anything about? It seems to me the time has come for us to exercise some judgment about the way we make expenditures, and not take for granted everything that is said by interested parties here, there, and everywhere as to whether we ought to spend the money or not.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Under this bill before a penny of money is expended it will have to run the gantlet of the gentleman's Committee on Appropriations, and I am sure before it gets out of that committee with the recommendation of an appropriation the gentleman will know whether it is worth it or not. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. That does not improve the situation a bit. In the first place, you ought not to tempt the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee with the expenditure of the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. How otherwise can the project come before the House except in this way? The legislative committee has considered this question.

Mr. MADDEN. True.

Mr. ROGERS. It then goes to the Committee on Appropriations, which is headed by the able gentleman from Illinois. If it had not previously received an authorization from the legislative committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] would have no right to consider it in his committee.

Mr. MADDEN. And we would not consider it.

Mr. ROGERS. Why does the gentleman preach against the ability and efficiency of his own committee?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to be given authority to consider a proposition of this kind. The place to kill it is here and the time to kill it is now. [Applause.] In the first place, we do not know whether it is worth $100,000 or not.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Very likely the king was in the counting house counting out his money and did not hear what was said awhile ago. It is not for a real estate speculation that we are cleaning this up. It is an epidemic-breeding place.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand it is alongside a beautiful drive, and that by the side of this drive they are going to build palatial homes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We hope so.

Mr. MADDEN. And we are providing an expenditure of $100,000 to make a beauty spot for those who want to live in that beautiful climate out there in Hawaii.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. This does not bind the Government to pay $100,000.

Mr. MADDEN. No; but it may bind the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. When the gentleman's committee is asked for the appropriation he may discover that this improvement can be made for $25,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and it may be discovered that it will cost $1,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Knowing the gentleman as I do, I am sure he will not recommend the expenditure of a cent that is not warranted.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated that $1,000,000 had been set aside to drain the 80 acres. Now the Government owns 20 acres. Unless the American Government is going to get it done at a cheaper rate, will it not cost $200,000, according to that estimate?

Mr. MADDEN. I can only give you the result of my experience. Every time we set a limit of cost we undertake to keep within it, but we have rarely succeeded. Sometimes we are very moderate in our desires and so we fix a low limit of cost, on the theory that it is easier to get it through with a low limit than with a high limit, but after we have once started the job we discover that we have spent the limit of cost and have established what is known as a work in progress.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I want to ask a question. As I understand this proposition, it is going to call for the building of canals?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. They ask to build canals, and nobody knows how much money it will cost. I do not pretend to be very well informed about it, but so far as my information goes this whole thing is being done for the purpose of making a beautiful spot on which to build palatial residences along a beautiful drive.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about when he says that or he did not listen to what I attempted to present to the House. I have in my report here a statement from the board of health authorities of Hawaii, who state that this action is necessary to remove a plague spot. Now, the gentleman wants to be fair. There is nothing about residences in this matter, except what the gentleman has brought in himself.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; I have been advised as to that by other people who have traveled over this territory as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts. They tell me that that is what it is for, and I believe them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask the gentleman if his attention has been called to the use of the word "or" in line 4? It says "as is low, marshy"—not "and," but "or insanitary shall be filled in and raised to the grade of other marsh land," and so forth. Now, then, the land need not be low; it need not be marshy, but the military authorities, or some one, can say it is insanitary and grade any land whether marshy or not.

Mr. MADDEN. A very good place and a very good time to save $100,000 is right here. Let us defeat the bill. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Did the gentleman from Illinois make the same objection to the appropriation of $2,000,000 for the bank building in St. Louis?

Mr. MADDEN. That was simply to authorize the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis to erect a building for its own use and to pay for the building with its own money.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 19, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Committee on Ways and Means. H. Con. Res. 68. A concurrent resolution changing the enrollment of H. R. 7456; without amendment (Rept. No. 1241). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FORDNEY: Committee on Ways and Means. S. 3295. An act to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce; with amendments (Rept. No. 1242). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TEN EYCK: A bill (H. R. 12699) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a veterans' bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act," approved August 9, 1921; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FOCHT: A bill (H. R. 12700) to further regulate certain public service corporations operating within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is detained because of serious illness in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment Senate bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 2377. An act to authorize the extension and widening of Ninth Street from Longfellow Street NW. to Underwood Street, and Underwood Street from Ninth Street to Georgia Avenue NW.;

S. 2621. An act authorizing the President to dispose of certain arms and ammunition seized in pursuance of the act approved June 15, 1917, along the Mexican border;

S. 2716. An act to give effect to certain provisions of conventions with foreign Governments for facilitating the work of traveling salesmen;

S. 2799. An act to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890;

S. 2983. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant extensions of time under permits for the development of underground waters within the State of Nevada, and for other purposes;

S. 3111. An act to authorize the collection in monthly installments of indebtedness due the United States by general prisoners restored to duty, and for other purposes;

S. 3641. An act to grant and confirm to the State of Florida title in and to section 16 within the exterior limits of the area patented to the State of Florida April 23, 1903, and for other purposes;

S. 3733. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Warren, in the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio;

S. 3793. An act to authorize the Gary Tube Co. to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the State of Indiana;

S. 3834. An act to authorize the Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the State of Indiana;

S. 3938. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county courts of Lafayette and Ray Counties, in the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River; and

S. J. Res. 216. Joint resolution providing for the consent of the Congress of the United States of America to a compact and agreement between the State of Kansas and the State of Missouri respecting the erection, maintenance, and operation of the waterworks plants of the cities of Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo., the taxation thereof, and exercise of eminent domain in connection therewith by each State.

The message also announced that the House had passed Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, severally with amendments, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

S. 2885. An act to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes;

S. 3890. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916;

S. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution authorizing the Federal reserve banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches; and

S. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution providing for the reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska.

The message further announced that the House had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

H. R. 5027. An act to amend an act approved February 28, 1899, entitled "An act relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings";

H. R. 6650. An act providing additional terminal facilities in square east of 710 and square 712 in the District of Columbia for freight traffic;

H. R. 7658. An act to amend the act approved August 25, 1919, entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes";

H. R. 10817. An act to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States;

H. R. 11173. An act to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended;

H. R. 12170. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa.," approved August 11, 1916; and

H. R. 12473. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Wynco Block Coal Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 12472) to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities during the present emergency, and to prevent the sale of fuel at unjust and unreasonably high prices, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ST. LOUIS AND SALT LAKE CITY RESERVE BANK BUILDINGS.

Mr. McLEAN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate Joint Resolution 208.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches, which were on page 1, lines 1, 2, and 3 of the preamble, to strike out "abridged the right of Federal reserve banks to enter into contracts by providing" and to insert "provided"; on page 1, line 15 of the preamble, to strike out "any" and to insert "a"; on page 2, line 16 of the preamble, to strike out "or branches"; on page 2, line 17 of the preamble, to strike out "buildings" and insert "building"; on page 2, lines 17 and 18 of the preamble, to strike out " and Little Rock, Ark."; on page 2, line 3, to strike out "Banks" and to insert "Bank"; on page 2, lines 3 and 4, to strike out "and Salt Lake City are" and to insert "is"; on page 2, line 5, to strike out "the erection of buildings and to authorize"; on page 2, lines 5 and 6, to strike out "buildings" and to insert "a building"; on page 2, line 6, to strike out "and branches"; on page 2, line 8, to strike out "buildings" and insert "building"; and on page 2, line 8, to strike out "30" and to insert "25." Also to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its head office."

Mr. McLEAN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, ask for a conference with the House on the amendments in disagreement between the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McLEAN, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. HITCHCOCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

TRICOUNTY IRRIGATION PROJECT, NEBRASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for reinvestigation of the tricounty irrigation project, Nebraska.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. 5027) to amend an act approved February 28, 1890, entitled "An act relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings"; and

On September 19, 1922:

S. 3917. An act to amend section 876 of the Revised Statutes; and

S. 3918. An act to amend section 51 of chapter 4 of the Judicial Code.

THE TARIFF—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, at 4 o'clock this afternoon will come the final vote upon one of the great tax bills that must serve the Government or destroy the business of the country, depending upon the effect of the bill in its relation to our foreign commerce. I do not intend to enter upon an extended discussion of the rates in the bill, but before we reach the vote this afternoon I think it is well to make a brief statement for the benefit of the RECORD, if not for the Senate, as I assume that practically every vote in the Senate has been accounted for at this time.

To analyze this piece of legislation we must first recognize that the duties levied at the customhouse are taxes on the American people. There was a time in the history of legislation of this kind when it was contended that a tariff duty was not a tax, but that theory has been abandoned long ago except by those who desire to close their eyes to all economic equations. How far the tax levied in the bill will affect the American people is a very difficult problem to determine until the bill becomes a law and a period of months has elapsed and goods are imported under it so that we may have the actual test of taxation to know by experience where the tax will fall and fall the heaviest on the consuming public.

There is this to be said, however, with reference to the taxes levied by the bill: Some tax rates are effective at the customhouse and some are not.

To illustrate: There is no tax levied on short-staple cotton in this bill; but if there were it would mean nothing either in the way of producing revenue or in the way of burdening the American people, because no short-staple cotton is imported into the United States and none would be imported whether there was a tax levied on it or not. So a tax levied on short-staple cotton would be ineffective in every respect.

Practically speaking, that same statement may be made in reference to corn. Corn is a great American product. We produce billions of bushels of corn in America and possibly import a few thousand bushels along the border. So whether a tax is placed on corn or whether it is not does not affect the price, and if a tax is imposed it does not put a burden on anyone except a few people along the border in some particular locality where corn may cross from Canada or Mexico into the United States.

There are, however, other commodities where every cent of tax that is levied in a customs duty reflects itself at once into the pockets of the American people. That may be said of sugar. Examples may be pointed out here or there where the selling price of sugar, with the tax added, for a few days or for a few months or for a few weeks, has fallen below the cost of production. Instances may also be cited showing that for a few months or a few weeks the price of sugar has risen above the foreign selling price, the profit and the tax added; but, taking it through a period of years as we go along, the tax on sugar always increases the price of sugar to the consumer to the extent of the tax. The increased taxes provided for in this bill on sugar will increase the cost of living to our people many millions of dollars. The same may be said of a tax on raw wool. That tax reflects itself absolutely into the pockets of the ultimate consumer of the wool.

So in viewing this bad bill, which imposes taxes on many articles that can not be affected by the tax, like corn, because production in this country is so enormous and the imports so negligible, if, indeed, there are any imports, that the tax can not affect the price. We must bear in mind, on the other hand, there are many articles in the bill, such as sugar and wool, where the tax is directly reflected into the pockets of the American people. We may eliminate entirely from this discussion that class of articles covered by the bill on which a tax has been imposed, possibly for political effect, to mislead some producers who pay great tribute to the favorites of this legislation.

So far as I am concerned, I have always believed that articles on which the tax levied at the customhouse does not affect either the revenue of the Government or the profits of the producer should be put on the free list and kept there as far as possible, because there is no justification in fooling the American people by pretending to levy a dummy tax that is not effective in any way. However, Mr. President, as to the class of articles in this bill, the tax on which is reflected out of the pockets of the American people, there arises a question of very serious moment in contemplating the vote that will be had on the passage of the measure this afternoon.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate very long in discussing this question, but I wish the RECORD to show what my viewpoint is in regard to the taxes which are levied in the bill and their effect on the people who pay them. Not a day passes that we do not hear the cry coming from some source against the high cost of living to the American people. We have a great railroad strike in the country and there is a contention on the part of the laboring men of the country against the reduction of wages. What is the first argument they advance as to why their wages should not be reduced? It is that the cost of living to them has not been reduced and that pre-war conditions as to the purchase of food and the purchase of clothing and in the rents which they have to pay have not been restored. We do not pick up a daily newspaper, be it Republican or Democratic, that we do not find a suggestion coming from some source as to the reduction of the cost of living to the people of the United States.

It was only yesterday that we passed a bill providing for the control of the shipment of coal in this country, and those who favored the passage of the bill stated the emergency requiring the enactment of the bill into law was that there were profiteers in the United States who were unduly advancing the price of coal. In order to attempt to keep down the cost of living to the American people, we have authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to adopt drastic measures in the handling of cars, and have appointed a fuel administrator, at great expense to the Government, to fix reasonable prices governing the cost of fuel to the people during the coming winter. That was the action on yesterday, and yet to-day it is proposed to enact a law which will increase the burden which will rest on the American people a thousandfold more than would possibly be any increased cost of coal to those same people by reason of the action of fuel profiteers.

Is it more important, Mr. President, that a man should have cheap coal than that he should have cheap food? Is it more important to the American people that the price they pay for their coal should be reasonable than it is that the price they pay for their woolen clothes should be reasonable? A man may exist without fuel, but he can not exist without food; a man may exist without fuel, but he can not exist without woolen clothes to turn the storms and winds of the winter from his body. However, we find the anomalous condition of the Senate of one day taking drastic action to reduce the cost of fuel to the American people and the next day passing a bill which Senators proclaim will put up the prices of a great many of the absolute necessities of life which the American people must have. Why? It is not a question merely of raising revenue; that is not the reason why these high taxes are levied. If it were only a question of revenue, a tax might be imposed on tea and coffee which would all be reflected into the Treasury of the Government and none of it go into the pockets of special interests; but no, that is not what is desired by the party in power; that is not the purpose of this bill. They put tea and coffee, articles which are not produced in this country, on the free list, and impose taxes on articles which are produced in this country for the avowed purpose of raising prices.

Of course, they say it is done in the interest of the American manufacturer; that in the interest of the American workingman we are going to protect the American market against foreign competition; but when that is said, the very argument admits that we are going to make the price of the articles on which the tax is being imposed at the customhouse higher than the price would be if the tax were not imposed, and therefore the consumer must pay more for them.

Mr. President, I have never advocated free trade. I think the customhouse is a convenient place to levy a portion of the taxes which must be assessed by this Government on the people. So long as reasonable competition is allowed at the customhouse an inordinate increase in prices by reason of the tax is prevented; but whenever the tax is made so high that reasonable competition is cut off at the customhouse, then the control of the American market is placed absolutely in the hands of the American producer, to charge what he pleases to the American people for the products which he is going to sell to them. This bill piles the taxes so high on many articles that are daily needed in the homes of our people that it amounts to an embargo and destroys all competition from abroad as well as all revenue to the Government.

Mr. President, I do not think for a moment that it is contended by the proponents of this legislation that the taxes they are levying in this bill are not going to be reflected in increased prices; of course, as I stated in the beginning, not increased prices on all of the articles, because there are many articles in this bill, like corn, where the production in America is so enormously greater than any importations that come in that the tax or any tax so levied at the customhouse would not affect prices; but there are certain great staple articles in this bill that go into the daily life of the American people, such as wool and sugar, for example, where the increase will be reflected in the taxes that are put in this bill, and the American people will have to bear that burden of taxation.

If the taxation that is levied in this bill related only to money collected for the Government, there might be justification for the bill, because we are told that there will shortly be an enormous deficit in the Federal Treasury, amounting to something like $650,000,000—a deficit that will amount to nearly as much as the total indebtedness of the United States Government before me went into the Great War—but that is not the case with this bill. As I pointed out when the wool schedule was before the Senate for consideration some months ago, the tax then levied of 33 cents a pound on raw wool would collect out of the pockets of the American people $200,000,000, and only $20,000,000 of it would go into the Treasury of the United States, the balance going to some special interests that had their prices raised by reason of the levying of this tax.

There is not much difference between the figures as they existed then and as they exist now. It is true that the tax as proposed at that time was 33 cents a pound on scoured wool. As it is proposed now after the bill comes from conference, it is 31 cents a pound on scoured wool; so that, practically speaking, as a result of levying a tax on scoured wool—not manufactured wool, not clothes, but the so-called raw material from which clothes are made—you will increase the burden of living to the American people who must wear woolen clothes in the winter something like $200,000,000, and only $20,000,000 of that will go into the Treasury of the United States. The remainder will go into the pockets of special interests.

That is not the case under the law to-day. There is no tax on raw wool. The tax on manufactured woolen goods is much lower than in this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken in that. The emergency law is the law to-day.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is right, and I am glad he corrected me. I should have said that there was no tax on raw wool in the tariff act that this bill is intended to replace, the Democratic act of October 13, 1913; but last summer an emergency tariff act relating to a few articles was passed by the gentlemen who are responsible for this bill. It was only intended, they said at the time, to meet an emergency of the hour; but that emergency, so far as the tax is concerned, is to be extended into the future, as long as this bill shall live on the statute books; and as long as this bill shall live on the statute books this increased burden, nearly $200,000,000, must rest on the American people and be taken out of their pockets as a tribute to special interests.

I might say the same thing about sugar. I could go into the details of a thousand articles in this bill, each one of which is largely increased in taxation, not for the benefit of the Federal Government but for the benefit of favorite producers who demand that they shall have a right to take out of the pockets of the American people tribute for their industries.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. GOODING. I should like to call the Senator's attention to his remark about special interests. I do not think that statement ought to be passed over so lightly. I think the Senator ought to go into details and tell the American people who these special interests are that take $200,000,000 out of their pockets because there is a duty on wool.

The facts are that the entire wool clip of this country brings only about $65,000,000. What I object to is that the wool-grower of this country is charged up with this tax of $200,000,000 when for his entire wool clip, protection and all, he receives only about sixty-five or seventy million dollars.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has made this statement a good many times, but, of course, he understands what I mean just as well as anybody in the Senate.

Mr. GOODING. I understand it, but the people do not understand it from the way the Senator puts it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The people do understand it, and they will understand it before this bill has been the law many months. I did not state that all of this $200,00,000 went into the pockets of the men who grow the sheep. I said that it went into the pockets of the special interests who desired protection under this bill. Part of those special interests are the men who raise the sheep; and, as the Senator said, I think correctly, they are supposed to get the benefit of about $60,000,000 of the $200,000,000.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, let us make that clear. That is for the entire clip. That is not the duty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand. That is for the increased cost.

Mr. GOODING. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator will please allow me to make this speech.

Mr. GOODING. I do not accept it that way.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not ask the Senator to accept it.

Mr. GOODING. My statement is that that is all the wool-grower gets for his entire clip of wool.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that is what the Senator says, but the Senator is not making this speech. I am making the speech. The Senator does not think it will increase the price of wool to the extent of $60,000,000, but I do. I think it will increase it, and that certain large growers of wool in this country will get the benefit of it, and the small growers of wool will get the increased price, although they will have to pay enormously more than they get out of the tax on wool, because they will have to pay a tax on clothes when they buy them from the manufacturer that will more than equal the profits on their wool.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator will not attempt to make his speech in my time.

Mr. GOODING. No; I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the small grower under the Underwood-Simmons bill paid an advalorem duty of 35 per cent on the clothes that he wore, and when you take into consideration the conversion cost he paid a tax of 70 per cent on the suit of clothes that he wore; and it is just as much of a tax if you put it on the clothes after the wool is manufactured as it is if you put it on the raw wool.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will kindly keep his seat now and allow me to go on, I do not want to be impolite to him, and I will answer him on this question, but I do not care to take up the time of the Senate. We vote at 4 o'clock, and I want to give an opportunity for some other Senators to discuss this conference report.

Of course when the Senator said that the tax on clothes under what he calls the Underwood-Simmons bill—the existing law—by any rule or method amounts to 70 per cent, he is dealing in a figure of speech. His imagination has drifted far beyond anything that can be worked out under the law. When a piece of cloth is taxed 35 per cent ad valorem, when it comes into the customhouse there is no possible way of making that tax extend beyond 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator can take his own time to discuss his theory.

Mr. GOODING. I should like to explain that to the Senator, if he will permit me to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure that I know as much about it as the Senator does, as I have spent many years on this question. I am perfectly willing for him to have his theory.

Mr. GOODING. I think possibly an exchange of thoughts might be good for both of us.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know what the Senator's theory is. I only say that he will never convince me that a tax is more than 35 per cent ad valorem when the law says it shall be 35 per cent ad valorem. Of course in the law of 1913 there was a tax of 35 per cent ad valorem. In this bill, in addition to the cumulative tax on raw wool and the compensatory duty that is put on cloth because raw wool is taxed, there is a tax of 50 to 55 per cent on the woolen cloth.

You have not only increased the tax on raw wool so that it will amount to more than a dollar a pound by the time it comes out of the hands of the manufacturer, but you have also increased the tax on the finished product from 35 per cent to 50 or 55 per cent, an increase of from 15 to 20 per cent alone on the finished product. To that extent you have reduced competition.

The present tax has not ruined any manufacturer of woolen goods. The law of 1913 has been on the statute books for nearly nine years, nine years of exceeding prosperity among the manufacturers in the business. It has not driven the flocks of sheep from the plains and the fields. The sheep grower, the woolen manufacturer, the wheat grower, the cotton grower, the pig-iron maker, everybody who is engaged in business of any kind suffered immediately after the war on account of the decreased prices due to after-war conditions, and it did not make any difference whether the article was taxed or untaxed, whether it had a tariff on it or did not, whether the tariff was high or low. The hard times which came in 1920 affected everybody. The sheep raiser was no more seriously affected than the cotton grower, and the tariff had nothing whatever to do with the condition.

But outside of that condition the producer and the manufacturer in the United States had enjoyed reasonable prosperity and success in their business. Yet, with that condition confronting the American people, the party in power comes before the country now and proposes to put a tax on the American people for the benefit of special interests which in many cases more than doubles the existing rate of taxation, and most of it goes into the pockets of the favored class and not into the Treasury of the United States.

More than that, as it stands now, without any interference by executive authority to increase rates, the bill carries rates higher than any tariff duties that have ever been levied on the American people in the history of this country. They are higher than those in the Dingley law, higher than those in the Payne-Aldrich law, which the American people repudiated because of the high taxation, and they are unnecessary.

I know that some of the great manufacturers of the country became greatly alarmed right after the war, fearing that we were going to be flooded with German products and German production, and that the prices of American goods were going to be greatly reduced on account of German competition. No more competition came in from Germany, in the aggregate, than from other countries with which we have commercial relations.

More than that, there are certain particular items which are largely imported from Germany, but the great bulk of American trade abroad is not with Germany, and never has been. It is conceded that in England, France, and other nations with whom we have commercial relations that the cost of production has gone up since the beginning of the war instead of going down, and they are less formidable rivals of ours in our home markets to-day than they were when the existing law was written. Yet, notwithstanding these facts, it is proposed to have this law put on the statute books to enormously increase the burden of taxation.

It is not necessary for me to go into the many details of the 4,000 items which make up the bill and point out the increased tax that is being levied. That has not only been admitted but it has been advocated by the proponents of the measure. They say they increase the tax on almost every item. They say the rates are increased in order to foster the American manufacturer by enabling him to raise his prices, which the American people must pay.

Mr. President, in addition to all this, for the first time in the history of the country the Congress has surrendered, or attempted to surrender, the power granted to it in the Constitution of the United States to control the leving of taxes on the American people. I say the first time; of course, I know that under the McKinley law some reciprocity treaties were authorized, but in those treaties definite rates of duty were fixed, and the President was authorized to put them into effect upon the happening of certain events. So, practically speaking, for the first time in the history of this Government Congress has attempted to surrender into the hands of the Executive its control over the levying of taxation on the American people.

I do not believe that when this bill comes to the test in the courts on those features it will be held to be constitutional. But that is a question for the lawyers and the courts to decide hereafter. So far as the bill is concerned to-day, we must take it at its face value. We must take it on the basis of what its proponents claim, and they have framed a bill under which the President of the United States can enormously increase taxation above the rates now named in the bill.

It may be said that to the extent of 50 per cent he may reduce, as well as raise, the taxes fixed in the bill. I see no reason to expect the President of the United States to enter upon a reduction of taxes when, in order that the bill may become law, it must receive his signature and approval. More than that, he stands for the theory of his party, that we must build a wall about the country keeping out importations, in order that prices may be advanced for the benefit of the American producer.

But that is not the worst. There are clauses in this bill which allow the President, without check or hindrance, either to increase or decrease the taxes levied 50 per cent of the rates found in the bill, after a finding by the Tariff Commission as to facts in relation to industry. The proponents of the measure, in secret party conference, by striking out five words from the bill, put it into the power of the Executive to double many of the taxes in the bill. They have given the Executive the right to change the basis of valuation on which the rates in this bill are founded, from the foreign valuation, which is the basis on which the tax is levied, to the American valuation, which in most cases is much higher.

Nobody denies that that will enormously increase the rates. In many instances it will increase the rates more than 100 per cent, will double the rates which were written into the bill when it went to conference. If you are not putting the provision in the bill with the idea that it will be used, if you are not going to apply it against the American people, why should it be in the bill? Why should the party in power insist on keeping a provision in the bill which was not in the bill when it passed the Senate and not in the bill when it passed the House, but which is put in now to enormously increase rates of taxation which were already higher than rates ever before levied on the American people at the customhouse? Yet such a provision is found in the bill. More than that, the provision is such that the American people have no opportunity whatever to protect themselves against an abuse of the law.

I am not making any reflection on the present President of the United States. I am not charging him with getting ready to abuse this law. As a matter of fact, we know that although this power is given to the President of the United States, practically speaking, he will not exercise it himself, but some subordinate will exercise the power for him. Why do I say that? Everybody knows that the burdens of the office of President of the United States have grown so great that the man who occupies that office can not attend to the details himself. He must shift the details to somebody else.

I have no doubt that in his effort to shift the details of this problem to somebody else, the President will endeavor to do it honestly, as I do not believe any man who occupies that high office could do otherwise. I do not say that the man on whom the burden of increasing this taxation may fall, when the President shifts that burden from his own shoulders, is going to act dishonestly.

But I know when you take the questions of competition in foreign trade and the nice issues of value before some appointee of the President and he has sitting at the table with him the special interests, who know all the details of their case upon which he is to decide, they always have the advantage. Mark you, under the terms of the bill, the American people are going to have the doors closed on them. When the bill passed the Senate of the United States it provided for investigation by the Tariff Commission before the President acted, and it provided that the investigation should be in the open light of day, that it should be open and aboveboard. If it had continued to be open and aboveboard the American people would have had an opportunity at least to know that somebody was beginning to move the guns on them and that they might look for the rapid fire guns of taxation to be beating upon their homes before long if they did not enter a timely protest. But when the bill went to conference, in the secret caucus of the majority party, those provisions of the bill which required investigation in the open by the Tariff Commission were stricken out. We are told now that they are to investigate, but they can do so behind closed doors. They can do so in private consultation with the special interests which are to be benefited if the rates are increased, or if the basis of valuation is changed from foreign valuation to American valuation.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. The Senator understands, of course, that the Tariff Commission is a nonpartisan board, half of its members Democrats and the other half Republicans. The experts employed there belong to both political parties. It seems to me there should be no question in the mind of the Senator or anybody else, so far as that is concerned, who cares to know what is being done in reference to matters that are up for hearing before the Tariff Commission. There will be an opportunity for them to be heard. Then I would like to know what was so very secret about the framing of the tariff bill? It was not done behind closed doors. The public knew everything that was going on all the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will kindly allow me to go on with my speech, I shall appreciate it. I do not want to take much time. Of course, what the Senator says is a fact, that it is supposed that the Tariff Commission will be a nonpartisan body. It is supposed that there shall be so many Democrats and so many Republicans on the Board, and theoretically I think that is true. But it is not a question of whether a man sitting on the board is a Democrat or whether he is a Republican. It is a question of whether he is a protectionist and stands for the special interests, or whether he is not and stands for the interest of the American people. I have nothing to say in criticism of the present board. The board will probably be changed in the next few months or in a year or so. But I have noticed that when we have a board charged with duties that mean millions piled upon millions in the pockets of the special interests the American people are not at the offices of the appointing power and they do not know in which way a man's mind is bent, and possibly honestly bent, but the special interests which are looking for something for themselves always know and they want a friendly man at court. When the American people are asleep at home the special interests will be advancing men for membership on the board who are going to take care of their special interests.

They may offer them under the name of Democrat or under the name of Republican, and there may be nothing known as to what their tendencies may be in regard to taxation until after they have been appointed and this great power put in their hands. So that what the Senator from Idaho said is, of course, technically correct, but it is mere words. It means nothing. The material thing is that the American people can not be in Washington to see that they have representatives on the board who will try to keep down taxation. The special interests, which are going to benefit by taxation, will be here trying to get appointed on the board individuals who represent their side of the question. That is what I mean. I do not care whether they are called Democrats or Republicans.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are mostly honest men in both parties, and there are some very big rascals in both parties.

Mr. GOODING. I agree with the Senator in that, but I wish to call his attention to the fact that so far as our Tariff Board is concerned it occupies a position a little different from almost any other governmental agency that I know of, not that I am going to criticize any other agencies, so far as that is concerned, but protection and free trade are the rock upon which the two political parties have divided. I want to say to the Senator that he has on the Tariff Board to-day men who champion the cause of the Democratic Party and are protecting its interests, and I do not think he need be alarmed about the special interests getting anything about which the public will not be thoroughly advised, and especially the leader on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, what I have said I do not want to be understood for a moment as reflecting upon any man who is on the Tariff Board, because I do not mean that at all. More than that, I do not mean to say that the special interests will accomplish their desire by the dishonesty of those men. But men are often misled. The men sitting on the Tariff Board may stand for low tariff duties in most instances, and yet when there is one particular thing—take dyes, for instance—where there is an immense pressure brought to bear, they may be influenced in a thousand different ways, not by money, not by fear, but in a thousand different ways to change their conclusion with reference to the amount of the tax or as to whether it should be levied on the foreign or the domestic basis, that may pile millions on millions into the pockets of the special interests and take them out of the pockets of the American people.

I say that the only safeguard against that is the safeguard which the people of England hundreds of years ago put into their unwritten constitution, that the power of taxation should rest only in the hands of the chosen representatives of the people, men who must be and will be held responsible. If either the Senator from Idaho or myself makes a mistake in levying a burden of taxation on the people of America, and our constituency believe we have made a mistake, they can recall us; they can tell us at the end of our term that they will put somebody in our places. But when we pick out an unknown man, unknown to the mass of the people, no matter how able or how distinguished he may be, and by Executive appointment put in his hands this great power of taxation, the people of the United States no longer have any control over the matter. They can not recall him. They can not in any way reflect their will in his judgment. They are hopeless as long as a law such as this, delegating this great power to a bureaucracy in Washington, remains on the statute books.

I do not think it will last long as a law. If it should last long, if the terms of the bill were to stay on the statute books for two decades, I would predict the rottenest filth and corruption that could grow out of such a bureaucracy, that would be a stench in the nostrils of all good people. But I do not think it will last. I think before that day comes the American people will take the size of what this Congress has done, will realize that the Congress has laid down a great responsibility that was given to them, which the Constitution of the United States has placed in their hands, that they have surrendered a great trust, and the American people will rebuke any party and any set of men who have been guilty of abandoning a trust like this given to their safe-keeping. In the end, perhaps not this year, perhaps two years from now or six years from now, the time will come when the American people will spew out the action of this Congress granting the power which they themselves should exercise, and exercise in the open air of this Chamber and of the House of Representatives, to a board organized to operate in secret conference, and then pass it on to the President of the United States, where it is lost in the private offices of the Executive, without opportunity for the public to know what is going to take place or when it is going to take place, and that the only information the American people will have in regard to whether or not their taxes have been enormously increased or their business destroyed by levying enormous taxes on the basic products from which they must pursue their industry, and the only way they will find it out will be when additional taxation is fired into their faces by proclamation from the White House.

Now, Mr. President, I have only one more word to say in conclusion in reference to the bill, and that is that it seems to overlook entirely the fact that over $10,000,000,000 is owed by foreign nations to this Government. It seems to overlook entirely the fact that an amount equal to $10,000,000,000 is owed by foreign citizens to American citizens. It seems to overlook entirely that we have the gold of the world and that the other countries of the world have no gold with which to pay their debts to us; that foreign nations to a large extent are no longer the carriers of our trade and they have nothing to barter in carrying charges against our goods, and that there is only one way in which the people who owe us, either the Government itself or our citizens, can pay their indebtedness back to us and that is by selling goods to the American people.

I think it is folly and is idle to pretend that we increase the opportunities of trade by inordinately increasing the taxes levied at the customhouse on all the goods that come in from foreign countries. The result will be, Mr. President, if we intend to build a tariff wall around this country and exclude the commerce of other countries, that we shall be unable to collect the debts that are due us. If we build such a wall around the country and inordinately limit the amount of goods which come in, we shall also greatly restrict the power of foreign countries to pay for our goods which are exported. One-half of the cotton which is produced in the South is sold in foreign countries. How is the producer of cotton of the South to secure payment for his crop which he sells abroad if there is no gold with which to pay him, if there are no American securities to return, as there are none, and at the same time by reason of a tax the door is closed to foreign commodities of all kinds coming into the United States?

To a lesser degree, but to a very important degree, the same thing may be said of wheat. It may also be said of many of the agricultural products. It may be said of the iron and steel business, of the cotton manufacturing business, and of a vast deal of the great business of this country. If we continue to close our door by taxation so that nobody can trade with us, in the end it can mean but one thing, that we shall have to reduce production to the point to meet only the consumption of the American people.

When we shall reduce production abnormally in that way, it will mean inordinately low prices for production, idle factories, men without employment; and in the end nothing but disaster can follow such a policy.

Mr. President, we have become the one great creditor Nation of the world. That was not true 10 years ago. We had been a debtor Nation. We can hardly say we were a creditor Nation at the beginning of the Great War. Certainly we were not the great creditor Nation of the world; but to-day we stand alone as the one great creditor Nation of the world. If we will faithfully and fairly read the pages of history, they will tell us the tale. This is not the first time that such a condition of affairs has existed in the world. From the days of the Phœnicians to the present hour there never has been a time when a great nation became the creditor nation of the world that it did not have either to relax the barriers at its customhouses, at its ports of entry, or to surrender its export trade, or to do as China did—build a wall about itself and live within itself, live on its own vitals until by reason of the fact that its ships no longer sailed the seas and it no longer rubbed shoulders with the world it became a decadent nation and its glory and its eminence passed away. That is what the proponents of this bill are deliberately trying to do by the enactment of the pending measure.

I do not say that the results which I have predicted will occur in a day or in an hour—no; it may take a decade for such a policy really to prove itself—but if we continue the policy of exclusion of trade at the customhouse, the hour of this Republic's greatness will have passed and the end of its business success will have been written. However, Mr. President, I predict that long before that hour has come the American people will wake up to the enormities of this proposed legislation; that they will wake up to the false policy which is written in the pages of the pending bill, will repudiate the theory which it represents, will deny the facts which have been cited in its support, and will restore to the statute books a sane and a reasonable customs tariff taxation measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, in eight-point type, some very interesting matter appearing in the Southern Tariff Advocate. It embraces useful information which I think should be preserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order will be entered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Southern Tariff Advocate—A nonpartisan forum for discussion of the tariff and other questions affecting productive industry.]

TEXAS STATE BANKERS' ASSOCIATION DEMANDS PROTECTIVE TARIFF FOR SOUTHERN PRODUCTS.

The same tariff treatment for southern raw material that is being extended manufactured articles in the tariff measure now pending before Congress was advocated by the Texas Bankers' Association at their annual convention at Fort Worth, May 17, 18, and 19, in the following resolution, which was unanimously passed by that body:

"Whereas the value of all securities of Texas banks, the price of every farm product, and the prosperity of the entire South is affected by the tariff measure now pending before Congress: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That so long as the articles of manufacture are protected from foreign competition we insist on a protective tariff on vegetable oils, peanuts, live stock, meats, hides, wool, grain, poultry, and dairy products, and all agricultural, pastoral, and mineral products that will equalize the difference in cost of production between this and foreign countries and urge our Senators and Congressmen to support the schedules demanded by the various organizations authorized to represent southern industries, as submitted through the Southern Tariff Association to the Senate tariff bloc and approved by them."

GOODING AND UNDERWOOD ON THE TARIFF—LEADERS OF OPPOSITE SCHOOLS OF THOUGHT CLEARLY DEFINE THEIR VIEWS.

No tariff discussion in the Senate since the days of Calhoun and Webster has been fraught with quite such national consequences as the debate between Minority Leader UNDERWOOD and Senator GOODING, chairman of the Senate tariff bloc. Fortunately for the South and the Nation, the position of the two parties was clearly set forth in this remarkable colloquy by the respective proponents of free trade and protection. For convenience of readers of the Advocate in analyzing the fundamental principles involved in the present tariff measure, we run the statements of the two leaders in parallel columns:

GOODING.

The position of the Democratic Party is so well defined by the senior Senator from Alabama, the minority leader of the party in the Senate, that there can be no question as to the position of the two great political parties on the question of free trade and protection. He says he belongs to that school of thought which believes that protection is unconstitutional. He goes further and says he believes protection is morally wrong. The Democratic Party has gone on record on several occasions in its belief that protection is unconstitutional, but this is the first time that a great leader of the Democratic Party has gone on record in saying it was morally wrong to protect American industry and American labor.

I believe there is an honest difference in the cost of production in this country on the farm, in the factory, and in the mine from that of foreign countries. And I believe that honest difference must be made up by a protective tariff that will give to the American people their own markets. If Senator UNDERWOOD is right in his contention that it is morally wrong to protect American industry and American labor, then it is morally right to admit free of duty the cheap products of the coolie labor in India and the fellaheen of Egypt, who are in full dress with a breechclout around their loins. In my judgment, to admit these cheap products of Asiatic labor free of duty would be a crime.

If the farmers of this country are willing to live enslaved like the peasants of France and other foreign countries, where they are satisfied with little in life, then we do not need protection, but if we are to maintain our American standard on the farm, in the mills, and in the mines, then our industries must be protected.

Through protection we have built up a standard of living and a standard of wages that is the best in all the world. I believe that standard can be maintained only through a protective tariff, which gives to the American producer the difference between the cost of production on the farm, in the mills, and in the mines here and abroad.

UNDERWOOD.

My view of using the power of government is entirely different from that of the Senator from Idaho. I believe that the great powers of government are intended to be used for the benefit of all the people and not for the promotion of special interests, and I care not whether these special interests come from the fields of agriculture or arise from the smokestacks of a factory; to me they are special interests and obnoxious to the principles I believe in. * * *

I belong to that school of thought which believes that the legislative body of the Congress of the United States has no constitutional rights—I may go further and say no moral right—to use the taxing power of government for the purpose of building up fortunes or tearing them down. I am just as much opposed to levying a tax, under the guise of protecting American industry that the great masses of the American people must contribute out of their pocket, money to build up a special industry and make a few rich, as I am of extending the power of taxation so far as it confiscates the property of the individual and accomplishes by the power and force of taxation what the communism of Russia accomplishes by a red flag.

The Senator from Idaho does not believe in that principle. He announces that the power of taxation in the Federal Government can and should be legitimately used for the purpose of building up agriculture * * *.

When I stood on the bridge and commanded the tariff ship in the House, I did not hesitate to put the products in which I was personally interested on the free list, because I believed they belonged there. I am applying no rule to anyone else that I do not apply to myself.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU STANDS FOR PROTECTION.

The American Farm Bureau stands for protection on agricultural products based on difference in cost of foreign and domestic production, stands for the same degree of protection as that accorded manufacturers of our products. We indorse the agricultural tariff bloc and 33-cent clean content duty on wool. Both rate and method of applying most carefully considered by board group of woolgrowers and we indorse their recommendations. (American Farm Bureau, by C. J. Fawcett.)

MINORITY LEADER KITCHIN OUTLINES POSITION OF DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON TARIFF.

EXCERPT FROM WRITTEN STATEMENT FILED BY CLAUDE KITCHIN, MINORITY LEADER, ON APRIL 14, 1921, PAGE 269, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN, on the part of the minority, submitted the following views of the minority:

"The policies and principles advocated by the Democratic Party and inspiring the continued maintenance of its organization for nearly 100 years forbid our approval of the pending bill and impel us to vigorously protest against its passage.

"Approval of this bill by the Democrats in Congress would be a complete surrender of such principles and abandonment of such policies and a confession that for over a half century the Democratic Party has been wrong and the Republican Party right on the tariff. Further, it will be admission that there is no need for the continued organization of the Democratic Party. Such approval would be an urgent invitation to the farmers of the country, especially of the West and South, to go bodily into the Republican Party—the party of tariff robbery—as the only means of their future salvation.

"If there is a Democrat in Congress or elsewhere who is fooling himself into the belief that by our embracing the doctrine of protection, or his vote for protection, though it be on his home industry, he is going to keep within the folds of the Democratic Party or bring into its ranks the men who favor such protection, then he should at once undeceive himself. A sensible protectionist will go to the party that has taught and practiced protection for 50 years and not to the party that has always opposed it."

NATIONAL FARM ORGANIZATIONS OUTLINE POSITION OF THE NATION'S WEALTH PRODUCERS ON THE TARIFF.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 30, 1922.

Hon. F. R. GOODING,
Chairman Senate Tariff Bloc, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We want to extend the thanks of the producers of this Nation to the tariff bloc for their support of the farm schedules in the permanent tariff measure. We indorse the McCumber-Fordney bill, as it more nearly gives the farmers of the Nation a square deal than any tariff legislation enacted during the present generation, and the first tariff measure ever written based upon the principle that the farmer is entitled to the same treatment in tariff legislation as the manufacturer. We urge Congress to immediately pass the tariff measure and give the producers of the Nation relief.

We resent the intimation frequently expresed upon the floor of the Senate that any person who owns a farm or other property is disqualified from representing his State in the Senate. We consider practical and successful producers better qualified to represent their State in Congress than men who have no knowledge, experience, or intelligent sympathy with the economic problems of the Nation.

Respectfully submitted.

SOUTHERN TARIFF LEADER INDORSES MCCUMBER-FORDNEY TARIFF MEASURE.

JOHN H. KIRBY, PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTHERN TARIFF ASSOCIATION, PROPOSES TO HOLD VICTORY CONGRESS OF THE ASSOCIATION AND CELEBRATE PASSAGE OF THE MEASURE.

"It is the most equitable tariff measure ever placed upon the statute books of this Nation, and the first tariff law in nearly a century that gives the South a square deal with other sections of the country. It has broken the legislative shackles riveted upon the farmers of the South by virtue of tariff legislation compelling them to sell in a free market and buy in a protected one. The measure will add a quarter of a billion dollars per annum to the value of farm products of the South above the price of competitive products in foreign markets. While some of our industries have suffered disappointment, our major products have been well cared for.

"It was around vegetable oils that the Southern Tariff Association centered its fight, as this product is upon every farm in the South. We rejoice that out of eight leading cottonseed and peanut producing States only one Senator voted to place these oils upon the free list—Senator UNDERWOOD, of Alabama. These States are Alabama, Georgia, Texas, Mississippi, Florida, North Carolina, Virginia, and Louisiana.

"It is the first tariff act ever written applying the principle that the farmer is entitled to the same treatment in tariff legislation as the manufacturer, and that principle has come to stay in American politics. The farmers of the South and of the Nation owe the western tariff bloc a vote of thanks for their work in behalf of the producers, and Senator GOODING, chairman of the bloc, has earned the gratitude of the men who toil upon the farms of this country by his unswerving devotion to their interests.

"It was around that principle that the Southern Tariff Association was organized and the producers, bankers, commercial organizations, and newspapers marshaled their forces. Over 70 producing industries, 6,000 banks, 250 commercial organizations, and 500 newspapers in the South joined in the fight, and petitions representing over a million signatures were filed with the Senate. There has been a complete and permanent change in tariff sentiment in the South.

"We are going to hold a victory congress as soon as the bill becomes a law, and at that time the South will celebrate what I consider the most important legislative event in our economic history."

SOUTHERN COMMISSIONERS OF AGRICULTURE FAVOR DUTY ON FARM PRODUCTS.

That southern sentiment is firmly and surely forming in favor of a tariff is further assured by the recent indorsement of the bankers' resolution on tariff recently filed with the Senate Finance Committee by the Southern Tariff Association. The resolution has been indorsed by the following commissioners of agriculture: B. Harris, of South Carolina; G. W. Koiner, of Virginia; T. A. Woods, of Maryland; W. A. Graham, of North Carolina; Harry D. Wilson, of Louisiana; and T. F. Peck, of Tennessee.

The commissioners of agriculture of Georgia, Florida, Texas, and Kentucky have gone on record in favor of a tariff.

Paradoxical as it may seem, the Members of Congress from the South are the last to realize that the South has had a turnover on tariff sentiment, and it was brought about by stern necessity and enlightened discussion of the subject. The sentiment is too well grounded to be dismissed by an appeal to prejudice or to be overpowered by assumed wisdom on the part of Members of Congress.

The producers of the South know they want a tariff, and they will soon learn that to get it they must send men to Congress who will carry out the will of the people.

It is poor business policy for the South to depend upon the tender mercy of protection Senators from other sections of the country to save their industries from destructive foreign competition.

If the South wants a tariff on its products, we must send men to Congress who will vote for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am a firm believer in the principle of protection. My study of the history of my country has taught me that whenever that principle has not been put in operation in our tariff laws the growth of our country and of our industrial institutions has been greatly restricted. So far as I am concerned, I should very much prefer to foster and promote domestic business representing 92 per cent of our total trade and at the same time take our chances of securing our share of foreign trade, amounting to but 8 per cent, than I would to support any measure which would place our industries in jeopardy and perhaps bring disaster to all of the business institutions of the United States.

I recognize the fact, Mr. President, that at the present time and under existing world conditions it has been a difficult problem to write a perfect tariff measure; in fact, I might say that that would be impossible under any circumstances or conditions; but it is not impossible to write a protective bill that will give to the American laboring man, to American industries, and to American trade a fair chance with all the other nations of the world. That is all that we expect to accomplish, and that is what we anticipate will be the result of the enactment of the pending bill—no more, no less.

All the criticisms which have been hurled against the measure from the other side of the Chamber have the same ring, namely, that we are building a protective wall so high that it will not allow foreign goods to enter our country. I wish frankly to state now that the result of the enactment of the proposed law will not have that effect. I admit that it will curtail the importations of many goods into this country, but in that curtailment the ultimate consumer is not going to suffer, for if there has been any one thing demonstrated during the discussion of this bill it has been that all the goods which are imported into this country are sold at just as high a price as possibly can be charged, as high as American consumers will bear.

Statements have been made, Mr. President, that the rates which are carried in the pending bill are higher than were the rates in the Payne-Aldrich law. There are some rates in the bill that are higher than are rates on similar articles in the Payne-Aldrich law, but they are only upon articles as to which there is to-day no question that the imposition of such rates is necessary in order to save the industries of the United States.

I say now that the average equivalent ad valorem rates of the pending bill are lower than the average equivalent ad valorem rates in the Payne-Aldrich law, notwithstanding the increased rates which have been placed upon all farm products and the items embraced in the chemical schedule.

I do not ask the American people to take my word for that statement, but I asked men who are interested in the importation of foreign goods, I asked the tariff experts from one end of the country to the other to take the two measures and compare them and ascertain what the average equivalent ad valorem duties of the pending bill are as compared to those prevailing under the Payne-Aldrich law during the years 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1913.

Our Democratic friends have repeated time and time again that the making of this bill was dictated by the special interests, meaning, of course, dictated by the producers of goods in this country. I deny the statement, and I say now that the greatest propaganda that has ever been instituted in this country and carried on against or for the passage of a bill has been carried on by the special interests that are opposed to a protective tariff, and if they had their way we would have free trade in everything. They would like to see every yard of goods, every article consumed by the American public, made in some foreign country and imported into this country, so that they could make the outrageous profits that they have been making of late. As between special interests controlled by American citizens and special interests controlled by foreigners, I say, let us have the special interests controlled by Americans; but I deny that this bill was written at the instigation or the direction of the special interests, be they American or be they foreign.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] yesterday, in his lengthy speech, took to task the conferees on this bill for not carrying out the action of the House and the action of the Senate. He said that the conferees had assumed powers that they had no right to assume, and in his remarks he referred to a number of items to show it. He referred to the potash and embargo conspiracy, as he termed it, and said that the conferees had failed to carry out the wishes of the Senate and the House.

What are the facts? The House placed a duty upon potash, beginning with 2½ cents per pound and running for a term of five years, and after the five-year period potash was to be on the free list. The second year, as I remember, the duty was to be 2 cents, the third year it was to be 1½ cents, and the two succeeding years 1 cent a pound. That was the decision of the House. The Senate struck out that provision and placed potash upon the free list. It went to conference. The conferees were to agree between a rate that I have named, as passed in the House, and potash upon the free list.

I want to say to the Senate that the conferees of the House took the position—and, I think, a wise one—that if there was any article in this whole bill that should be protected on the principle of protecting an American industry it was potash. A compromise was reached between the two Houses, imposing a duty of 1½ cents a pound on potash for the term of three years. When the conference report went back to the House, the House, having heard from the farmers of the country, I suppose, decided to reverse their action when the bill passed and instructed the conferees to return and insist that potash be placed upon the free list. The conferees met again and did place potash upon the free list; and I think it will not be many years until those who are opposed to the protection of potash asked for by the conference will learn that a mistake was made in not maintaining the industry in the United States.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] yesterday referred to a claim that was made that an agreement or trust with regard to potash was consummated between France and Germany, and from his remarks I gathered that he was not afraid of a German or a French trust. They are all good trusts. He claimed they will look after the American people. They will sell the potash, of course, just as cheaply as it is possible for them to sell it. It is only American trusts that are bad. German trusts and French trusts are to receive his benediction, and they are to look after the American farmer, who is to buy his potash in the future from them.

Let us see what the facts in the case are.

The cablegrams which I am about to read do not come from any interest in America. They come from Paris and from Frankfort on the Main, and I shall take the time to read them.

On August 26, 1922, the American people were informed by cable as follows:

PARIS, August 25.

The American farmer probably will have to pay more for his potash this autumn if the conferences between the French and German potash syndicates at The Hague are successful.

The potash groups, who practically control the world supply, are anxious to cooperate to make their own prices and divide the territory. The first attempt of the potash interests to cooperate led to a meeting at The Hague in May, but failed because the Germans then hoped to undersell the French because of the collapse of the mark. The French then threatened to meet any German price.

It is reported that Herr Forthmann, representing the German syndicate, and Louis Mercier, representing the Alsatian mines, are reaching an agreement, and the leading French industrial papers are greatly alarmed, fearing higher prices to French consumers. Real ownership of the Alsatian mines just released from sequestration is disputed, and those interested are threatening to carry the matter before parliament in October.

That was published on August 26. On September 8 of 1922, this month, while the conferees had this bill under consideration, the following cablegram was received from Frankfort on the Main:

FRANKFORT ON THE MAIN, September 7.

Definite announcement was made here to-day that certain German and French potash interests intend to combine. Negotiations are almost concluded for a merger of their mining properties.

That Germany and France would form a combination in the potash industry with the object of dividing the American market was anticipated in Washington more than a week ago.

At that time it was pointed out that representatives of the French industry, impatient to enter the field after failing to get contracts here about two years ago, openly threatened to make some agreement with German manufacturers in order to break into the American market. The threat was repeated several times by the Frenchmen, it is understood.

The effect of the agreement about to be consummated, it is believed, will tighten the grip Germany now has on the American market. Should prices increase to a very great extent, however, it is possible that American manufacturers may be inspired to resume production.

Mr. President, that can not be. The plants that are lying idle to-day, with tens of millions of dollars invested in them, invested at the appeal of our Government during the war, will be nothing but rusted junk in a very short time. No; the American farmer need not expect that. With this bill a law, the potash industry in the United States is destroyed, and we all know it, and the results will speak for themselves in a very short time.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read the rest of this cablegram; but the very next day, September 9, a cablegram came announcing the combination of all of the potash producers of France and Germany; and, Mr. President, watch and see in a few years what the farmer will pay for his potash.

I can not understand why some Senators have been so alarmed over the chemical industry. It must live, no matter what rates are imposed, regardless of whether an embargo is imposed or not. Potash is an item that is just as vital in time of war as any other chemical produced in all the world. The potash industry was established during the war, as the Senator from North Carolina stated yesterday. All of the chemicals manufactured during the war, all of the industries created because of the war, must be protected with rates which amount to virtual embargoes, but the potash producer must say when this bill becomes a law, "All that I put into the industry at the earnest appeal of my Government is lost." Some of the plants were not half completed.

As far as producing potash in the United States is concerned, we have unlimited quantities to furnish the farmers for thousands of years. But it has been decreed that that industry should be destroyed, and so let it be.

We have heard repeated in this Chamber time and time again that the duties which have been placed in the wool schedule will increase the price of clothing to the American people, and some have gone so far as to say that they will increase the cost of a suit of clothes from $7 to $25. We find advertisements in some of the leading papers of the United States asking the people to come and purchase their clothing now, because when this bill becomes a law the rates of duty upon the clothing will be so high that their clothing will be advanced in price.

Mr. President, there is not a word of truth in that. The rates of duty in the wool schedule, as agreed to in this conference report, are lower than the rates under existing law. I do not care who says they are not; I say that they are, and I can prove it to any man who will give me the time to do so. Such advertisements in the papers, announcing the statement I have already made, are put in for a purpose; they are not put in because of the rates of duty, but those dealers have a lot of old-style clothes on hand they want to get rid of.

On yesterday the Senator from North Carolina tried to make the Senate believe that because there were no importations of scoured wool into the United States to speak of, and that the equivalent ad valorem on scoured wool was higher than the equivalent ad valorem on the wool in the grease, we, basing our rates on the scoured content, were increasing the rates of duty upon wool a hundred and some odd per cent. I forgive the Senator from North Carolina. He did not know what he was talking about. No wool man ever would have made such a statement. When this bill goes into operation there will be no more scoured wool imported into the United States than there was when the duty was imposed on the wool in the grease. No manufacturer prefers to buy scoured wool. He buys his wool in the grease. Every manufacturer of woolen goods must of necessity assort his wool according to the class of goods he is making.

After the wool is assorted into grades, according to the manufacturer's wishes, it may be purchased in the scoured condition, but it will never be, and what few thousand pounds were imported, referred to by the Senator from North Carolina yesterday, the equivalent ad valorem being higher than the equivalent ad valorem on the grease basis, were nothing more nor less than some samples of wool which were brought in in the scoured condition. There were only a few thousand dollars' worth, and when this bill goes into effect there will be but a few thousand dollars' worth imported in the scoured condition.

We were led to believe that as soon as this law took effect all of the wool coming into this country would come in scoured, and that because a few thousand pounds came in as samples, with a high ad valorem duty, therefore all the wool coming in under this bill would carry that exceedingly high ad valorem. It is a mighty dangerous thing for a man to get up on a platform or in any public place and talk about a thing he does not know anything about.

I say to the American people not 1 cent of protection is afforded in this bill that is not open and aboveboard. There is not a cent of concealed protection in it. It was the concealed protection which made Schedule K of the Payne-Aldrich law so obnoxious to the American people.

Yesterday the Senator from North Carolina referred to a letter from a woolen manufacturer, a man making coat linings from coarse wool, who admitted in that letter that under the Payne-Aldrich rates his wool cost him 16 cents a pound scoured. You did not see that manufacturer complaining because he had a compensatory duty of 44 cents for that 16 cents. No; he was perfectly satisfied. But we say to him, "No concealed protection shall be given to you under this bill. You shall pay 31 cents a pound on the basis of the scoured wool, and then we give you a compensatory duty of 31 cents per pound, plus the loss there is in manufacturing the scoured wool into the finished product."

He enjoyed the privilege in years past of not only having the 55 cents protection on his wool, but he has had the extra protection between the 16 cents and the 44 cents per pound on the wool that went into his goods. That day has passed. That will never occur again or be enjoyed by this same manufacturer.

That is one of the changes made all the way through this bill. If cloth is made of cotton and wool, the manufacturer gets protection based only on the amount of wool in the goods. Under the Payne-Aldrich law if there were 99 per cent cotton and 1 per cent wool, he got protection on the basis of 100 per cent wool.

Some time ago I referred to the fact that in 1910, and during the discussion of the Payne-Aldrich bill in 1909, there was carried in all the press of the United States a statement that upon the rich man's wool blanket the rate of duty was 40 per cent and on a poor man's blanket it was 485 per cent. The statement was true, but how did that happen? What law was written that would justify such a statement?

I looked up the matter of the dozen blankets which had been imported, and found that they were cotton blankets, with a selvedge of wool, and because the selvedge was of wool the whole blanket paid the wool duty. The possibility of that sort of thing has been eliminated from this bill, not only as to silk and cotton and wool but as to every other mixture in the textile schedules. So when an American business man, an American importer, an American consumer, reads the bill he knows what the protection is, and that the protection purported to be given is all the protection he will get, and that there is no more to be added from any other source.

Another statement the Senator from North Carolina made yesterday, although I think it was a quotation from the same letter to which I have referred, was that the skirting of wool added only 5 per cent to the value of the wool. As time is flying, I do not want to take the time to go into the details of it, but that is perfectly absurd. It is through the skirting that instead of having 33 cents on the scoured wool they only paid 18 cents.

The 33 cents was based upon the wool shrinking 66⅔ per cent, and skirting means that they take all of the head and neck wool, all the tag locks off, and all the wool from the legs; they ship only the body of the fleece here, with all the dirt shaken out of it which it is possible to do, and the wool in that condition would shrink in many classes of wool 25 per cent less than in its natural condition when sheared from the sheep.

Mr. President, I try to be consistent in everything I do in this life. If I am a protectionist, I am a protectionist. I am not only a protectionist for any one item but I am a protectionist for everything that needs protection from one end of this land to the other. I have gone through the RECORD very carefully, and I find some very strange votes have been cast upon the pending bill. I can hardly understand why a Senator would vote for, say, a dozen different items because his State is specially interested in them, placing rates upon them even higher than the committee reported to the Senate, and then turn around and vote against the bill. What good does it do his people? What good does it do the industries in his State? It is a negative vote pure and simple, and I do not believe that the people of any State are going to be deceived by any such action. For the RECORD I want briefly to state what some of the votes were, so we can see just what Senators have done.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] voted for increased duties on citrate of lime, amorphous graphite, burned magnesite, cattle, fresh beef and veal, honey, unshelled almonds, shelled almonds, unshelled walnuts, shelled walnuts, soya beans, vegetable oils, nonedible oils, long-staple cotton, wool, hides of cattle, and crude asbestos. The Senator from Arizona voted against reducing duties on citrus fruits, olive oil, manganese ore, shelled almonds, rice, peanuts not shelled, wool, and amorphous graphite.

The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] voted for increased duties on amorphous graphite. He voted against decreasing duties on manganese ore and on rice.

The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] voted against placing tomatoes on the free list in certain months of the year.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator to read the votes of a few Republicans and not take all of his time reading the votes of Democrats?

Mr. SMOOT. I take for granted, of course, that Republicans voted as they believe, for protection.

Mr. HARRISON. They have not done it in the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not discussing how the Republicans voted. I am calling attention to the votes of Democrats upon certain items produced in their States and then voted against them.

Mr. HARRISON. The Republicans are excusable, because they always vote differently from what they promise.

Mr. SMOOT. That the Senator may say if he desires. I am not going to refer to three of our Democratic friends, because they have been consistent in voting for protective rates and then voted for the bill.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] voted against placing tomatoes on the free list during certain months of the year.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] voted for an increased duty of 5 per cent ad valorem on chemical wood pulp and a duty on hides of cattle and citrus fruits. He voted against decreasing duties on sugar, putting tomatoes on the free list during certain months of the year, and amorphous graphite.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that according to the arguments as they were made here and as I understand the situation all those votes were for purely revenue duties. The duty on wood pulp would be a revenue duty and the duty on tomatoes would be a revenue duty.

Mr. SMOOT. That was a protective duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. I differ with the Senator in that regard because the duty as finally fixed on tomatoes of one-half cent a pound amounts to 16 per cent ad valorem. He can not call that a protective duty, I think. Twenty millions pounds of tomatoes were brought into the country from Cuba and the Bahamas last season, and a duty of 1 cent a pound, I think, was a reasonable duty.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator as to the reasonableness of the rate, but——

Mr. FLETCHER. My support of it was based upon the proposition that it would have yielded at least $200,000 revenue.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, I have heard during the discussion of this bill rates on certain items manufactured in the United States carrying 4.9 per cent denounced as outrageous.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would depend on the item.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it would.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am saying that a 16 per cent ad valorem duty on tomatoes is no protective duty.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would be a protection and they ought to have it. I am not complaining about the rate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they ought to have more. I think it was a revenue duty wholly.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] voted for increased duties on vegetable oils for nonedible use and long-staple cotton. He voted against decreasing duties on peanuts not shelled.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] voted for increased duties on amorphous graphite, crystalline graphite, soya beans, vegetable oils for nonedible use, and long-staple cotton. He voted against decreasing duties on manganese ore, peanuts not shelled, tomatoes on the free list during certain months, and amorphous graphite.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator mentioned the fact that I voted to impose a duty on graphite.

Mr. SMOOT. That was not the only item the Senator mentioned.

Mr. HEFLIN. I stated at the time that the graphite mines in the United States were closed, literally closed and put out of business by the importation of foreign graphite produced by the cheap labor of Europe, and by imposing the duty we would derive some revenue for the Government. That was true of other items for which I voted. I said at the time that if the Government could derive revenue from those sources we would get some good from it and if incidentally the people who were struggling under a Republican administration were enabled to live that was all well and good.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator did not follow out that principle, Mr. President, when the article happened to be produced in some other State than his own. He did not follow out that principle with reference to potash. He voted against a duty on potash, and yet it is a fact that all the potash plants are now closed and the members of the Fertilizer Trust have signed contracts for their supply of potash for the present season with German and French producers—75 per cent with German producers and 25 per cent with French producers.

Mr. HEFLIN. Because every farmer in the country is interested in cheap potash and every consumer of farm products is interested in cheap potash. I was voting for the mass and against the class.

Mr. SMOOT. It all depends on who is the man whose ox is gored. It happened to be that amorphous graphite was produced in the State of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not all of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; but a great part of it.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is produced in other States.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not blame the Senator for voting for it. All I would like to have the Senator do is to be consistent.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is consistent. I am not a free trader. I voted for the Underwood law, which brought in $300,000,000 of revenue, and under which we are obtaining that much revenue now. I believe in a tariff for revenue from those sources, but I do not believe in holding up the American consumer and taking money out of his pocket and making a few people rich. That is the difference between myself and the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator can speak for himself, but not for the Senator from Utah. The Senator from Alabama was perfectly willing to vote for a duty upon graphite to put money in the pockets of the wealthy who control the graphite in his State. He was perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. HEFLIN. But those people are out of business.

Mr. SMOOT. So are the potash people out of business.

Mr. HEFLIN. They are out of business by reason of your deflation policy.

Mr. SMOOT. Nonsense; we have heard that cry from the Senator many, many times.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] voted for increased duties on amorphous graphite, crystalline graphite, crude magnesite, dead-burned magnesite, caustic magnesite, cattle, fresh beef and veal, fresh lamb, bacon and hams, prepared, honey, vegetable oil for nonedible use, wool, sugar, hides of cattle, crude asbestos, coal-tar products, citrus fruits, and long-staple cotton. The Senator from New Mexico voted against decreasing duties on manganese ore, rice, milled rice, wool, sugar, amorphous graphite, magnesite, and against putting tomatoes on the free list for certain months of the year.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] voted for increased duties on coal-tar products and voted against decreasing duties on manganese ore and magnesite.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] voted for increased duties on amorphous graphite, crude magnesite, cattle, fresh beef and veal, and fresh lamb. The Senator from Nevada voted against decreasing the duty on graphite.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] voted for increased duties on rice, milled rice, and tomatoes during certain months.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] voted for increased duties on amorphous graphite, crystalline graphite, cattle, fresh beef and veal, fresh lamb, bacon, hams, and so forth, prepared, lard compounds and substitutes, soya beans, vegetable oils for nonedible use, long-staple cotton, wool, hides of cattle, coal-tar products, and citrus fruits.

The Senator from Texas voted against decreasing duties on manganese ore, rice, milled rice, peanuts not shelled, linseed or flaxseed oil, wool, tomatoes, and amorphous graphite.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] voted for increased duties on peanuts not shelled.

The junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] voted for increased duties on citrus fruits and long-staple cotton. He voted against decreasing duties on peanuts not shelled, sugar, tomatoes, and amorphous graphite.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] voted against decreasing duties on manganese ore, wool, and amorphous graphite, and putting tomatoes on the free list during certain months of the year.

There are some Democratic Senators who voted consistently for protective duties, but the list is so long that I am not going to read it. Not only that, but they were consistent in their position because they voted for the bill upon its final passage.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that it is quite reasonable that a Senator on this side of the Chamber, who does not believe in the doctrine of protection as advocated by the Senator from Utah, might vote for a duty on an article produced in his own State on the theory that there ought not to be any discrimination in a bill like this? If we are going to have protection all over the country and for the products of other States, would not a Senator be justified in voting for tariff duties on products of his own State, so there would not be discrimination against the products of his State, and still be consistent in voting against the bill as a whole because he was opposed to the whole proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. If I were a Democrat, I would be consistent and I should only vote for Democratic rates or free entry of goods. The Underwood bill, which was a Democratic measure, did not carry such rates as Democratic Senators voted for on the pending measure. I do not believe those Senators who may vote for certain rates because the articles affected are produced in their States and then turn around and vote against the bill will ever make any political headway by such actions.

Mr. President, the total number of Democrats in the Senate is 36; 38.8 per cent of the entire number of Democratic Senators voted for amendments which would increase the rates of duty, and 47.2 per cent of the entire number of Democratic Senators voted against amendments which would lower rates of duty. On the vote on the final passage of the bill, 11.1 per cent of all the Democratic Senators whose votes were recorded voted for the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator from Utah figured out, on a percentage basis, the number of Republicans who voted to reduce duties below the rates which were originally fixed by the Finance Committee and which were changed when the bill reached the floor of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. The percentage would be so small that there would be no need of computing it.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell us now how many amendments reducing the rates from those originally fixed by the committee have been adopted and were voted for by Republican Members of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I could not do that.

Mr. HARRISON. The number has been quite large.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it has not been very large.

Mr. HARRISON. Has it not been something over a thousand, would not the Senator say?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. Not quite so many as that?

Mr. SMOOT. Not quite so many as that, and not quite a dozen.

However, Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi is begging the question. I know that there will be a few Republicans who will vote against the passage of the bill, but those Republicans are rather consistent, because they have voted against every rate that they had a chance to vote for, and we on this side of the Chamber never expected they would vote for the bill.

Mr. President, I do not believe that it is necessary for me now to go into the details of each schedule of the pending bill and show the ad valorem equivalent of the various rates. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] on yesterday in his speech placed in the RECORD a comparison between the Dingley, the Payne-Aldrich, and the Underwood laws and the pending bill.

So far as I am concerned, and so far as the Republican Party is concerned, we have no hesitation in going before the people with this measure. The only difficulty we may have to encounter when it becomes necessary for us to present it to the American people is that it will not have been in operation long enough to demonstrate to them that when it shall have been fairly tested it will bring prosperity from one end of this land to the other. If this bill had become a law six or eight months ago I have no doubt that now every wheel of every factory in all parts of the country would be humming and that the laboring man in this country would be receiving wages not only twice as high or three times as high or four times as high but in many cases ten times as high as those received by other laboring men in the world.

I never wish to see the day when our country will be on any other footing than that on which every Republican administration has placed it when a protective tariff measure has been in operation.

Mr. President, I wish to say frankly that there are some rates in the bill that, perhaps, should be lowered, but they are very few indeed, and in those cases I do not know that they will make very much difference as to the price which the ultimate consumer will pay for the articles concerned.

Complaint has been made to-day of the extraordinary powers which are granted in the bill to the President of the United States. I think the provision conferring that power is one of the best provisions in the bill. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina in the statement which he made on yesterday, in consonance with statements that I have made on the floor several times, that the President of the United States following the investigation made by the Tariff Commission is not likely to increase the rates which are fixed in the bill. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] expressed the opinion that all the rates in the bill were excessive, and therefore no power should be granted to the President to increase them. I think, perhaps, there may be two or three articles covered by the bill upon which, after a thorough investigation has been made, the President perhaps would of necessity, upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission, increase the rates, but where there is one article the rate on which will be increased, let me say to the Senate now, there will be many on which there will be a decrease of rates if the President shall exercise the power which is granted to him under the bill. This must of necessity be on account of the unsettled condition of trade and finances in all of Europe.

The administrative features of the bill, Mr. President, have been greatly strengthened. The amendments made to them are such as the administration of past tariff laws has demonstrated to be absolutely necessary. I do not think there have been any complaints made against the changes.

For the bill as a whole, Mr. President, I bespeak now the hearty approval by the American people, and I predict that it will bring prosperity to all the people of the United States from one end of the land to the other.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I regret that I was absent and did not hear the speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], as I should like to have done; but I do not rise to address myself to the pending bill. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a paper which has been prepared by the National Retail Dry Goods Association in reply to charges contained in a document issued by the Senate Finance Committee and circulated very largely throughout the United States, with reference to excessive prices which have been charged for imported merchandise by certain retailers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order will be made.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire that the letter which is addressed to me by the National Retail Dry Goods Association transmitting the document may also be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, September 18, 1922.

Hon. FURNIFOLD M. SIMMONS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SIMMONS: It is with an appreciation of the desire of a vast majority of the Members of Congress for basic facts upon which to predicate decisions and avoid prejudiced viewpoint that this statement is brought to your attention.

This statement is prepared for the purpose of presenting for your consideration sworn statements of fact in direct contradiction of statements contained in a document given extensive national circulation under the title of "Imported Merchandise and Retail Values," 100,000 copies of which were printed upon the order of the Senate Finance Committee, and purporting to show an extreme spread between the alleged costs in countries of presumed origin and retail prices in dry goods and department stores located principally in New York.

This document contains photographic reproductions of certain articles purchased at retail and conveys to the uninformed an impression of extremely large profits which on the basis of facts herein presented do not actually occur. The document prepared by the Senate Finance Committee presumes that the articles purchased at retail are identical with certain items passing through customs upon which values are fixed by appraisal and submits only the alleged cost in country of presumed origin, cost of transportation, and the landed cost on the American wharf, conveying to the uninformed reader the belief that the spread between landed cost and retail price is one of arbitrary profits, entirely neglecting to include importers' margins, including cost of operation, as well as ignoring wages, rent, insurance, and other elements of operating cost necessary to the conduct of business institutions.

All of the articles referred to herein were purchased by the retailer or wholesaler who had purchased from the importer with but two exceptions.

As you will discover in reading the affidavits contained in this statement one of the articles which purports to be of foreign origin is in fact an article of domestic production, and you will note that the investigator was advised of this fact at the time of making the purchase.

The Government must of necessity recognize the fact as presented in the census of 1921, that more than 50 per cent of the total population is supported by wages and earnings secured for services rendered in the distribution of essential commodities. The effect of an unwarranted attack upon so large a proportion of the population of the United States as is contained in the document circulated by the Senate Finance Committee would be to reduce income, lower the standard of living, and at the same time, as has been set forth previously by this association, increase the cost of living.

With confidence that this statement and the facts which it contains will receive your earnest consideration, we are,

Yours very truly,

NATIONAL RETAIL DRY GOODS ASSOCIATION.
HAROLD R. YOUNG, Washington Secretary.

FACTS PRESENTED BY THE NATIONAL RETAIL DRY GOODS ASSOCIATION IN REPLY TO CERTAIN CHARGES CONTAINED IN "IMPORTED MERCHANDISE AND RETAIL PRICES," ISSUED BY THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

After examination of Senate committee print, Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices, printed for the use of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, July 31, 1922, in which is exhibited merchandise from a number of our member and other stores, the executive committee of the National Retail Dry Goods Association has authorized me, in the interest of simple truth and justice, to convey to you the following:

PREAMBLE.

We have noted the several statements made on the floor of the Senate to the effect that the spread between the landed United States cost of articles of imported merchandise and the retail selling price is unwarrantedly great, and the attempted inference that the retail department stores of the United States are interested in foreign merchandise because of the inordinate profits that could be obtained upon it.

Authoritative answer has been made previously (1) that the volume of imported merchandise handled by our member stores does not equal 5 per cent of their total net volume of annual sales of approximately $2,000,000,000; (2) that the earnest belief of the department stores of this country that the tariff law should not be prohibitive lies in the competition which it gives to the domestic manufacturer to hold down prices and the consequent lower retail prices to the consumer; (3) that this country is now the greatest creditor Nation in the world and needs the export market for domestic prosperity, as President Harding expressed it, "We can not expect to sell where we are not willing to buy."

We note on page 2 of the Senate committee print, Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices, the following: "In submitting this report on the tariff exhibit to the Senate the Finance Committee calls attention to the following facts established by the joint investigation of the Treasury Department and the committee. No. 3. The vast amount and percentage of spread between the foreign valuation and American retail selling price and the total landed cost and price to the consumer"; and figures are given on different articles purporting to show that the retail spread between the "total landed cost and the price to the consumer" varies between 153 per cent and 2,588 per cent.

We desire to point out (1) that the exhibit is neither comprehensive nor representative of imported merchandise brought to our country, the import articles of chief importance being conspicuous by their absence; the articles shown being mostly "specialties" in small demand, comprising as they do a cuckoo clock, imitation pearl necklace, barbers' clipper, razor, curling iron, paper thermos bottle, English straw hat, cane, carving set, pocket knife, decorated plate, flapjack turner, briar pipe, smoothing iron, harmonica, bird cage, violin, dental mirror, barometer, microscope, violin case, egg cutter, accordion, violin bridges, cornet, jumping dog, shuco monkey, dog muzzle, coronation cord, and roulette wheel, etc.

That the exhibit is neither comprehensive nor representative is shown most clearly by a summary of the numbers of articles in the exhibit brought from each country, with figures (supplied by the Department of Commerce) of our imports from and exports to each country for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, as given below. Such analysis shows that 87, or almost 80 per cent of the 122 articles shown are from Germany, Austria, and other Central European countries, whose tremendously depreciated currencies have brought unprecedented conditions. You will note that the countries with which we do the largest import trade are practically not represented in your exhibit.

	Articles in exhibit.	Imports from.	Exports to.
Great Britain	10	$270,353,653	$343,897,314
Japan	4	307,514,995	248,716,339
France	10	139,588,185	230,939,597
China	1	109,410,796	100,853,052
Germany	74	95,592,004	350,442,433
Italy	3	61,346,780	138,174,639
Holland	1	45,226,179	170,880,503
Switzerland	2	41,556,266	5,016,246
Belgium	4	42,792,800	103,449,034
Norway	1	11,739,624	29,789,272
Austria	2	2,603,807	1,317,628
Czechoslovakia	7	12,501,554	824,789
Yugoslavia	1	155,920	1,831,187
Denmark	2	3,988,645	36,453,208
Total	122	1,144,371,208	2,262,585,251

We point out to you that there must be some significance in the fact that comparatively so few articles are included in your exhibit from countries whose currencies are on a fairly stable international gold basis and whose shipments to this country are of so much greater value than those countries whose currencies have undergone steady and drastic depreciation and whose shipments to this country are of so much less value, particularly as inquiry among our member stores shows that the facts about representative import merchandise, carrying the usual mark up, were furnished to your investigators and not used or referred to in your exhibit.

We desire to point out to you the particular importance of the export figures quoted above to the manufacturing interests of the United States in view of the estimate of the United States Department of Commerce that the productive capacity of the United States is 25 per cent in excess of its capacity for consumption. As expressed by Governor Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, on September 23, 1921, "We must continue to buy from various countries those things which they can produce better or more cheaply than we can and exchange commodities with them. If we determine to do business with and for ourselves alone it seems inevitable that we must reduce our production to meet normal American requirements."

Such a policy of restriction of our international trade would inevitably lead to unemployment and other attendant conditions inimical to United States labor, whose conditions of living we are all interested in maintaining and improving. In addition to this the necessary curtailment of production would lead to higher wholesale prices on finished products, on which prices retail prices are based. As a plain statement of fact the retailer is, of all the interests of our commercial life, particularly interested in the maintenance of general and continuous prosperity, for on this prosperity of the retailer is chiefly based. High retail prices make for restriction of retail distribution, reasonable retail prices for its increase. The policy of the majority of department stores of the country has always been, and published figures prove this fact, to secure a large distribution at moderate profit rather than smaller distribution at large profit.

The importance to our manufacturing and producing interests and in our whole country of maintaining and extending our export trade and of maintaining also our import trade to help to finance our export trade seems so clearly established as to render denial idle.

We desire to point out (2) that although the exhibit itself is neither comprehensive nor representative of import merchandise, it is at fault to a yet greater degree in that the figures quoted on a number of exhibts are totally inaccurate. We attach herewith sustaining affidavits from R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.), B. Altman & Co. (Inc.), Bloomingdale Bros., Stern Bros., Gimbel Bros., James McCutcheon & Co., Saks & Co., F. A. O. Schwarz, Rothschild & Co., of Chicago, etc., which deny specifically under oath the figures contained in your exhibit as relating to items attributed to them. The facts attested are so at variance with the exhibit as to invalidate your entire exhibit. (See supporting affidavits.)

Inasmuch as Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices does not specify in any case how the figures were computed, it is impossible for us to state what is the cause of the errors in the figures of your exhibit, but we desire to point out two possible and probable causes of those errors:

(1) The rate of exchange at which the foreign price was converted into the American dollar—a very vital point in the figuring of an invoice or of a landed cost and consequently of the percentage of spread between the foreign value and the American retail selling price. For instance, if an article were purchased in Germany for 100 marks at a time when the mark was selling at 1 cent and landed in New York at the time when the mark was selling at one-tenth of 1 cent and the importer had purchased marks at the date of purchase, and your investigator had figured the invoice at the lowered mark price at the date of delivery, the cause of some errors in your exhibit is easily explained. The sworn figures in certain of our supporting evidence lead us to believe that this error was made in some cases.

(2) "The spread between the total landed cost and the price to the consumer" is not the excessive one shown if the goods have been purchased in this country by the retailer from a separate importer. In such cases—and there are several in our sworn evidence given below—the resulting per cent of spread is conclusively contradicted and invalidated. It would be nearly as unfair to charge with profiteering the retail distributor of bread by quoting the percentage of spread between the cost of the flour and the retail price of the loaf as to eliminate the separate importer's expenses and profit, as has been done in some of the items of your exhibit.

As a matter of fact and record the absurdity of the charge of profiteering by department stores has been thoroughly established by the investigations of several Government and independent agencies.

First. By the United States Department of Justice, which completed in 1920, under the Lever Act, a searching investigation of retail stores handling both domestic and import merchandise, with the result that out of the thousands of stores investigated practically no cases of profiteering were found.

Second. By the bureau of business research of the graduate school of business administration of Harvard University, from whose report we quote: "Profit and loss statements for the year 1920 were obtained from 305 stores located in 39 States, with aggregate net sales of $535,193,000, varying per store from $71,000 to $29,000,000. The average net profit was shown to be 1.8 per cent of sales."

Bulletin No. 33, issued under date of August, 1922, by the graduate school of business administration, Harvard University, contains on page 31 the following table relative to net profit and loss by representative department stores:

TABLE II.—Net profit or loss in 1921 in five Federal reserve districts

	NET PROFIT OR LOSS.	Per cent.
Boston	profit	2.0
New York	do	1.7
Cleveland	do	0.5
Chicago	loss	0.2
San Francisco	profit	2.4

Third. By the Joint Congressional Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, appointed to investigate the prices of food, clothing, etc., for the purpose of finding out whether profiteering was going on or whether the spread between the cost of producing and what consumers had to pay was due to other causes.

Hon. SYDNEY ANDERSON, the very able chairman of that commission, completed and published its report last July, in which we find these words: "Retail dry-goods profits are found to have averaged 5.4 per cent for the nine-year period from 1913 to 1921. From this profit must be deducted such items as shortage in inventory value of merchandise, Federal taxes and stock moving reductions in response to price decline or movement of stock accumulation." Such deductions would certainly bring the true net-profit figures to less than 4 per cent, which is in sharp and conclusive contradiction to the general and prejudiced intimation of excessive profit conveyed by the figures of your exhibit.

Your attention is directed to part 4 of the Report of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, page 174, Table D6, showing net profit for 1913, 7.2 cents; 1916, 7.3 cents; 1917, 6.1 cents; 1918, 5.9 cents; 1919, 4.9 cents; and 1920, 6.4 cents. The report contained the following comment: "The largest profit was obtained in 1916, when the average was 7.3 cents for each dollar of sales. The profit on retail dry goods averaged 5.4 cents per dollar of sales over the period 1918–1921."

We are authoritatively informed that, in addition to a large issue already circulated, the Senate Finance Committee purposes to print an additional 100,000 copies of "Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices," in response to orders received from parties who would directly benefit through an increase in tariff rates. We very earnestly suggest the impropriety and unfairness of spreading such incomplete, inaccurate, and misleading information.

In conclusion, we desire to say that, whatever the cause, the figures given in your exhibit are so inaccurate and misleading—as shown by our supporting affidavits—and some of the conclusions drawn are so unwarranted and misleading that we respectfully request that a reprint be made of Senate committee print "Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices" and that this entire statement be included therein.

By order of the executive committee.

EXHIBIT B.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, ss:

Charles E. Davis, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he is the president of Rothschild & Co., an Illinois corporation which conducts a department store business in its building on State Street between Jackson Boulevard and Van Buren Street, and that he has been president of said company for more than 20 years last past.

Affiant further states that his attention has been called to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, dated June 9, 1922, relative to the investigation of imported merchandise and the retail selling price of same in the United States, and that said report contains a statement that ladies' kid gloves, 16-button, 24 inches, were purchased June 12, 1922, from said Rothschild & Co. in Chicago, Ill., at retail price of $6.95 per pair, and that said gloves were made in Germany, and that the landed cost of said gloves in the United States was $1.20½ per pair.

Affiant further states that he has made a careful investigation of the facts and that he finds that said Rothschild & Co. has not imported any German kid gloves since the year 1914; that its purchases of 16-button kid gloves from importers and jobbers in the United States for the past two years have consisted of French, Belgian, and German kid gloves which have ranged in price to Rothschild & Co. from $42.50 to $65 per dozen, and that so far as he has been able to determine, the pair of gloves purchased by the Senate Finance Committee on June 12, 1922, referred to in the said report of the Secretary of the Treasury, was out of a lot of kid gloves purchased by Rothschild & Co. in the United States at $65 per dozen.

EXHIBIT C.

Julius G. Kugelman, of lawful age, being duly sworn deposes and says that he is vice president of Stern Bros., a corporation engaged in the retail dry goods business in the city of New York.

That his attention has been directed to the Senate committee print of a document entitled "Imported merchandise and retail prices" printed for the use of the Committee of Finance of the United States Senate July 31, 1922, and particularly to Exhibit No. 55 on page 56, as follows:

Country of origin, France.
Value in France (per yard), 1.6 cents.
Charges (transportation, insurance, freight, etc.), one-tenth cent.
Duty (rate, 60 per cent and 7 cents per pound), 1 cent.
Landed cost in United States, 2.7 cents.
Retail price in United States, 8 cents.
Percentage of retail price to landed cost, 196 per cent.

ARTICLE PURCHASED FROM STERN BROS., NEW YORK CITY (1922).

Affiant states the facts to be in reference to this Valenciennes cotton lace, that this lace was purchased by Stern Bros. from Goldenberg Bros., importers, of 109–111 Fifth Avenue, New York City, at a cost to said Stern Bros. of 61 cents per dozen yards, and sold same for 8 cents per yard, instead of the cost to said Stern Bros. of 2.7 cents per yard, the cost was 5 1/12 cents per yard and sold for 8 cents per yard.

Affiant further states that the firm of Stern Bros. has not imported directly, nor has it had imported for its account by any other firm, any Valenciennes cotton lace.

Affiant further states that his attention has been directed to Exhibit 25, page 26, as follows:

Country of origin, France.
Value in France (per yard), 1.1 cents.
Charges (transportation, insurance, freight, etc.), eleven one-hundredths of a cent.
Duty (rate, 60 per cent and 7 cents per pound), seventy-six one-hundredths of a cent.
Landed cost in United States, 1.97 cents.
Retail price in United States, 5 cents.
Percentage of retail price to landed cost, 153 per cent.

The facts relative to this are that said lace was purchased from Goldenberg Bros., 109–111 Fifth Avenue, at 3¼ cents per yard instead of 1.97 cents per yard.

Affiant further states that this cotton lace was not imported by his firm nor for the account of his firm.

Affiant's attention has further been directed to Exhibit 87 on page 88, as follows:

BUTTONS, VEGETABLE IVORY (12-BUTTON CARD).

Country of origin, Germany.
Value in Germany (per card of 12 buttons), six-tenths cent.
Charges (transportation, insurance, freight, etc.), six one-hundredths of a cent.
Duty (rate, 45 per cent), 0.27 cent.
Landed cost in United States, 0.93 cent.
Retail price in United States, 25 cents.
Percentage of retail price to landed cost, 2,588 per cent.

The facts relative to said exhibit 87 are that Stern Bros. purchased these buttons from B. Blumenthal & Co., 354 Fourth Avenue, at a cost to the said Stern Bros. of 12½ cents per dozen instead of 0.93 cent as alleged in said exhibit.

Affiant further states these buttons were not imported directly by Stern Bros. nor by anyone for the account of Stern Bros.

I, Joseph I. Saks, do solemnly and truly swear that I am assistant treasurer of Saks & Co. and that the straw hats illustrated in the pamphlet entitled "Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices," page 34, were not imported by Saks & Co. but were purchased from R. Cinelli & Sons, 565 Broadway, New York City.

I further state that the average cost of the hats purchased from Cinelli & Sons and retailing at $4 was $1.93 (and not $1.07, as shown in the exhibit), this being the average cost price to us exclusive of buying expenses or overhead of any kind.

I, Julius Kugelman, do solemnly and truly swear that I am a vice president of the corporation Stern Bros., 41 West Forty-second Street, New York.

I further swear that, after going over all our import records most carefully, I can truthfully state that we never imported from France Valenciennes laces in cotton as stated in pamphlet entitled "Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices," page 26, Exhibit 25, and page 56, Exhibit 55, nor did we ever import from Germany buttons, vegetable ivory (12-button cards), as stated on page 88, Exhibit 87.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

Henry F. Schwarz, being duly sworn, deposes and says as follows:

That he is a native-born citizen of the United States and president and general manager of F. A. O. Schwarz, a corporation carrying on a business of importing and retailing toys, situated at 303–305 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

That his attention has been called to a pamphlet issued by the Government Printing Office, entitled "Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices," in which pamphlet there are various exhibits showing purchases from retail merchants of various articles and prices paid for the same, and Exhibit No. 24, jointed doll; Exhibit No. 99, rubber ball; Exhibit No. 108, Union Stone building blocks, all referring to purchases made at F. A. O. Schwarz and containing figures claimed to be the landed cost in the United States.

That he herewith states that these costs are absolutely wrong.

Exhibit No. 24, referring to jointed doll, represents a doll, No. 400/51, which was imported from Germany, arriving here in June, 1921. The cost of this doll was 855 marks per dozen, and was paid for in marks which were purchased from the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York at $1.70¾. The cost of the doll in Germany, in consequence, was $1.21, the duty 35 per cent (42 cents), and all other charges about 60 cents, making the cost of the doll $2.23 instead of $1.10, as mentioned in the exhibit. The retail price, $4.50, is the percentage of advance which is usual in the toy business, as this is a seasonable business only. There was only one importation of these dolls by F. A. O. Schwarz.

Exhibit No. 99, referring to rubber ball: In this case this rubber ball was purchased in the United States, no rubber balls having been imported by us direct during the last seven years. They were purchased from Julius Schmidt, of New York, as per his invoice of February 24, 1922; and the ball in question, 4½ inches, cost $52.27 per gross. In case lots there is a discount of 25 per cent. The cost of this ball, therefore, is 27 cents, and not 15¾ cents, as shown in the exhibit; and the reason the margin of percentage is larger than the ordinary percentage is the fact that many of these rubber balls collapse and become soft, and there is, therefore, a large percentage of loss connected with them.

Exhibit No. 108, representing Union Stone building blocks: In this case these articles were also purchased in the United States, as the manufacturer in Germany will only sell to his agent, and these can not be imported direct. The block No. 6 was purchased from Block House (Inc.), of New York, May 8, 1922, and cost $24 per dozen, less 5 per cent in case lots. The actual cost is therefore $1.90 instead of 35 cents, as claimed in the exhibit. The price of $4 at retail was established because the exact duplicate of this block is manufactured by a domestic manufacturer, who has established this retail price. The American manufacturers manufacture these blocks under the name of the Anchor Stone building block, having purchased this copyright or patent from the Alien Property Custodian.

The figures showing unusual percentage of profit in these three exhibits are therefore entirely wrong.

Landed cost in the United States	20.527
Retail price in the United States	65.00

Percentage of retail price to landed cost, 216 per cent.

Article purchased from James McCutcheon, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, May 16, 1922.

The facts relative to the goods referred to in the aforesaid exhibit are that the towels were invoiced to us on January 27, 1921, at $53.50 per dozen, from which we secured a rebate on this price which reduced the cost to James McCutcheon & Co. to $48.15 per dozen, and this is the towel which was at the time of the purchase being made by the investigator retailing at $65 per dozen. The towel referred to herein is the identical towel which is shown and referred to in Exhibit 20 of the document in question.

On page 98, Exhibit 98, of the same document there appears also the following:

EXHIBIT 98.—Linen towels, hemstitched.

Country of origin, Ireland.

Value in Ireland (per dozen)	$3.52
Charges (transportation, insurance, freight, etc.)	.12
Duty (rate, 35 per cent)	1.23
Landed cost in the United States	4.87
Retail price in the United States	24.00

Percentage of retail price to landed cost, 393 per cent.

Article purchased from James McCutcheon, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, May 12, 1922.

It is more difficult to determine accurately just what this towel is, but to the best of our knowledge and belief it is a towel for which James McCutcheon & Co. paid $21 per dozen and was originally sold at $30 per dozen. It was later reduced to $24 per dozen, at which price it was selling at the time of the purchase made by the investigator for the Government.

Affiant further states that neither the towel shown in Exhibit 20 nor in Exhibit 98 was imported either directly by nor for the account of James McCutcheon & Co.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

Harry L. Herman, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is comptroller of B. Altman & Co., Fifth Avenue, Madison Avenue, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Streets, New York.

Deponent further says that during the early part of June, 1922, a representative of the United States Government called at the store of B. Altman & Co. and interviewed Alfred P. Boehm, vice president; William Shipp, jewelry buyer; and this deponent, for the purpose of making inquiry concerning a pearl necklace which the said Government representative claimed to have purchased from B. Altman & Co. on May 31, 1922, for the sum of $150. The representative referred to stated his belief that the above-mentioned necklace was imported, but he was informed that the necklace was strictly of American manufacture, and that it had been made in Brooklyn, N. Y., and purchased by B. Altman & Co. in New York City.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

Alfred P. Boehm, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is vice president of B. Altman & Co., Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, New York; that some time in the early part of June, 1922, he was present at an interview at the establishment of B. Altman & Co., whereat were present Harry L. Herman, comptroller, and William Shipp, jewelry buyer, both of B. Altman & Co., and a representative of the United States Government, who had come to inquire about a pearl necklace which he claimed to have bought from B. Altman & Co. on May 31, 1922, for $150.

Deponent further says that the Government representative referred to gave it as his opinion that the necklace in question was an imported article, but he was informed that it was strictly of American manufacture; that it had been fabricated in Brooklyn, N. Y., and was purchased by B. Altman & Co. in New York City.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

Max O. Meyer, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the president of Joseph H. Meyer Bros., which company manufactures artificial pearls and necklaces, and has its office and principal place of business at 170 Broadway, New York.

Deponent further says that on September 15, 1921, his firm received an order from B. Altman & Co., including, among other items, one pearl necklace, quality XXX, size 16/40, length 24 inches, which item was billed to the said B. Altman & Co., with other merchandise, on September 20, 1921, the price charged to said B. Altman & Co. for the said pearl necklace being $75, as enumerated on deponent's firm's invoice bearing No. 88171.

Deponent further says that the pearl necklace aforesaid was manufactured by Joseph H. Meyer Bros., in their factory in the borough of Brooklyn, New York, N. Y., and that none of the pearls in the necklace described herein or any part thereof was imported.

Deponent further says that he has read the affidavit of William Shipp, buyer of B. Altman & Co., relating to the purchase and sale of the above-mentioned necklace, and the statements therein contained this deponent verily believes to be true and correct.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

William Shipp, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at No. 71 North Maple Avenue, East Orange, N. J., and is employed as buyer of the jewelry and silverware departments of B. Altman & Co., Fifth Avenue, Madison Avenue, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth Streets, New York, and has been so employed for the past four and one-half years.

Deponent further says that he has been shown a copy of a pamphlet issued by the Government Printing Office, bearing imprint "Senate committee print—Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices," on page 56 of which appears a statement (Exhibit 56) regarding a pearl necklace purchased from B. Altman & Co. on May 31, 1922, and on page 57 of which publication appears a reproduction of a sales check covering the sale mentioned, together with a photograph of the pearl necklace involved (Fig. 27).

Deponent further says that he has made a thorough and careful examination of the records of B. Altman & Co., covering the original purchase by them of the pearl necklace hereinbefore referred to, and finds that the said purchase was effected by B. Altman & Co. from Joseph H. Meyer Bros., of 170 Broadway, New York, the purchase price therefor being $75; that the necklace in question positively of domestic manufacture; that the said necklace was ordered by B. Altman & Co. from the said Joseph H. Meyer Bros. on September 15, 1921, and delivered to the said B. Altman & Co. on October 1, 1921, and is enumerated, with other items, on the invoice of said Joseph H. Meyer Bros., bearing No. 88171 and dated September 30, 1921.

EXHIBIT M.

STATE OF NEW YORK, City of New York, ss:

Lee Adam Gimbel, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the vice president of Gimbel Bros. (Inc.), whose office and principal place of business is at Broadway, Thirty-second to Thirty-third Streets, borough of Manhattan and city of New York.

That he has read the publication known as Imported Merchandise and Retail Prices, which purports to demonstrate the percentage of the retail price to the landed cost of certain articles upon prices stated as being paid and charged by Gimbel Bros. (Inc.) in its business.

Deponent has examined each and every item with respect to which this publication purports to quote Gimbel Bros. (Inc.) or to attribute to it the prices therein stated, said examination having been made with extreme accuracy.

Deponent avers that each and every one of the items and prices so attributed to Gimbel Bros. (Inc.) contains a manifestly glaring error, with the effect of attributing to Gimbel Bros. (Inc.) a margin of profit grossly exaggerated and not at all in accordance with the facts. Great injury has been done to deponent's concern by reason of the widespread publicity given to the Senate Finance's report, in that the statements therein contained are not borne out by the facts, particularly as to the exaggerated profits therein reported.

Deponent attaches to this affidavit a statement of the business done and the profits earned by Gimbel Bros. during the past three years, which said statement has been examined and certified to by chartered accountants. From this statement it will clearly be seen that the margin of profit upon such a large volume of business is very small.

Deponent further states that the percentage of foreign imports by Gimbel Bros. are very small, the same being less than 2 per cent of the total amount of purchases made.

Deponent also attaches to this affidavit a schedule on which appears the statement made in the Senate Finance's publication and the actual facts as ascertained from Gimbel Bros.' books, records, bills, and invoices. Every allegation in this schedule as to the costs, charges, selling prices, etc., is absolutely accurate, and will be substantiated by further affidavits and by the production of the original invoices and documents.

Deponent further states that in many instances the Senate Finance's report refers to merchandise not imported directly by Gimbel Bros., but purchased in local markets, and in such instances the attached schedule shows the actual price paid and the actual profit made.

F. Kirschbaum, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is the buyer of Department 67 of R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.); "that on the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated June 9, 1922, relative to the investigation of imported merchandise and the retail selling price of the same in the United States," it is stated on page 6, under Exhibit 5, that certain merchandise was purchased from R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.) on May 26, 1922.

Said deponent hereby swears that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, said merchandise was not imported by him through R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.); he further states that this merchandise was purchased from H. G. McFaddin & Co., as per attached invoice.

He further states that the percentage of markon, or so-called gross profit, is arrived at as follows:

Cost, $0.9166 instead of $0.45⅘, as shown in the exhibit.
Selling price, $1.7400.
Markon, $0.8234.
Per cent of markon to cost is $0.8234/$0.9166=89.8 per cent.

Of this selling price, however, it was necessary to take a $0.0949 reduction because of breakage and other causes incidental to the selling of glassware.

The true cost is arrived at as follows, resulting in a reduced or true markon:

Original cost, $0.9166.
Reduction, minus $0.0949 of selling price, $0.17.
True cost, $1.0866 instead of 0.45\frac{5}{10}$, as shown in the exhibit.
Selling price, $1.7400.
True markon, $0.6534.
Per cent of true markon to the cost is $0.6534/$0.9166=71.3 per cent.

"That on the report of the Secretary of Treasury dated June 9, 1922, relative to the investigation of imported merchandise and the retail selling price of the same in the United States," it is stated on page 22, under Exhibit 22, that certain merchandise was purchased from R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.) on May 22, 1922. Said deponent hereby swears that to the best of her knowledge and belief said merchandise was not imported by her through R. H. Macy & Co. (Inc.). She further states that this merchandise was purchased from Graf Bros. (Inc.), as per attached invoice. She further states that, as shown on the invoice, the percentage of markon, or so-called gross profit to purchase cost, is 58.9 per cent, as follows:

Cost, $0.875 instead of 12.51 cents, as shown in the exhibit.
Selling price, $1.390.
Markon, $0.515.
$0.515/$0.875 = 59.9 per cent.

Mr. BURSUM obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire at this time to say that, while I made no objection to the matter referred to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] being printed, I have read it over and I know its inaccuracy. While I shall not take up the time in going over it until after this bill shall have passed, I shall hope, either before the close of this session or at the beginning of the third session of this Congress, fully to answer the statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not hear what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] stated, because at the time I was talking to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], but I now learn that the Senator from North Dakota stated that the matter which I obtained permission to insert in the RECORD is inaccurate. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not it is inaccurate. All I know is that it is sent to me by the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I observed, in casually running over the document this morning, that it is accompanied by various and sundry sworn statements by retailers and others.

I do not mean by placing a document of that sort in the RECORD that I become responsible for the accuracy of the statements which are contained therein, but they are made by reputable American citizens and I feel that I have a right to rely upon the statements which are made by them.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just made a very lengthy speech, and now the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] has been recognized. In the division of the small amount of time between now and 4 o'clock, during which this very important question must be discussed, will there be a Republican and then a Democrat alternately recognized, or will all the time be allotted to the other side of the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair will decide that question as Senators address the Chair. The Senator from New Mexico now has the floor.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I can relieve the anxiety of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi as to the danger of his side of the Chamber not being accorded time to be heard before the hour fixed for voting. The Senator from New Mexico will take up only a very few moments.

This bill ought to be a good bill. It has been considered now for 18 months. If the Congress has failed to digest all there is to digest in a tariff bill in 18 months, then the framing of a good and wise tariff bill would be out of the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. No interest that the Senator knows of has been left out in giving out special favors, has it?

Mr. BURSUM. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that a great deal of testimony and a great deal of inquiry and a great deal of investigation and a great deal of work has been devoted to this bill. In most respects it is a very thorough and comprehensive bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, as I understand the Senator, all the special interests have been properly cared for by the bill?

Mr. BURSUM. I would not say that. The bill has accorded general recognition to the several elements of industry all over this country perhaps to a greater extent than any other bill heretofore passed by any Congress in history. There has been no time in the history of tariff making when the agricultural industries of the country have been accorded the recognition that this bill accords them. On the whole, I think it is a very fair bill. The principles involved are Republican in character, it is expected and presumed, and we prophesy that it will permit American industry to survive and to derive a living profit, and protect it against the ruinous competition of foreign countries.

The bill in its entirety and in every particular, perhaps, would not satisfy every Member on the Republican side, much less on the Democratic side, or those who believe that the industry of this country should be exposed to the ruinous competition of a pauperized Europe and other portions of the world. If we are to have prosperity in this country, we must take care first of our own people. This talk about taking care of a small percentage of foreign trade while our own people are starving is not logical, and it would not result in any prosperity to our own citizens. I say that our first duty is to take care of our own people. If we have a surplus, then we may give it away, or we may bargain it away, or do away with it in any manner that may seem proper or that we may be obliged to do under the circumstances; but let us not demoralize the American market. Let us protect that market and let us protect the producer, who in the last analysis is the wage earner and the laboring man of this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BURSUM. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The consuming public is a considerable portion of the American people, is it not? And has that been provided for in this tariff bill?

Mr. BURSUM. Who are the consuming public?

Mr. McKELLAR. The people of the United States.

Mr. BURSUM. The consuming public is every man, woman, and child in this Nation; and outside of the middleman, outside of the man who lives off his wits, the commission merchant, the man who makes his profits out of the labors and production of others, we are all producers; we are all wage earners or laboring men; and we are all consumers, of course. The essential factor in prosperity and happiness is a well-balanced condition; that is to say, the purchasing power of the several elements of every kind and character of industry must have a reasonable relationship to the purchasing power of every other kind of production and industry.

Upon the whole, I have faith in this bill. I have faith that it will work out to the satisfaction of the American people. It is true that no tariff bill immediately upon its passage has ever been very popular. This may be ascribed more to the dissatisfaction of those who are interested in the importation of merchandise and commodities from foreign lands, and who thus derive their profits, than to the dissatisfaction of those who are actually engaged in production. Propaganda is a very powerful agency; there is no doubt about that; but never has a tariff bill based upon protective principles been repealed but that very shortly thereafter the American people demanded its reenactment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURSUM. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator proposed an amendment when this bill was up for consideration in the Senate. That was stricken out in conference, as I understand. I refer to what was known as the Bursum amendment on dyestuffs.

Mr. BURSUM. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if he agrees with the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, in what he said on the floor of the House on September 15 in discussing this proposition? I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> Mr. FORDNEY. Senator BURSUM sent word yesterday that if the language in his amendment was left in it would ruin his reputation, and we sent word back that if it were it would ruin the reputation of the House bill, and therefore we struck it out and saved the reputation of both.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I will say to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi that I have not been losing any sleep about the possibility of ruining my reputation. In fact, I would not be so sure that I ever had any, so that I am not at all worried about that, and I am not responsible for the grape-vine stories that Uncle JOE gets off in the House. He is a humorous old fellow, and I take no offense at it; but in that connection, with reference to that item, as long as it has been brought up, let me say that while the amendment submitted was not a perfect provision, it was, in my judgment, such a provision as would preserve the industry. I do not agree that the provision brought out by the conferees is such an amendment as will effect that result; but we can not expect to have each and every item just as we would have it. I feel, however, as though comment upon certain methods which have been indulged in by the conferees would be proper at this time, not in a spirit of animosity, not with a view of promoting strife or antagonism, but rather in a spirit of correction of what I conceive to be an evil which has been practiced by the conferees on several occasions. I ask that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will kindly listen to this, as I may say something which may be of interest to him.

I take it that it is the duty of a conferee, so far as he legitimately and reasonably can, to see that the desires expressed by the Senate or by the House, whichever he happens to represent, shall prevail. I look upon a conferee as an agent of the body for which he has been selected to act. He is an agent of that body. The House has delegated to him the authority, and it is great authority, it is great power, to confer with reference to legislation upon which the two Houses are divided and have different views. I take it that a conferee is in duty bound to uphold the expressed views of his House. That has not always been the case. It was not the case, as I have been reliably informed, with reference to the amendment which the Senator from Mississippi mentioned, known as the Bursum amendment, with reference to the dye schedule.

The Senate adopted a certain amendment. That amendment, together with the bill, was placed in conference. Conferees were appointed by both Houses. The Senate side of this controversy was intrusted to three agents on the Republican side and two selected from the Democratic side. One of these agents, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I am reliably informed, immediately began to proselyte against the amendment adopted by the Senate. Now, the distinguished Senator from Utah may have more knowledge than the whole Senate. Possibly he has. He may be better versed in these matters; his judgment may be better; but I submit that it is the duty of a conferee to carry out the expressed desire of the body which he represents, and that if he fails to stand for it and at least to make a reasonable effort to carry it out, he is violating the faith and the trust in him reposed. I say that that practice is bad. It will demoralize any legislative body. Every revolution or rebellion that has ever been brought about in any country has had as its chief grievance a usurpation of power, a neglect of the desires of the majority, a government without the consent of the governed.

That rule applies with just as much force to the Senate of the United States as it applies to any country which may have suffered similar grievances.

At this time, in comparison with that conduct, I would like to call attention to the conduct of another committee of Congress, where the present occupant of the chair [Mr. CUMMINS] was one of the conferees upon the bill known as the judges bill, a bill providing for the creation of some 24 additional judgeships. At the time that bill was passed by the Senate I offered an amendment providing for the appointment of an extra judge from New Mexico. The Senator from Iowa was chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee having the bill in charge. He opposed that amendment on the floor, which he had a perfect right to do, of course, as the Senator from Utah had a perfect right to oppose any amendment to the tariff bill on the floor of the Senate. That is the prerogative of every Member of the Senate.

The amendment I offered to the judges bill prevailed. The bill was thrown into conference. Did the Senator from Iowa say that because he was opposed to that amendment he would not stand for the expressed will of the Senate? He did not. He sustained the Senate, and he made a reasonable effort to have agreed upon the provision which the Senate had expressed a desire to have included in the conference report. That sort of policy is a policy that is conducive to good will, and conducive to a square deal. We must have a square deal in the Senate. We will not tolerate legislation by conferees.

In this case I believe that a much greater injury would come to the country were an attempt made to send this bill back to conference than if we adopted the report, because the chances are that if we sent it back we would not have a tariff bill, and I submit that on the whole, in the majority of rates, this bill is a good bill. I do not desire to take away any credit which properly belongs to the distinguished Senator from Utah. He has done great and valuable work. I do criticize him in these specific instances, and I criticize that practice, and I say that if it is persisted in it will mean ultimately the abolition of the seniority rule, which I have no desire at this time to attack.

The flagrant abuse of power intrusted by the Senate to a conferee by such conferee can not be tolerated. It is a class of tyranny which the American spirit resents. A fair deal, a square deal, a substantial acquiescence with the recorded expressed desire of the Senate on the part of conferees representing this body is a fair demand that should not in the future go unheeded.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico tells us that we will not stand for legislation by conferees. I agree with him about that, but I want to bring to his attention a very interesting incident. When the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was in his primary race for the Republican nomination for the Senate there was much ado around the Finance Committee of the Senate and in it about the tariff on potash, increasing the price $30 a ton, the Senator from Maine was a mighty power in the fight to keep potash from being taxed. We were together on that proposition. When the race of the clever Senator from Maine was at high tide up in Maine the news was flashed over the wire, "Senator HALE saves potash. Potash remains on the free list because of Senator HALE's opposition to a tax on potash."

The conferees were finally appointed upon the bill. The House conferees and the Senate conferees met, and behind closed doors proceeded to deliberate, and on the afternoon of the very day that the Senator from Maine was reelected, the Republican conferees put potash back on the tax list.

I do not know exactly what sort of a double-back-action or sleight-of-hand performance you would call that. While the Senator from Maine was battling with his Republican opposition in the primary he was put on the front pages of the newspapers as having saved the farmers from an increase in the price of potash, but when the Senator from Maine was reelected, when the polls were closed, when the curtain was pulled down, and there was no opportunity for any farmer up in Maine to do any picket duty about polls the news reached me that the conferees had put potash on the tax list, and being of an inquiring mind myself, I wondered why that was done.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he thinks that potash would not still have a pretty good chance of being left on the free list?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do; and I believe that my friend from Maine is going to vote with me to keep it on the free list.

Mr. HALE. I certainly am.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not charging that the Senator from Maine had anything to do with putting it on the tax list, but I was just wondering why it happened.

Mr. HALE. I have been wondering myself. I will say that as soon as I read, the day before my election, that there was a possibility of a duty being put on potash I left my State; I did not stay there for the election, but came down to Washington to see what I could do to help keep potash on the free list.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to hear that. Mr. President, if there is anything in the world that sounds good and is really heartening it is to hear a Republican truthfully testifying about something that he has done in the interest of the people. Some of these days I want us to call up mourners here, and see how many we can draw out on certain issues which I have back in my head.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico said that every time we have a tariff for revenue, as soon as the people can, they demand the repeal of it. The Underwood tariff law was enacted in 1913; it has been on the statute books for a long time. I assert that when the country became adjusted to its provisions the American people flourished as they never flourished before. The tariff issue had practically been removed from the field of politics under the Underwood tariff law, and an era of prosperity, the like of which this country has never known, came under it; and not until the Republicans carried the country in 1918 and got control of the instrumentalities of Congress, and carried it again in 1920, did there rise a demand for a high protective tariff law. Where did it come from? It did not come from the people. It came from the men who have always made millions out of high protective tariff rates, and those men were not satisfied with the high rates imposed in former tariff measures.

The offspring of the men who made tremendous fortunes out of the Dingley tariff law were not satisfied with the rates of that law, and when the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was passed they demanded still higher rates than were found in the Dingley law, and they got them, and the country repudiated the Payne-Aldrich law, and the Underwood law grew out of the legislation which followed.

The tariff barons came again, and they were not satisfied with the rates they got, even under the Payne-Aldrich law, which were the highest rates ever enacted in the history of the Government. They demanded in this bill the highest rates ever written in any government in all the world, and you have given them to them; but who is going to profit by it? Nobody but the tariff barons and the trust magnates of America. Not a soul will profit by it but them. I will tell you what the American consumers are going to do. They are going to pay, because of the improper use of the taxing power by the Republican Party in Congress, increased prices for everything manufactured in America. They are going to pay, by reason of this tariff law, $3,000,000,000 a year into the pockets of individual tariff barons, not to the Government. You are robbing and impoverishing the many for the enrichment of a favored few.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico tells us that the people demand a repeal of these tariff for revenue measures. The people do not do anything of the kind. The people are deceived, usually, by Republican leaders about other issues, and when the Republicans get in they commence to arrange for another robbery. We heard very little about the tariff in 1920. In fact, you did not talk about it much. You were making a fight against the League of Nations and against entanglement and various other things for the purpose of concealing your real intention and purpose. But when you got in the greedy tariff barons said: "Now is our time; go to it." And they have written the tax rates that they wanted into this solemn and oppressive enactment of Congress. We tried to beat them down, but they triumphed, and here they are, the highest rates ever written in any tariff law in all the long stretch of time behind us.

That is an awful indictment to make against a party, that such inexcusable tariff rates as these would be imposed upon a people burdened and suffering as our people are to-day. I was just talking to a Senator to-day from an agricultural section, who was telling me that the governor and the officials of the State had made arrangements by which the farmers of certain counties in that State were to have an extension of time for paying their taxes.

Think of that, Senators. That is done to keep from having to sell their farms for taxes. Just think of such a condition as that.

This bill will levy a tax upon nearly everything the farmers eat and wear, the rods and bars and bolts and nails they use, the houses in which they live, the windowpanes which let in the light, the knives and forks with which they eat, the glasses out of which they drink, their milk and their water, their cooking utensils, their household furniture, their wearing apparel from the cradle to the grave. That is what you have taxed in this bill. Then try to deceive the people with your talk that the masses of America are demanding the passage of such a measure.

Mr. President, I want to read from the testimony of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. The Searchlight, a paper published here in Washington, quotes him as follows:

> I have called attention to the fact that this bill contains a duty upon water. All Senators will remember that we have placed a duty upon sand. In the particular matter which I am now discussing, the Chemical Foundation will levy a tax upon the air. Thus, Mr. President, we shall find all the elements of the universe—the air, the water, and the solid earth—placed under tribute.

Could there be a more terrific indictment against this bill than the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], a Republican, has made, denouncing the bill and saying that it taxes the air we breathe, the water we drink, and the sands of the sea out of which we make glass? Yes; glass as clear and transparent as the pillaging purposes of this bill. As I said the other day, spectacles, drinking glasses, and every other kind of useful thing made of glass is taxed in the white sand out of which it is made.

So, Mr. President, every magnate in the country who holds his hand upon a combination of these interests will rejoice when he hears that the bill is passed. It means that every man and woman who buys over the country must go into their pockets and put up an additional amount to pay tribute money to the tariff barons and trust magnates of America. The bill is a license to go out and hold up the public and filch money from their pockets. Let Republican Senators rejoice. The tariff baron masters will rejoice, but the overburdened masses of America will not rejoice. They will protest and those protests will grow and multiply and finally sweep the country with an irresistible cyclone of enlightened public opinion that will be reflected and registered at the voting places of the country, and conditions will change in this country.

I know that what I am saying now will not prevent you from carrying out your instructions from those who are to make many millions out of the passage of this measure. I have done what I could to prevent its passage. I have fought it for months in this body. This body has passed it, the House has passed it, and the conference report is now here. You have the votes to put it through and when it goes into operation and the people of the country feel its oppressive effect, they will then cry out against it. Some of us have spoken for them here as best we could, but we have not had enough Members in the body who felt as I do, who would vote as we have voted to protect their interests.

I want to say this to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BURSUM] before I close. He said that the people always demand that the tariff-for-revenue laws be repealed and high protective tariff laws put in their stead. He means certain people and that is easy to understand. Why do they want low tariff rates repealed? Why, because when tariff rates are low they do not get to take from the people as much as they do when the tariff rates are high. Then they have a perfect feast—a big financial feast for every tariff baron who feeds and fattens at the expense of the public, and that is what you have provided for in this bill. These big leeches on the body politic simply come in when Republicans get control and demand the right to tax everybody on nearly every human desire and on every necessity of life. No Government has the right to do that to me and the people whom I represent in this body. You have no right to take from the earnings of the common mass of men and women and say, "I will take a little from you and a little from you and a little from you to put into the pockets of this man who contributes money to my campaign fund." Senators it is wrong. The American people should resent it; they will resent it.

I want to remind the Senator, in conclusion, of just this concrete illustration and example: When the Dingley law was passed and before it went into effect Carnegie bought out certain steel interests and paid $10,000,000 for them. When the Dingley law had been in operation three years Carnegie sold his interests for $360,000,000. He made on the deal, by reason of a high protective tariff, $350,000,000 besides the millions that he had taken in as tribute money from every sewing woman in the country, from every woman who bought knitting needles, from every surgeon who used a blade of steel in the operating room, from every industry in the country, from the farmer with his agricultural implements. Every interest that used steel and iron paid tribute money to Carnegie, and in three years' time under the Dingley high protective tariff law, a law whose high rate pales into insignificance compared to the pending bill, one man accumulated $350,000,000 by the sale of the property when he had made millions and millions out of the consumers during that three years' time. That is the unfailing fruit of the high protective tariff system. By their fruits ye shall know them.

Mr. President, is it right to give to a man because he is able to contribute big sums of money to a political party seeking to get control of the instrumentalities of my Government authority to tax the mass of the people in order to pay him back not merely the amount given for the privilege of taxing the people but thousands of times over? What sort of system is that in a Government of free intelligent upstanding, courageous, patriotic people? Let Senators get ready to defend the bill. If they can defend these rates then I am very much mistaken in my ideas about what the American people want, what the American people will stand for, and what the American people will do when the truth is brought home to them.

Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the New York World which I desire to have printed in part in the RECORD in 8-point type. I shall not take the time to read it, if I may have permission to have the editorial printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[From the New York World, Monday, September 11, 1922.]

WHAT THEY VOTED FOR.

"Three weeks ago to-day we warned the Republican Tribune that its hope that the conference committee might 'counteract to some extent the evil already done to Republican prospects,' in tariff planning, 'by making no report at this session' of Congress was illusory. Equally vain was the dream that if the job did get past Congress it might be vetoed by a President out of McKinley's State and school. Things do not happen that way in politics. Causes grind out results with the grim logic of inexorable fate. Chickens do come home to roost.

"Quite as promptly as was expected, the conference committee has ironed out the differences between Senate and House; it has presented a Fordney-McCumber tariff bill which no doubt closely prefigures its final form. As was also anticipated, it retains the worst features of that monstrous measure. It burdens the housewife's sugar 2½ cents a pound. It perpetuates the heavy tax upon clothing by which Schedule 11 earns the bad repute of Schedule K in former years. It kills the farmer's market abroad by forbidding imports that might pay for his produce. * * * The dye schedule frankly prohibits imports. Why should not greed run true to form?

"From the point of view of the superlobbyists who have written this bill and who count upon the Republican majority which they own to jam it through, nothing would be gained by postponing tariff action until after election. Pass a tariff of abominations now, and at the very least three years must elapse before it can be repealed. In that clear space of power to tax and privilege to profit, what golden gains may not monopoly exact from the helpless people! Why shorten the period? Benefit to the Republican Party by that course—a secondary consideration with the superlobbyists—would in any case be slight. It is already tarred with the tariff. Few voters would be deceived now by the camouflage of delay until after election; months of golden opportunity would be lost.

"And there will be crude justice in the reply which privilege will make to those who protest: 'We have your mandate to do this. You are getting what you voted for.'

"Millions of voters may have thought that they were merely voting against the Wilson administration—misrepresented and maligned for precisely the selfish use now made of their revolt—and not for anything in particular. Millions may have thought, upon the authority of Secretaries Hughes and Hoover and 29 other Republican leaders, that they were voting for the League of Nations; or, upon Mr. Harding's assurances, that they were insuring a return of pre-war conditions—what we now know in bitter jest as Republican normalcy.

"They were mistaken. They were voting for Newberryism to organize the Senate against the league. * * * For ship subsidies, if Mr. Harding has his way. They were voting for a tariff which the Republican New York Herald estimates will cost the American public $3,000,000,000 a year or more—'an increase in the cost of living of about $30 a year for every man, woman, and child in the country.' They may say what they think of that tariff. They may vote next November as they talk about it. But the chance is slight, the hope of rainbow texture, that chartered privilege will fail to clean up while it has the chance."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is just a short while until we are to vote on this very important conference report. Before we do that, I want to call a document to the attention of the Senate, because there are certain Senators who perhaps have not seen this remarkable "piece of literature" printed by the Senators who have talked much about economy but who have practiced extravagance at the Government's expense. I do not know even whether the President pro tempore, now occupying the chair, has seen this remarkable Senate document. It was printed at the instance of the Senate Finance Committee, the committee that now pilots this report and one of the members of which is the distinguished economist who always stands for economy by word of mouth but not by practice, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I knew nothing about it being printed until I saw it here just a few days ago.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to hear that the Senator knew nothing about it, because I like to think if his eagle eye had ever hit upon this proposition that it would not have gotten through the committee. It is outrageous to think such propaganda as this is to be practiced by the Finance Committee of the Senate and by the Republican campaign committee from now until election. That is all it was published for. It is a campaign document, and a very poor one at that. If the Senator from Utah had been getting up one, he would have greatly improved upon it.

I do not know what it cost. I am going to try to ascertain some time, even if it takes a resolution of the Senate to ascertain the cost of it, but it would no doubt run up into the thousands and thousands of dollars, unless the Senator from Utah exerts his influence and stops the publication of it in such large numbers as it is intended by his colleagues to have published.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that when I first was asked how many copies had been printed for the committee I was told there had been 1,000 copies printed, and that is all that are to be paid for by the Government. I understand, however, that there is an organization which is very much in favor of the American valuation plan that had them printed in large quantities and circulated throughout the United States. But it was not the Finance Committee that did it. I do not know of any other committee having them for distribution unless it was, I think, the National Retailers' Association, but I am not positive about that.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not believe the Republican campaign committee would do it, because it would not do them any good, and I have too much respect for the intelligence of its chairman to believe he would be led astray by such deception.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say another thing. I was asked the other day if the committee would print additional copies over the 1,000 and whether they could do so under the law. I said, "No; they can not do so under the law, and even if they could do so under the law, I would not want the Finance Committee to print any more of them."

Mr. HARRISON. If there were a thousand copies of this document printed for a thousand dollars, it would be the cheapest job the Government ever did.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not cost anything like that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. It is on the finest kind of paper, a most wonderful work, highly technical, beautiful photogravures. For instance, the effort is made to show that certain importers have made enormous profits, and yet they do not attempt to show that while they have been in control of the Government for two years the Republicans have done anything toward putting a stop to that profiteering, although they were charged with doing it. Let me give just a few illustrations? I shall not give them all. I am reading from the document. One illustration is "mustard fruit." Just think of putting a big picture of "mustard fruit" in a publication of this sort? Then "flatirons." I suppose they thought the people ought to see a good picture of a flatiron, because they are going to use the "flatiron" on a good many of you Republicans this November. We go further, and as a campaign document, as a Senate document in the most extravagant way, without limitation on expenditure of the public moneys, they print here a most beautiful "silk nightgown," and they put that next to a "silk chemise." Certainly the Senator from Utah did not get up this particular part of the Senate document. [Laughter.]

Now, another thing: They have a picture of a "marble statue" here with a "bronze chair," a greatly exaggerated but beautiful picture, upon page 17 of the document. Then they take a "musical alarm clock," and then a "cuckoo clock" that was used as an exhibit here by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

Then they have here a beautiful picture of a "jointed doll." I do not know what a "jointed doll" is, but they have a picture of it here anyway. Then follow "celery seed" and "walking canes." Some of you Republicans will need "walking canes" after the next election. The journey through private life will be a long one for you. Then come "carrot seed" and "cabbage seed." It undoubtedly cost as much to prepare this picture of a package of "cabbage seed" as it would to distribute "cabbage seed" to all the cabbage consumers throughout the country.

Then come "flashlight bulbs." You are so bent on giving to special interests the privilege of robbing the American people that you think all a fellow needs now to burglarize more is a "flashlight bulb," and so they print here in this document a picture of a "flashlight bulb."

"Saucepot, aluminum," "egg cutter," "shears." Your minds have been so much on wool in the effort to take care of a few shepherds of the West and the woolen manufacturers of the East that you knew it would be very inappropriate to have such an expensive document printed without placing shears in it. And I might say some of you were so busy under the Democratic administration clipping with your shears coupons on your investments that you thought a photo of shears most appropriate. Well, the American people are going to "shear" some of you in November, not with shears such as you exhibit here but with their votes—separating you from the public trough and your political orgy. Of course, those Senators who do not come up for reelection in November smile, because they may escape the catastrophe, but those on the other side of the Chamber who do come up for reelection are voting for the conference report "with fear and trepidation."

"Microscopes." Those were put in also. Well, it would take a microscope to see anything you Senators on the other side or your administration have done during the several years you have been in control of this body or the Government. I suppose that is why the shrewd, smart politicians, the leaders of the Republican Party, who are always bent upon deceiving the American people, put that in. Those Senators desired to let them have a microscope so that they could use it in order to find out some little thing they have done during these four years. One may get all the expensive microscopes he wishes, whether they come from Germany or are manufactured in this country, and he will not find one single thing which is beneficial to the American people that this administration or you have done. Yet you contemplate adjourning this session of Congress day after to-morrow. Senators on the other side of the Chamber do not say anything in answer to these suggestions because they know they are true.

"Toilet soap." Well, the Republicans will need it when the Democrats get through with them. "Bird cages," "cod-liver oil." Why do you pick out "bird cages" and "cod-liver oil"? Who is the distinguished Senator on the Finance Committee who was designated to get up the various pictures to illustrate these different articles?

"Hair clippers," "magnifying glasses," "dog muzzles," "Apollinaris water," "gentlemen's belts."

Mr. President, on page 96, under the head of Exhibit 95, there is "Key of Heaven," and right under it is printed "Scrub cloth." Explain to the American people why you try to deceive them by placing upon the same page of this remarkable document a photogravure of a bible called "Key of Heaven" and in the same photogravure on the same page put "Scrub cloth," made out of cotton.

Then, here [exhibiting] on page 100 are placed a "rubber ball" and a "monkey" at the same time, also a "jumping dog."

"Roulette wheel." Well, you Republicans have been gambling in the committee room with the rights of the American people, bartering and trading with rates in this bill, so it is natural that you should think the people want to see a picture of a "roulette wheel."

"Hot-water bottle." Senators on the other side will need hot-water bottles.

So it is, Mr. President. I shall not read them all, but that is the way the American people's money is being frittered away by the Republican Party; yet the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says, while there have been a great many more than a thousand copies of this document printed it has not been done at the direction of the Finance Committee of the Senate. Some organization is doing it; somebody got permission to have it printed at the Government Printing Office. There will be more and more, thousands on thousands more, printed and distributed throughout the country from now until November next; and it will be so covered up that the American people will never know that they have paid a part of the expense.

Ah, Mr. President, there is much for the distinguished Senators on the other side of the Chamber to answer for when they adjourn on Thursday and go back to their respective States. What are you going to tell the people you have done? You are too ashamed of the pending legislation to admit that you vote for it. I am not speaking of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]; he would admit it, and smile when he did so. He would make some people believe that he thought it was a good bill. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would also do so; yet, since the bill was originally brought upon the floor of the Senate under the direction of the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Indiana, there have been hundreds of amendments offered to the bill at the instance of the committee reducing the rates from those originally framed by the committee. You did it because we forced you to do it. You knew that your work was so crude that even your enthusiastic followers would not stand for such rates. However, you only helped the legislation in the slightest, and the legislation now is so very obnoxious, so very bad, that Senators on the other side can give no excuse, offer no justification for supporting it even as a protective-tariff bill. It is a legislative monstrosity. If my good friend, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], could suggest the language he would say it is "bowlegged, knockkneed, and bedridden." That is the way he spoke of the emergency tariff bill, and that bill was not nearly so bad as is the pending tariff report, upon which we are now called to vote.

This legislation was conceived in a spirit of robbery, and I measure my words when I employ the word "robbery." If one man conspires with another to rob a house and gets the loot and the other takes it way from him, the loser has no place in the court; he can not recover it; he is particeps criminis; but in this instance the framers of this measure went behind closed doors and there secretly traded and bartered with each other, conspiring to allow a certain rate on one article or to a certain Senator provided that they might be allowed to impose the rate they desired on some other article. Protection! It is wrong in principle. I have little sympathy for those who have been disappointed in not obtaining some of the rates for which they fought, and who now fail to show much enthusiasm for this report, because they did not obtain the rates they desired. Of course, from a Republican standpoint, they have not been treated squarely, for if it is desired to write a protective bill it ought to protect all articles without respect to section or class. That, however, has not been done in all instances. Has not the Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] been loyal and true to the Republican Party? Has not he voted with the majority time after time for the high rates in the pending bill? Was he not promised on the floor that if the bill went to conference one of the first items that would be taken care of was the rate on long-staple cotton? Yet he is slapped in the face, and a conference report is brought in which denies to Arizona the thing for which the Senators from that State have fought. From a Republican viewpoint he has a right to feel aggrieved.

Mr. President, this whole report is full of repudiated promises, broken pledges, and shattered hopes. Everything the Republican majority has promised to the people has been denied them in the bill. As the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] pointed out this morning, Republican orators harped in the last campaign that they would reduce the high cost of living, and yet every line of this bill seeks to add a burden onto the American consumer. Oh, if the Senators on the other side could go home to their people and talk to them—whether in their little humble huts away out in the woods or on the ranches or down in the mines or on the public highways or in the workshops or counting places—they would hear them say, "Taxes are heavy." They are carrying the load as best they can, and yet it is sought in this instance to add greater taxes, greater burdens upon them. I do not blame Republican Senators for not wanting to adjourn Congress and go home. I am wondering what they are going to do when they face their constituents, when they shake the hand and call by name the man who works on the railroad or in the workshop and tell him that the Republican administration has conspired to reduce wages but at the same time has by legislation added to the cost of living by the means of tariff rates.

Of course, the Senator from Utah would say that in some instances the rates are not high enough. I can state the rate which he has in mind, and, even if it were double the rate as now provided in the bill, it would not be high enough for him. He dreams of sugar, he tastes sugar, he sees sugar morning, evening, and night. What has been done with reference to the duty on sugar? The Senator from Utah gave up something in conference, yes, but how much? I think the rate was reduced from the Senate rate of 1.82 cents to 1.76 cents, if I am not mistaken. That is right, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. It was reduced from 1.84 cents to 1.76 cents.

Mr. HARRISON. From 1.84 cents to 1.76 cents—a big reduction, was it not? Ah, but he has grabbed off, if the conference report shall be sustained, an increased duty of over three-quarters of a cent a pound from the Underwood rate on every pound of sugar consumed in this country. Let Republican Senators explain to the American sugar consumer when they go before him in November and seek reelection why they voted for a conference report which adds, as compared to the Democratic law, nearly a hundred million dollars in increased taxes on sugar alone. It will increase the price of each pound of sugar that is used over three-quarters of a cent. Of course, the Senator from Utah should feel good. He can go back to the sugar-beet people of the West, not the consumers, not the laborer in the mines who needs help, not the toiler upon the railroads, but he can go back to the big, fat war babies, like the Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. and other great sugar interests there, and say to them, "After a hard fight we were able to increase the tariff on sugar three-fourths of a cent a pound." Upon wool, upon clothing, upon everything that goes on the breakfast tables or on the backs of the American people, a higher tax is levied; and it is done at the instigation of the Republican Party, which now dominates this body and the House and the White House. So do not tell the American people in the coming campaign that you have done anything to reduce the high cost of living. If you have left anything undone, I do not know what it is. Tell me one article that you have left untaxed in this bill. Tell me one thought that you ever gave to the American consumer in the writing of this law. It stands here as a monument of infamy; and you must respond to them for your action in bartering with each other and trading on the floor of the Senate and in the committee rooms that some interests might be taken care of and others at the same time protected.

I know, when I make the statement that there was "bartering among Senators" in order to impose rates on this article and that, that that is a serious charge, but I invite a challenge to the statement. God bless you, give me an investigation and I will name names! I will furnish a bill of particulars. I will cause a blush of shame to the countenance of the American people, if not some of you, for your actions—not theirs. All this is going on at this time, increasing the cost upon the American consumer; and what is happening in the House of Representatives at this minute? Those boys who volunteered at the call of their country or were drafted to go to the front are receiving the news that the promises that have been made to them for years, from President Harding down to practically every Republican leader in this body and the other, have been ignored, and their bill that passed both bodies has been vetoed.

Is that living up to your campaign promises? How can you expect the American soldier who gave up his job and gave his time and his all for the service of his country to sit quietly by and see passed through one branch of the Congress a bill imposing greater taxes and burdens upon him, and at the same time see himself slapped by the President of the United States, ignoring the will of the people and the free expression of both branches of the American Congress, in vetoing the adjusted compensation bill? How are you going to explain it?

I have never yet seen such a spectatcle as I have beheld in the last few days touching some of the leaders of the Republican Party in voting for the adjusted compensation bill, but busying themselves like bees in corraling enough votes to sustain the President when he vetoes the measure.

Ah, Mr. President, I do not blame the Senators on the other side of the aisle for wanting to hold Congress in session and not go home. There are many sins of commission, as well as omission, for which you must answer to them. While you see that spectacle in the House of Representatives, and the Senate giving to the profiteers and the special interests of the country the weapons whereby they can rob the toiling masses in order to enrich their own pockets; when they need no protection you shower it upon them, thinking perhaps the next day they will throw into the campaign treasury of the Republican Party a larger contribution; while the bill is being considered, one of the leaders over there—and he is a leader, powerful in influence, adroit in his manipulations, suave in his manner, sweet in his disposition, but he is a Republican above everything else—the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is writing letters to the big, rich fellows of the country who are interested in special legislation, asking for contributions to the Republican Party.

If the American people could see this picture upon the screen, or could hear and believe and know what has been done, they would rise in indignation and condemnation of you. You who do me the honor to listen to me know that I am speaking truths. Why, the head of the National Cash Register Co., whom you seek to give a duty on cash registers, meets here with the chairman of the Republican campaign committee and contributes $25,000 the day following the adoption of the amendment that gave him greater protection when he did not need it. I am surprised at his modesty. If he had really wanted to compensate you for your work he ought to have added to the $25,000 many more, and many of you would have been willing to accept it.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. What is the next bill on the calendar that must come up for consideration just before we adjourn? What is it? Although you refuse by your President's veto to carry out the promise to the American soldier and sailor and marine to give him an adjusted compensation, you are trying to force through here, under the whip and spur of party dictation, a bill that will appropriate $5,000,000 to the colored population of Liberia. Yes; you have more interest in pressing into law the Liberian loan of $5,000,000, thus pressing more burdens upon the backs of the American consumer and workingman to go to the colored population of Liberia, than you have in the soldiers who fought and helped to win the World War. Answer to them when you go home why you are for the one and against the other.

One more thought.

You from the far West who the other day voted against the MCNARY reclamation bill, giving relief to the people of the West that they have so long sought and for which they have almost prayed, and you who said that you voted against it in some instances because you were afraid it might endanger the passage of the adjusted compensation bill were told by those on this side that if you would vote for it it would help the adjusted compensation bill to become a law. We were sincere in that position. I believe now that if you had given us a sufficient number of votes from the other side of the aisle, which you withheld and refused to do, and we had placed the MCNARY reclamation amendment on the bill, and it had gone to the President, he could not have vetoed the measure; and we, to-day, instead of seeing a veto coming from the White House against the adjusted compensation bill would perhaps have seen his signature to it, and the West would have been taken care of, and the promises to the American soldier redeemed.

Explain that, you men from the West, when you go back to your constituents in November. Or, perhaps, Mr. President, you would rather say to them: "We were against the adjusted compensation bill for the soldier, and we were for the conference report imposing additional costs of living upon the American consumer, and we were for appropriating $5,000,000 to the colored population of Liberia."

You can tell them, too, that you were for another measure, and that you are going to pass it just as soon as Congress reconvenes in December. You can say to them that while you were against giving the soldier any compensation, you were for loaning to the shipping interests of the country $125,000,000 and $75,000,000 for 10 years to come, some $750,000,000 in all, as a subsidy, so that they can get the ships of the country; and you can say to them at the same time that Mr. Lasker—who took three men under the Democratic administration who received $6,500 a year and promptly under the spell of Republican "economy" raised their salary to $35,000 a year—says that he wants the bill passed giving him full power to sell the ships now comprising the merchant marine of this country to anybody he may choose, and without public notice or restriction or limitation. He can play all the favorites he wants, and the United States Steel Corporation, or the Standard Oil Co., or this Shipping Trust that increased transportation rates immediately preceding the war, can again take advantage of the situation, purchase the ships for practically nothing, and increase without restraint transportation rates on the American farmer and manufacturer. Take that record back to your people in November. It will be their first opportunity to repudiate you, and repudiation you will receive. I commiserate but do not sympathize with you.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McNary	Shortridge
Ball	Gerry	Moses	Simmons
Borah	Glass	Myers	Smith
Brandegee	Gooding	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	New	Stanfield
Bursum	Harreld	Newberry	Stanley
Cameron	Harrison	Nicholson	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Norbeck	Sutherland
Colt	Hitchcock	Oddie	Swanson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Phipps	Trammell
Dial	King	Ransdell	Underwood
Dillingham	La Follette	Rawson	Wadsworth
du Pont	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	McCormick	Reed, Pa.	Warren
Ernst	McCumber	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
France	McLean	Shields

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. On that, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON (when Mr. CARAWAY's name was called). My colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON's name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who if present would vote "yea," and I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when Mr. KEYES's name was called). My colleague [Mr. KEYES] is absent by reason of illness in his family. I am authorized to state that if present he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. MCCORMICK (when his name was called). If my colleague [Mr. MCKINLEY] were present, he would vote "yea." I desire to announce that I have a standing pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], who if present would vote as I do. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when Mr. OVERMAN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] is unavoidably absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay." If present and not paired, the senior Senator from Nevada would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay" on the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD];

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE];

The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]; and

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

I also desire to announce that if present the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. [OWEN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]; and

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is detained from the Senate on account of serious illness in his family.

If present, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], would vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote "yea."

Mr. HEFLIN. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is necessarily absent. If present and not paired, he would vote "nay." I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] is ill, and that if he were present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 28, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably House Concurrent Resolution 68, the purpose of which is to correct an error in the drafting of the tariff bill,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota reports favorably from the Committee on Finance a concurrent resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the Clerk is hereby authorized and directed to insert in paragraph 502 of the bill as amended, after the word "gallon" in the last line, the following: "; testing above 52 and not above 56 per cent total sugars not imported to be commercially used for the extraction of sugar, or for human consumption, one-sixth of 1 cent additional for each per cent of total sugars and fractions of a per cent in proportion."

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. Before consent is given, I would be very glad if the Senator from North Dakota would explain the real import and effect of this proposed amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Paragraph 502 of the tariff bill, as agreed to in conference, imposed a duty of one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon upon blackstrap molasses testing not above 52 per cent total sugars, if such molasses is not imported to be commercially used for the extraction of sugar, or for human consumption.

In case such molasses tests more than 52 per cent total sugars it is dutiable under paragraph 502 at the rates imposed upon edible molasses. The House conferees in insisting that the dividing line be made 52 per cent total sugars were under the impression that the polariscopic test and the total sugar test yielded substantially the same result. The effect of the limit in the conference agreement is to make practically all blackstrap dutiable under the edible molasses rates. It is desired that blackstrap molasses used in mixing animal feeds should pay lower rates of duty than those imposed upon edible molasses.

The manufacturers of commercial feeds are of the opinion that the 52 per cent limitation will make the bulk of blackstrap molasses dutiable as edible molasses. It is also their opinion that the edible molasses rate would be prohibitive against the cattle-feed users as well as against the manufacturers of commercial feeds and result in destroying the farm-feeding industry, which has been several years in development on reasonably priced blackstrap.

If the Senator will examine paragraph 502 he will find that it reads:

PAR. 502. Molasses and sugar sirups, not specially provided for, testing not above 48 per cent total sugars, twenty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per gallon; testing above 48 per cent total sugars, two hundred and seventy-five one-thousandths of 1 cent additional for each per cent of total sugars and fractions of a per cent in proportion.

Then this language was added by the conferees:

Molasses testing not above 52 per cent total sugars not imported to be commercially used for the extraction of sugar or for human consumption, one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon.

It was the intention of the conferees, and we thought that they directed those who were to correct the bill, that one-sixth of 1 cent instead of two hundred and seventy-five one-thousandths of 1 cent for each degree should be added between the 52 and the 56. That would make a very much less rate on that when it got as high as 56, so as to keep the proper relation between those nonedibles which were to bear one-sixth of 1 cent and that which was edible, which was to take the two hundred and seventy-five one-thousandths of 1 cent for each additional degree. That is the purpose of the proposed resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. This, of course, involves many technical statements with reference to the duty. Am I to understand that the substantive effect of the amendment will be to reduce the duty imposed upon blackstrap molasses used for the purpose of making animal feeds?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it will reduce that between 52° and 56° at the rate of one-sixth of a degree per gallon instead of two hundred and seventy-five one-thousandths. If we add 4° it will be seen that it will have a considerably important bearing upon the way the bill now reads.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that difference represents the part of blackstrap that is used for making animal feed?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand it, blackstrap molasses was placed on the free list by the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the House put upon it a rate of duty over the Underwood rate?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the Senator's proposition is that between the percentages of 52 and 56 the proposed amendment will reduce the rate as just agreed to in the conference report?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much greater will the tariff rate be on blackstrap molasses than it is now under the Underwood law? Can the Senator give me information with reference to that?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have forgotten the Underwood rate.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is 15 per cent ad valorem, as I recall. About what ad valorem would one-sixth of 1 cent per gallon be?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know the value of blackstrap at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is about 1½ cents, as I recall it.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that the amendment now offered will provide about the same rate as the Underwood rate. That is, the one-sixth would be sixteen and one-half one-hundredths of 1 per cent, while the Underwood rate is fifteen one-hundredths of 1 per cent. The reason why the amendment is offered is because of the fact that the duty imposed is upon the total sugars. The Underwood law was 40 per cent tested by the polariscopic test, and when it was changed to the total sugars it added a little over 20 per cent, or nearly 25 per cent, because then the invert sugars found in the molasses were counted in the total sugars. This reduces the rate so that it will be one-sixth of a cent, or about the same as that same class of molasses would be under the Underwood law.

Mr. McKELLAR. I greatly regret that blackstrap molasses was not left on the free list, but of course, the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota is quite an improvement on the bill as we have just agreed to it and therefore I have no objection.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is hardly an amendment. It is to correct a clerical error that was made in making the change; and it is necessary to pass the concurrent resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the objective is a reduction?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a reduction.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 67) changing the enrollment of H. R. 7456, the tariff bill, and a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 68) changing the enrollment of H. R. 7456, the tariff bill, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to concur in the resolution (H. Con. Res. 68) just received from the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is going to be a motion made, I desire to make a point of order, because the concurrent resolution has not gone to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair refers the concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives to the Committee on Finance, and if there be no objection the report made by the Committee on Finance will be received.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Committee on Finance have already filed their report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. I understand, the Senator from North Dakota has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The matter which needs to be considered is that the Finance Committee reported the concurrent resolution before it had been received by the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Chair whether the concurrent resolution just reported must go to the committee formally and be formally considered by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has referred the resolution of the House to the Finance Committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I may have a word, I was informed that the resolution came over yesterday and was referred, and the committee have already acted upon it. So all that is necessary to do is to make the report from the committee at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I am correctly informed, the concurrent resolution which has just been referred by the Chair to the Committee on Finance is identical with the concurrent resolution which the Senator was discussing when the message from the House of Representatives was brought in?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say candidly to the Senator that I have no objection, so far as I am personally concerned, to the adoption of the concurrent resolution. It seeks to reduce the amount of tax on one item in the tariff bill. If that is all there is to it, I have no objection. The reason why I interposed the objection that it had to go to the committee was because I wanted to know one thing before action is taken. If the only proposition before the Senate is going to be the concurrent resolution as it now stands, I have no objection to its immediate consideration and passage.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just a moment, please. But if it is intended to introduce the concurrent resolution and leave it open to further amendment, then I am not ready for its consideration at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no such intention. It is simply to correct a clerical error.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will give me an assurance of that fact——

Mr. McCUMBER. I can give the Senator assurance that no one on this side of the aisle will attempt to offer an amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I can say that no such assurance will be given on this side. An agreement may be going on between the two Senators, but I do not intend to be bound by it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator from North Dakota had better report the concurrent resolution from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has laid before the Senate the resolution of the House of Representatives and has referred it to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the committee has considered it. It did not have to have this particular paper in its hands, but it considered the concurrent resolution and voted to report it favorably.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not understand that the Senator from Arizona objects to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution, but I do not want to stand here and hear two Senators contending that that is the only thing to be considered without making my position clear. The concurrent resolution is subject to amendment and I have a vital amendment to offer. I seek to correct an error that has been made in the tariff bill. I have as much right as the Senator from North Dakota and I shall insist on that right, but I have no objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona has a right to submit any amendment he desires.

Mr. ASHURST. And the Senator from Arizona will most certainly employ that right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I may have the ear of the Chair a moment, I desire to say just a word. I shall not object to the presentation of the report, but I understand, under the rule, after the report is submitted from the committee the concurrent resolution must go over one day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A single objection will take the report over until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not object to the report being presented, but I insist that we have until to-morrow to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the immediate consideration of the report.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask, then, that the tariff bill be not enrolled to-day, because the purpose of the concurrent resolution is to correct an error before enrollment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will go to the calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER subsequently said: I am informed by the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that he will offer no amendment to the concurrent resolution relating to blackstrap, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of that concurrent resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. With the understanding that there shall be no other amendment to the resolution in regard to the enrollment of the bill relating to the blackstrap-molasses item, I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution. Is there objection?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 67) as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7456) entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to strike out "coconuts," appearing in paragraph 1626 of the bill as agreed to in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if the resolution which has just been referred to the Committee on Finance is intended to correct a situation like this: In one instance coconuts are on the free list in the bill and in another instance on the dutiable list?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is all there is to it. In sending the copy of the bill to the printer those who were charged with making the change omitted to strike out the word "coconuts" where it appears with other words in one paragraph of the free list under edible oils. The resolution is simply designed to correct that error and nothing else.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does it strike "coconuts" out of the free list?

Mr. McCUMBER. They are already upon the dutiable list, and would so be held.

PENSIONABLE STATUS OF SERVICE MEN.

Mr. McCUMBER. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10196) to provide for the applicability of the pension laws to certain classes of persons in the military and naval services not entitled to the benefits of Article III of the war risk insurance act, as amended, and I submit a report (No. 923) thereon.

Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill after making a short explanation of its object, when I do not think any Senator will object to its consideration.

An amendment which was made to the war risk insurance act designed to provide that soldiers enlisting after a certain date—I think in 1921—should not be entitled to any of the benefits of the war-risk insurance went a little further than that and included the words "or any other rights under the pension laws of the United States"; so that as to anyone who enlisted in the Regular Army after that date, as the law now stands and is construed, though he were killed or injured in the Army, no pension could be allowed to the widow in the first instance or for injury in the second instance. That certainly is an error, because in all cases under all our laws any soldier in the Regular Army, while he can not draw a pension for service, nevertheless is pensionable if he is injured. It is to correct that situation that the passage of this bill is recommended by the department. The department calls attention to the fact that the original act was only really intended to refer to the insurance provision covering the last war; that the words to which I have referred should be stricken out, and the act should not be construed as prohibiting a pensionable status to those who are members of the Regular Army, who enlisted since that date, and who might be injured; in other words, it places them right back where they always have been.

I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 312 of the war risk insurance act, as amended by section 17 of the act of June 25, 1918 (40 Stats., p. 613), shall not be construed as making the pension laws inapplicable to persons admitted into the military or naval service after six months from the passage of the act of August 9, 1921, establishing the Veterans' Bureau and adding section 315 to the war risk insurance act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, at this time I desire to give oral notice to all members of the Finance Committee that there will be a meeting of the committee in its room in the Capitol to-morrow morning at 9.30 o'clock to consider the matters referred to this afternoon.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2885) to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefor, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, to strike out lines 18 to 21, inclusive; and on page 3, line 2, to strike out "$39,328.56" and to insert "$44,109.22."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what is the object of the bill, I will ask the Senator from New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am about to state that. The bill was passed by the Senate after having been debated at considerable length, the Senator from Utah taking part in the debate. It provides for the acquisition of little parcels of land on some of the Government holdings that were acquired during the war.

One amendment of the House proposes to strike out the authority to spend $275 in the acquisition of a little parcel of land at Richmond, Va., and the other corrects the appropriation for the payment for some land in connection with Walter Reed Hospital, so that the amount shall exactly correspond with the judgment of the court. Those are the two amendments, in which I move that the Senate concur.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the House amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3890) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, which were, on page 3, line 14, to strike out "shall" where it appears the first time; and, on page 6, line 16, strike out all after the word "Columbia," down to and including the word "War," in line 18.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as will be observed, there are but two amendments suggested by the House. One is to strike out the word "shall" in a certain part of the bill where, by a printer's error, the word was printed twice. The other amendment is to strike out from one of these sections the authority given for the employment of clerks in the offices of disbursing officers in charge of the distribution of National Guard appropriations in the several States.

Mr. CURTIS. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The entire bill is made up of a series of what might be termed minor amendments to the national defense act, which have been agreed upon in conference by the adjutants general of the States, the National Guard associations, the War Department, and the two Committees on Military Affairs. It does not involve any appropriation, but it fixes more clearly the status of the National Guard reserve officers in the law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill passed the Senate months ago and has been considered by the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That may be true; but I should like to look at it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I assume that it will go to the calendar if the Senator from Wisconsin insists upon his objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendments will lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said: Mr. President, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has informed me that he has no further objection to the consideration of Senate bill 3890, which was returned from the House with amendments. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the amendments of the House to Senate bill 3890. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill passed the Senate several months ago. It is a collection of amendments to the national defense act of a comparatively minor nature. All of them relate to the status of National Guard officers and soldiers in their relations with the Regular Establishment. The bill is the result of a series of conferences with the adjutants general of the States, the National Guard associations, the two Military Committees of the Congress, and the General Staff of the War Department. It is a complete and unanimous agreement. It does not involve any appropriation.

Mr. KING. I think I am familiar with the bill. I thought there was some bill pending which sought to confer certain benefits on National Guard officers similar to those given to officers in the Regular Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Senator from New York to say that it does not involve an appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does it involve any liability upon the part of the Federal Government for future appropriations?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 11173) to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that bill is an exact duplicate of a Senate bill passed a few days ago at the time the calendar was called. It is intended to save, and it will save, the Government money in the matter of paying the transportation of soldiers upon discharge from the military service. Instead of paying them for the distance from the place of discharge to the place of residence, it provides for their payment from the place of discharge to the place of enlistment.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I inquire of the Senator from New York how it happens that the House did not act upon the Senate bill, that bill being the first one passed?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is perfectly apparent that if each of the Houses passes identical bills, with separate numbers, it leads to confusion and adds to the work of both bodies. I shall, however, make no objection to the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 11173. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11173) to amend section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 126 of the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as contained in section 3 of an act entitled "An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions," approved February 28, 1919, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 126. Hereafter an enlisted man discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, except by way of punishment for an offense, shall receive 5 cents per mile for the distance from the place of his discharge to the place of his acceptance for enlistment, enrollment, or muster into the service: Provided, That for sea travel involved in travel between place of discharge and place of acceptance for enrollment, enlistment, or muster into the service, only transportation in kind and subsistence en route shall be allowed: Provided further, That enlisted men under the age of 18 discharged on the application of either of their parents or legal guardian shall be furnished with transportation in kind from the place of discharge to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment, or to their home if the distance thereto is no greater than from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment, but if the difference be greater they may be furnished transportation in kind for a distance equal to that from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR PROJECTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present the conference report on the river and harbor authorization bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10766) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8 and 67.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, and 74, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference reached no agreement on Senate amendments Nos. 3, 11, and 23.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the words "Corpus Christi" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Channel from Aransas Pass to Corpus Christi"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word "Nogo" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Noyo"; and strike out the period at the end of the paragraph, insert in lieu thereof a comma, and add the following words: "and subject to the conditions set forth in said document"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Tennessee River and tributaries, North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky: Survey, at a cost not to exceed $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference reached no agreement on Senate amendment No. 11.

Amendments numbered 15 and 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15 and 16, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In the language proposed by the Senate amendments strike out the words "landing place" and insert in lieu thereof the word "harbor," so as to make the matter affected by the amendment to read: "any one harbor in any one fiscal year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 6 as the last paragraph in section 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed by the Senate amendment strike out the word "heretofore," at the beginning of line 3; also strike out the comma after the word "contracts" in line 6 of the amendment, insert in lieu thereof a period, and strike out the balance of the matter proposed, so as to make the section read:

"SEC. 10. That any work of improvement herein adopted, and any public work on canals, rivers, and harbors adopted by Congress may be prosecuted by direct appropriations, by continuing contracts, or by both direct appropriations and continuing contracts."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter proposed in the Senate amendment strike out the proviso at the end of the first paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That this provision shall not apply to those rafting logs except upon a direct request upon the owner to furnish specific information," and in the second line of the second paragraph strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 18, after line 17; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 12, to follow amendment No. 58; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 53: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 9; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 17, after line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "Cheboygan River, Mich., in the city of Cheboygan, with a view to securing a depth of 16 feet between the State Street Bridge and Elm Street"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with its insertion on page 13, after line 18; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 14. That the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission is hereby extended, for the purposes of levee protection and bank protection, to the tributaries and outlets of the Mississippi River between Cairo, Ill., and the Head of the Passes, in so far as these tributaries and outlets are affected by the flood waters of the Mississippi River."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference recommends that the paragraph relating to Plymouth Harbor, Mass., on page 3, lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, be transferred to page 1, after line 7.

W. L. JONES,
KNUTE NELSON,
WM. M. CALDER,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,
RICHARD P. FREEMAN,
AMOS H. RADCLIFFE,
JOHN J. KINDRED,
J. J. MANSFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the action of the House relating to this same matter may be laid before the Senate for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 11 to the bill (H. R. 10766) entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," and concur therein;

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 3;

That the House further disagree to the amendment of the Senate No. 23 and request a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. DEMPSEY, Mr. FREEMAN, Mr. RADCLIFFE, Mr. MANSFIELD, and Mr. KINDRED be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire that the conference report be agreed to, and then I shall move that the Senate recede from the two amendments to which the House disagrees.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, before that is done, may I ask the Senator what the two amendments provide?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The two amendments to which I refer are the amendments relating to the Dismal Swamp Canal and the Cape Cod Canal.

Mr. MOSES. Then may I ask, further, what becomes of these two measures? The Cape Cod proposal has already been passed upon in one or two Federal proceedings in the courts, and a judgment awarded which was much higher in amount than that carried by this bill and $2,000,000 higher even than that provided in the agreement by the conferees.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to say to the Senator that the House rejected the proposal of the conferees to approve this contract for $9,000,000 by a vote of 109 to 1.

Mr. MOSES. Then may I ask the Senator if the attitude of the House is that the House prefers to pay a judgment of $16,000,000, rendered in the courts, rather than $9,000,000 as provided by this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is no judgment of the court. That case was reversed; but the House has considered that proposition as a separate measure, and another committee, the Interstate Commerce Committee, has considered it; and I think, judging from the debate, that the attitude of the House was that that proposition should be considered as a separate one, and that as it had been considered by a different committee they did not think it just right that the Rivers and Harbors Committee should consider it. After a discussion over there of over an hour they voted, as I say, 109 to 1 to nonconcur in that amendment.

Mr. MOSES. Then the proposal is not dead?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not at all. It will be considered separately.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask what became of the Dismal Swamp Canal proposition?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The House voted to nonconcur in that by a large majority—87 to 29. That will have to be considered hereafter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the Cape Cod Canal was defeated by a larger vote than the Dismal Swamp Canal?

Mr. JONES of Washington. So far as the RECORD shows, that is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, there is some encouragement in that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have read merely the statement that the Senate receded on certain amendments——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that the amendment in which the Senator is interested, I think, was agreed to in conference.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want to ask the Senator to tell us, in the main, what happened to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say that the House has accepted practically all of the Senate amendments except the two that have been referred to. There was one amendment to which they disagreed, a survey for Oakland Harbor, from which the Senate receded because in the bill itself a project is adopted for Oakland Harbor; and I ask the Secretary to state the numbers of the other amendments from which the Senate conferees receded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the numbers of the amendments referred to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amendments numbered 8 and 67

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to indicate to the Senate that the conferees on the part of the Senate yielded the Senate's action, with reference both to the Dismal Swamp Canal and to the Cape Cod Canal, because the House conferees would not consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senate conferees have not yielded on those propositions at all, but I have moved that the Senate recede from those two amendments. I deem it unnecessary and useless to go back to conference with them; but the Senate conferees did not recede. When the matter went back to the House the House accepted the conference report, and then took up these other matters that were in disagreement and considered them separately. They had an hour's discussion on the Dismal Swamp amendment, and then voted to insist upon their disagreement to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is asking the Senate now to recede?

Mr. JONES of Washington. To recede.

Mr. SIMMONS. Because he is satisfied that the House will not consent to those propositions?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the reason.

Mr. SIMMONS. And not because the Senate conferees desire to surrender them?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not at all; simply because we consider it useless to go back to a further conference and endanger the passage of the whole bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will state the inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are not these questions subject to a separate vote?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They will be submitted to the Senate separately.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right. I want to vote separately, because, while I am not willing to waste millions of money upon the Cape Cod proposition, I am willing to waste—I reckon it is waste—one-half of a million upon the Dismal Swamp experiment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The situation is this: The conferees made a report. It had to be made first to the House. The House has acceded to that report and has ordered back to conference the two items in difference.

One item in difference, the East River of New York, was agreed on in the House, so that the only difference now between the House and the Senate is the two items—the Cape Cod Canal and the Dismal Swamp Canal. If the Senate agrees to the conference report, it leaves only those two items in difference. Then, if the Senate recedes from those two amendments, both of them being Senate amendments to the bill, all differences between the two bodies will be at an end, and the bill will pass.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct. I think the proper thing would be to agree to the conference report first, and then to take up the two amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first thing that must be done is to secure the consent of the Senate to consider the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report? The Chair hears none. The question now is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I now move that the Senate recede from amendment numbered 3, which is the Dismal Swamp amendment, for the reasons that I stated awhile ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator another question. If the Senate should refuse to recede, does the Senator think that the House would then agree?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not. I am sure they would not.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senate conferees agreed to the House provision with reference to the East River proposition, did they not, after the House expressed its view?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The House agreed to the Senate provision with reference to the East River.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stand corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington moves that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 22, the Senate inserted the following paragraph:

> Inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase, as a part of said waterway, the existing Lake Drummond Canal, together with all property rights and franchises appertaining thereto, at a price of not to exceed $500,000, in accordance with the report submitted in House Committee Document Numbered 5, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this is a very meritorious proposition. The Government is undoubtedly under moral obligations to make this purchase. I know that the Senate members of the committee of conference are fully conscious of this liability on the part of the Government, and that they are anxious that the Government shall make proper provision for the purchase of this canal.

I should dislike very much to see this proposition defeated. I know the difficulties under which the conferees labor. I know the firm position which the House conferees have taken against this amendment; but I hope the Senate will not vote to recede, and that the House conferees will be given another opportunity to consider this matter in the hope that they may finally come to the conclusion that they ought to accept the action of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has well said, clearly the Government ought to purchase this canal. There are 25,000 people who, when this canal ceases to operate, will be absolutely without transportation, with all their farming, villages, agricultural interests, and all.

There were two canals that ran from Portsmouth, Va., through North Carolina. The Government bought one as part of its inland waterway. Until that was done this canal was very profitable. It did three-fourths of the business, I presume. When the Government bought the other canal and made no charge for its use this canal ceased to be profitable. It is now operated at a loss, and there are 25,000 people in portions of Virginia and North Carolina whose entire business is absolutely dependent on the operation of this canal. As I say, it is being operated at a loss on account of the Government's purchase of the other canal as a part of the inland waterway.

I do hope that this matter can go back, so that the conferees of the House and Senate can have an opportunity to reconsider it and see if they can not reach an agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rather hope that the ancient project for a Dismal Swamp canal can be adopted, and that either now or hereafter the Congress of the United States may appropriate the amount I understand calculated as necessary for it, one-half of a million dollars; but, Mr. President, I am absolutely unwilling to vote, under the guise of saving that ancient project—as old as George Washington himself, costing very little money in comparison with a great many things we are called upon to appropriate for—I am unwilling to pay, in order to see that pass, some nine or eleven million dollars for a Cape Cod canal.

Of course, every man acquainted with the geography of the United States understands the importance of providing in some way an inland waterway to obviate the necessity of passing Cape Hatteras on the outside, thus avoiding all the wreck and death and destruction that Cape Hatteras, sitting like a heathen goddess queen upon her headlands, has witnessed during all the years of this Republic; but to have to pay from nine to eleven million dollars to a little scheme in Massachusetts for a Cape Cod canal in order to get that is a little bit too much. As old Governor McNutt, of Mississippi, said, "A turkey was a leetle bit too much of a bird for one man, and not quite enough for two"; and this Cape Cod proposition is a "leetle" bit too much for one appropriation and not quite enough to carry two, even if the other is the ancient and reverend and almost worshiped scheme of going through the Dismal Swamp. The Dismal Swamp is very sacred to the old Commonwealth and dominion of Virginia, and to the free State Commonwealth of North Carolina—the dear old North State, which was peopled by poor white trash very early in its history, my ancestors being amongst them—but, at the same time, to pay New England $11,000,000 to get this little half million dollars is too much, in my opinion.

I suggest to the Senators from Virginia and to the Senators from North Carolina that hereafter they somehow or other divorce these two propositions one from the other, regarding the poor little Dismal Swamp as the helpless female in trouble, and letting the sinful and adulterous Cape Cod male member of the proposition take care of itself as best it can.

Mr. President, the Senator has done too many of these fool things, giving New England every now and then something like ten or fifteen or twenty million dollars to get something like a quarter of a million, and sometimes only $50,000. The remarkable statesmanship of Virginia and North Carolina has led us into a great many of these errors in days long past, and is even doing it now. They are too willing to compromise by letting the Yankees have the money while we get a little bit of the public benefit. I suggest that rather than agree to this $11,000,000 for Cape Cod we agree to surrender the little half-million dollars for the Dismal Swamp.

Mr. President, the Dismal Swamp is not dismal at all. It is one of the most beautiful places on the surface of the earth, replete with flowers, the moon shining there later at night than in almost any other part of the world, the sun rising earlier than almost anywhere else. But I object to the Commonwealths of Virginia and North Carolina undertaking to drag the cotton States after them, as they always have undertaken to do, in consenting to give Cape Cod this appropriation.

Who wants to go inside Cape Cod, anyhow? It is much more pleasant to go outside of it and sail around it. There is no material danger connected with it. It is not like Cape Hatteras at all. The only thing is to save the Yankees money, and God knows the Yankees have money enough to spend ad libitum. They have not anything but money—and morals, too, of a self-appreciative sort. They have not much else except money, and I object to this felonious combination between the Puritan and the blackleg, as John Randolph said upon a very celebrated occasion. If Virginia and North Carolina can not get a Dismal Swamp canal any other way than by our appropriating $11,000,000 for a Cape Cod canal, God grant they may never get it at all.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have no disposition to make a speech or to enter into the relative merits of these two great projects. I will say that personally I have examined both of them, and they both seem pretty good to me. But I am not going into that, because we are not called upon to vote for them now.

This is one of the most important river and harbor bills that has been before Congress in many years. It adopts a number of very large projects in various portions of the United States, disseminated everywhere, and it would really be a public calamity if the bill were to fail.

The Senate conferees tried in the very best of faith to maintain the action of the Senate in favor of both the Cape Cod Canal and the Dismal Swamp Canal, but we are met with the opposition of the House. We have concluded, after the very best investigation we can make, that the House will not recede, and we are up against this proposition, Shall we recede from these two items, having in mind, so far as I am concerned, that they shall both be enacted in the future, for I am in favor of both of them, and I promise now to try to put them through in proper form in the future. Shall we kill the whole bill because we can not get these two items? I say that that would be foolish. I say we should follow the lead of the Senator from Washington and recede from these two items in order that this very important measure may pass, and my vote certainly will be to recede and let the bill become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recede from Senate amendment No. 3.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate recede from amendment No. 23, which the Secretary will report.

Mr. SMITH. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will inform the Senator.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 14, the Senate agreed to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 12. That the contract dated July 29, 1921, executed by the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co., and transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War and printed in House Document No. 139, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, is hereby ratified on condition that such company files with the Secretary of War its consent in writing that paragraph 8 of such contract be amended to read as follows:

"8. The payment of the amount herein agreed to be paid, or any part of same, to the said canal company is to be upon the express condition that the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co. waives, in writing, any and all claims of any nature whatsoever that it may have against the President, the Director General of Railroads, or the United States, and upon such release the Director General of Railroads shall release the company from any claim or demand against the company growing out of Federal control."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede from this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LIBERIAN LOAN.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the unfinished business, House Joint Resolution 270, be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 270) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to establish a credit with the United States for the Government of Liberia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. CURTIS. It is my intention to move an executive session. I merely wanted to get the unfinished business before the Senate. I understand the Senators who want to speak on it will not be ready until to-morrow morning.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3307) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 19, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we bless Thee that a divine light falls daily upon our pathway. May this providence give consecration to our labors, support to those who bear burdens, and let it sustain all when the light burns low. We praise Thee that Thou wilt never cause us a needless tear. Lead us to ever open our hearts to the great sources of divine help. O be Thou with this generation of men. Rescue Christian civilization from the arch prince of hate, whose vicious passions fall like daggers upon Thy innocent children. Keep the heart, the mind, and the life of our country from all things that profane God, and may purity, honor, and Christian chivalry be the blossoms that shall forever lie on its fair brow. In the name of the Son of man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8475. An act to relieve enlisted men affected thereby from certain hardship incident to the operation of the proviso of section 4b of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920; and

H. R. 11347. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer and convey to the State of Connecticut all right and title now vested in the United States to land and buildings thereon known as Fort Hale.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 244. Joint resolution to donate to the American Legion certain war trophies captured by or surrendered to the armed forces of the United States in the World War.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3307. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the city of Springfield, Mass., certain streets within the Springfield Armory Military Reservation, Mass., and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that September 18 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 6929. An act for the relief of Horace E. Walker;
H. R. 8173. An act for the relief of Mrs. E. H. Jackson;
H. R. 8073. An act for the relief of the Kineo Trust Co.;
H. R. 11843. An act for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in grain, by regulating transactions on grain future exchanges, and for other purposes;
H. R. 11116. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869, as amended;
H. R. 7425. An act for the relief of Zah Barmon; and
H. R. 5214. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1923.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12704, deficiency appropriation bill, and pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be confined to 20 minutes, 10 minutes to be used by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and 10 minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill, and pending that asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 20 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by himself and 10 minutes by the gentleman from South Carolina. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12704, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1922 and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12704) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1922 and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the Committee on Appropriations, in presenting the accompanying bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1922 and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation thereof:

The estimates were submitted to Congress by the President in House Documents Nos. 376, 377, 378, 380, 387, and 389 of the present session aggregating $635,598.15. In addition to this sum the committee considered the appropriation necessary on account of Federal fuel distribution, $250,000 having been proposed for such purpose in House bill 12472. These two sums make the aggregate of requests or estimates considered by the committee in connection with this bill of $885,598.15.

The amount recommended to be appropriated in the bill is $560,688.08, or $324,910.07 less than the estimates considered.

The entire amount recommended to be appropriated for the executive branch of the Government, or $524,898.61, is for the fiscal year 1923, divided as follows:

Federal fuel distribution	$150,000.00
Interstate Commerce Commission	166,150.00
Department of Labor	6,436.11
Department of State	202,312.50

The committee proposes an appropriation of $150,000 to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel." While the act authorizes an appropriation of $250,000 the Secretary of Commerce testified before the committee that the amount required depended entirely upon the length of time Federal supervision was to continue; that $250,000 would be required if supervision extended until next spring, but that a considerably smaller sum would suffice if transportation were gotten back to normal earlier than the framers of the law had anticipated.

An appropriation of $100,000 is recommended for the Interstate Commerce Commission for the employment of additional service agents and other personnel to carry into effect recent orders of the commission looking to the relief of rail transportation. Service Order No. 22 provides for the rerouting of all freight cars in transit in a manner to effect the maximum of expedition. Service Order No. 23 provides for priorities in car service for food and fuel products.

Fifteen additional inspectors to enforce the safety appliance act are also provided for the commission. Their salaries and traveling expenses for the remainder of the fiscal year will require $66,150. The evidence brought out at the hearing was to the effect that bad-order cars had materially increased in number since the beginning of the strike and that the additional inspectors were essential to the safety of the general public and the employees.

By special act approved June 30, 1922 (Public, No. 260, 67th Cong.), the positions of the Second Assistant Secretary and private secretary to the Second Assistant Secretary were created in the Department of Labor. Appropriations are proposed in this bill for the compensations of these positions at rates in conformity with such act.

The chief item for the State Department is the proposed appropriation of $180,000 for defraying the expenses of determining the amounts of American claims against Germany growing out of the recent war. On August 10, 1922, an agreement was concluded between the United States and Germany to provide a suitable arrangement to obtain rights respecting claims under the treaty of August 25, 1921, between the United States and Germany, securing to the United States and its nationals the rights specified in the joint resolution of Congress approved July 2, 1921, including all the rights and advantages stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaty of Versailles. Under the terms of this agreement a mixed commission consisting of three members is provided for the determination of such claims, one commissioner to be appointed by each Government and the two Governments to appoint an umpire to decide finally upon any questions as to which the commissioners may be unable to agree.

The categories of claims to be considered include those for American property losses in Germany since August 1, 1914, other losses sustained by American citizens since July 31, 1914, as a consequence of the war, and debts owing to American citizens by the German Government or German nationals. It is estimated that the claims probably will aggregate $300,000,000, fifty millions of which are claims of the Government of the United States against the Government of Germany, and $250,000,000 claims of American citizens against the German Government and German nationals.

Under the terms of the agreement the commission will meet at Washington within two months after August 10, 1922, the date the agreement was concluded. For this reason it becomes necessary to provide funds at this time that work may proceed on the preparation of claims for presentation to the commission.

There follows an analysis of the proposed application of the appropriation on the basis of the estimate:

Object.	Rate per annum.	Estimated for period Sept. 1, 1922, to June 30, 1923.	Total.
Mixed Claims Commission:
Expenses of commission (United States share)—
Salaries—
Umpire	$15,000.00	$6,250.00
2 messengers	1,000.00	833.35
2 stenographers	1,400.00	1,166.70
Traveling expenses of umpire	1,000.00	500.00
Printing for commission	500.00	250.00
			$9,000.05
Expenses, United States agency—
Salaries—
Commissioner	12,000.00	10,000.00
Agent	10,000.00	8,333.35
1 counsel	7,500.00	6,250.00
3 counsel	5,000.00	12,500.00
3 law clerks	3,000.00	7,500.00
Joint secretary	3,500.00	2,916.70
Clerk and disbursing officer	3,000.00	2,500.00
5 stenographers	1,400.00	5,833.35
3 messengers	1,000.00	2,500.00
			58,333.40
Rent (including quarters for commission)		7,000.00
Taking testimony abroad		20,000.00
Printing and binding		5,000.00
Reporting proceedings		5,000.00
Furniture		5,000.00
Law books		2,000.00
Contingent and miscellaneous expenses		25,000.00
			69,000.00
Reserve for expenses not practicable to specify in advance of the organization of the commission			63,666.55
Total			200,000.00

The remainder of the amount proposed for the State Department, i. e., $22,312.50, is for the salaries of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Albania and of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, and for the salaries of three secretaries whose appointment is made necessary by reason of the establishment of these additional missions. These Governments were recognized by the Government of the United States on July 28, 1922.

I would say for the information of the House that there is no provision made in this bill for the payment of commissioners created under the fact finding act passed by the House, because the bill has not yet gone through conference. The hope is that when it does go through conference we will be able to provide the necessary funds to carry on the activities of the commission by inserting the amount necessary in the Senate.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. If I have time. How much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I notice in the provision appropriating for the Federal fuel distribution, particularly with reference to the $50,000, that the language of the authorization is not followed, and it occurred to me that the language used in the appropriating bill would not be sufficient to cover what is intended to be covered.

Mr. MADDEN. We thought that we had followed the language sufficiently broadly to cover everything.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The language used in the bill is, "That $50,000 of such sum shall be available for reimbursement and payment upon specific approval of the President of expenses incurred since May 15, 1922, in connection with the matters embraced in the act hereinbefore mentioned." The language of the authorization was, "All expenses, including $50,000 thereof, shall be available for reimbursement and payment," and so forth, "in connection with the work of the President's fuel distribution committee."

Mr. MADDEN. The language we use is in compliance with the law. I do not think there is any doubt about that. But we can take that up further when we get into the five-minute debate.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to consume the 10 minutes which have been agreed upon between the chairman of the committee and myself. I simply want to call attention to this fact, that within 75 days after the beginning of the fiscal year the administration has presented estimates for deficiencies amounting to $635,598; and I wish to express regret that it is so impossible, apparently, to have any accord between our promises and our performances.

All of us promise that we are going to do away with deficiencies, and yet the Committee on Appropriations finds it necessary to bring in a bill within 75 days after the beginning of the fiscal year providing $500,000 for deficiencies. It is necessary, because acts of Congress authorized these expenditures, and the Committee on Appropriations must provide the funds.

It is interesting to know, in view of the many statements that are made about our economy, that for 1922 the total appropriations, including our regular annual appropriations and the deficiencies, amounted to $4,066,316,366, and that for 1923 our total regular annual appropriations, not including deficiencies, amount to $3,747,000,000. Now we begin to climb, starting within the first 90 days of the fiscal year with a deficiency bill. The deficiencies last year amounted to $200,000,000. Judging from this beginning they are going to amount to more than $200,000,000 for 1923. If they do, then instead of there being any reduction in the total appropriations for 1923 there is going to be an actual increase in the appropriations for 1923 over those for the year 1922. And that it is fair to say that these deficiency appropriations are going to be made is evident, for we now have in sight the appropriation for the Liberian loan, which undoubtedly will be authorized by the Senate and has already been authorized by the House. The appropriaton to cover the scrapping of naval vessels must be supplied, and will require $75,000,000 in the estimate of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and for roads at least $25,000,000 additional. So that any man who considers the financial statement of appropriations at this time must realize that we now face the certainty that in 1923 this Congress is going to authorize the expenditure of a larger sum than was authorized for the year 1922.

With respect to the particular bill before the committee I take exception only to one item. The Committee on Appropriations has recommended the bill for passage, because nearly every item has been authorized by the House and by Congress——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What does the gentleman say is the difference between the total appropriations for 1922 and the total appropriations up to this time for 1923, including the amount carried in this present bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. At the beginning of this fiscal year there was appropriated $95,872,535 more than was appropriated at the beginning of the fiscal year 1922. But after the original appropriations were made for 1922, deficiency appropriations were made amounting to $200,000,000. For 1922 the total was $4,066,316,366. But this included deficiencies occurring during the year. For 1923 we start with $3,747,035,382, and to-day we add the first deficiency of $560,688.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. To be followed by further deficiencies?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. If there are no further deficiencies this year, there will be a reduction. But we are confronted by certain deficiencies. For scrapping of naval vessels the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] estimated $75,000,000; the deficiency for roads, the Liberian loan, and other items make it safe for me to predict that when we finish this fiscal year the total appropriations will exceed those of the preceding fiscal year, regular annual and deficiencies.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. So we have this picture, a mounting of appropriations and at the same time an increase of taxation, due to the imposition of higher tariff duties?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. I admit always that there has been a reduction in income taxes, because the income tax is based on the income, and there has been a reduction in the income of nearly every man in America in the last two years, and a consequent reduction in the income tax. But, of course, as to the increase in his taxation by the tariff bill, the gentleman is right.

The only item to which I have objection is the item for the Department of Commerce, providing $30,000 for binding the questionnaires of the last census. There is nothing in the hearings to satisfy me that it is an expenditure that ought to be authorized in this bill. Certainly it is not a deficiency. The census data of individuals for the census of 1920, 1890, and 1910 has not been bound.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe that we may reasonably expect a decrease in appropriations as long as Congress each term continues to create new bureaus, new commissions, new undersecretaries, and new salaried positions to pay out the people's money upon?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The question of the gentleman from Texas is answered by the provisions of this bill, which appropriates money for funds to pay an additional Assistant Secretary of Labor and a secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Labor. If Congress had not created these positions, the Committee on Appropriations would not have to recommend the appropriations in this bill. But, Congress having created these new jobs, the Committee on Appropriations must provide for them. We have created other new jobs and funds must be supplied for them.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KING. What is the remedy for all this?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. To stop passing bills creating new jobs.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman believe that the Democratic Party can do that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the people give us a chance we expect to prove it.

Mr. KING. You did not do it when you had a chance.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Talk, the gentleman knows, is cheap.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have been impressed by that fact.

Mr. LAYTON. The only reason I asked the gentleman to yield to me is because my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has just talked about the creation of new bureaus and so on. If my memory serves me right he voted for a new bureau or the extension of a bureau that carried $1,585,000 appropriation, namely, the maternity bill.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman ought to look up the record before he says that, because he will find that I did not vote on that bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon or that of any other man in the House who did not vote for it.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the expenditures of the United States Government to date, as compared with the same period of last year, show a reduction of $185,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That proves nothing, because expenditures are postponed. I am glad the gentleman has spoken of that, because I know something about it. The fact is that the alleged reduction of the deficit announced on July 1 was the greatest piece of statistical humbuggery that I know of, because the Bureau of the Budget came in here in April and announced a prospective deficit of over $200,000,000, and then when the administration considered the approaching election and its inability to explain that huge deficit they simply delayed the payment of $200,000,000 due to the railroads of this country, carrying it over into this fiscal year, and on July 1 announced there was no deficit. The only difference is that those amounts of money which the Treasury expected to pay during the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1922, were not paid, but were carried over into this fiscal year. They have got to be paid and they will be paid, but not until after the election is over. Then the railroads will get their money, because then there will be no excuse for keeping them out of their money. And then you will see a statement showing a deficit of over $600,000,000 for this fiscal year without taking into account anything for the bonus bill which is to be passed to-morrow by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The time for general debate has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To pay the widow of Lemuel P. Padgett, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee, $7,500.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Page 2, line 4, after the word "Tennessee," insert the words "to be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL FUEL DISTRIBUTION.

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel, granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor, providing for the declaration of car-service priorities in interstate commerce during the present and any succeeding emergency, and to prevent extortion in the sale of fuel," including the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere and all expenses incident to organizing the Federal fuel distribution, $150,000, to be available until expended and to be expended by the Federal fuel distributor under the authority and direction of the President: Provided, That $50,000 of such sum shall be available for reimbursement and payment upon specific approval of the President of expenses incurred since May 15, 1922, in connection with the matters embraced in the act hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 2, line 16, after the word "priorities," strike out the words "in interstate commerce," and after the word "present," in the same line, strike out the words "and any," and in line 17, strike out the word "succeeding," and after the word "prevent" strike out "extortion in," and in line 18, after the word "fuel," insert "at unjust and unreasonably high prices."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to correct the title as it is corrected in the conference report. The title was originally worded as the appropriation committee inserted it, but there was some change in the title when it went to conference, and this simply makes a more correct identification.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman read the language as it will read if his amendment is adopted? In other words, will the gentleman read lines 16, 17, and 18 as they will read if this amendment is adopted?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The whole title will then read as follows:

To declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel; granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission; providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor; providing for the declaration of car-service priorities during the present emergency; and to prevent the sale of fuel at unjust and unreasonably high prices.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman misunderstood me. How will lines 16, 17, and 18 read if the gentleman's amendment is adopted? I suggest that the Clerk read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

So that the amended section will read, beginning with line 10, page 2: "For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to declare a national emergency to exist in the production, transportation, and distribution of coal and other fuel; granting additional powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission; providing for the appointment of a Federal fuel distributor; providing for the declaration of car-service priorities during the present emergency; and to prevent the sale of fuel at unjust and unreasonably high prices.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: Page 3, line 1, after the word "with," strike out the rest of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the words "the work of the President's fuel distribution committee organized for the purpose of helping to meet the emergency existing in the matter of fuel."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I reserve a point of order on the amendment and ask that it be explained.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. WINGO. I reserve it. What is the gentleman proposing to do?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] reserves a point of order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply makes the appropriation in the precise language of the authorization. The precise language was not in existence when the bill was drawn and this is simply for the sake of accuracy.

Mr. WINGO. Will the effect of it be to authorize the payment of the machinery that was being used before the enactment of the act?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes. That was carried in the other act.

Mr. WINGO. That is all you do?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. That was carried in the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, in line 23, on page 2, should not that be "not to exceed $50,000 of such sum shall be available"?

Mr. MADDEN. That is the amount of money they have spent. This is to reimburse them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If there should be any balance, it will not be spent?

Mr. MADDEN. No. This is to reimburse them for what they have spent.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in line 20, on page 2, after the word "the" I move to insert the words "work of the."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: On page 2, line 20, after the word "the" insert the words "work of the."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I question whether it is good grammar to say, "the work of the Federal fuel distribution." It should be "the work of Federal fuel distribution."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think that is proper language. The way it reads now, "organizing the Federal fuel distribution," that is not very good language, and besides it does not follow the language in the bill. The language in the bill is "organizing the work of the President's fuel distribution committee," but that has already been identified, so I think by inserting the words "work of the" it will be sufficient.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is better grammar to leave out the article "the" so that the language will be "organizing the work of Federal fuel distribution."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will gladly accede to the desire of the member of the Appropriations Committee and omit the article "the" or any other little article that the gentleman wishes omitted.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are only desirous of having the thing in proper form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment: Page 2, line 20, after the word "the" insert the words "work of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MIXED CLAIMS COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.

For the expense of determining the amounts of claims against Germany by the mixed commission established under the agreement concluded between the United States and Germany on August 10, 1922, for the determination of the amount to be paid by Germany in satisfaction of the financial obligations of Germany under the treaty concluded between the Governments of the United States and Germany on August 25, 1921, including the expenses which under the terms of such agreement of August 10, 1922, are chargeable in part to the United States; and the expenses of an agency of the United States to perform all necessary services in connection with the preparation of claims and the presentation thereof before said mixed commission, including salaries of an agent and necessary counsel and their assistants and employees, rent in the District of Columbia, printing and binding, contingent and traveling expenses, and such other expenses in the United States or elsewhere as the President may deem proper, $180,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations how many troops we now have in Germany, and what is the cost of maintaining them there?

Mr. MADDEN. We have about 1,000 troops over there now, as I understand it. This language has no relation to maintaining the troops. This is the appropriation for this mixed commission.

Mr. WINGO. I understand that. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel like letting the occasion pass without expressing my regret that the implied promise made to a great many American people in the last campaign that if you would simply put the Republican administration in, the German people would no longer have quartered on them American soldiers, has not been carried out. The last administration was criticized very severely for that. I suppose no deficiency has arisen for that expense or the committee would have reported a bill to cover it. Of course, the usual defense will be made that the Democrats put them over there, and the usual defense further is that it takes a Republican administration two or three years to act on anything, even the matter of withdrawing troops.

They can not do a thing all at once. They are withdrawing them gradually, and they say they have only a thousand left. I think that, judging the future by the past, this administration may in two or three years time get around to it and withdraw all of them.

I also wish to express my regret that Republican voices which were once loud and vociferous in this Chamber protesting because it was alleged, although falsely, that the last administration was not making vigorous representations to the French Government against the quartering of black troops on the German people, are no longer heard. As a matter of fact, representations were made by the last administration, and the French Government promised to withdraw its colored troops. But the latest reports that I have show that those black troops are still quartered upon the German people, and a gentleman who recently returned from there told me something about their atrocities. The cases of attempted rape and accomplished rape were 70 in number, and there were other sexual misdemeanors, cases of unnatural intercourse with boys, and so forth. Where are those voices now on the other side of the aisle that were protesting with an obvious purpose? They were indignant then. I am still indignant. The truth of the business is that Mr. Wilson expressed the situation correctly when he said that America did not make war upon the German people but upon their autocratic Government. I want now here to protest with my voice, humble though it is, against this administration continuing to quarter our own troops on the German people and their failure to enter a vigorous protest to the French Government, and to use our diplomatic offices to protect the German people against the continuous burden and outrages of those black troops in Germany.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in response to what the gentleman from Arkansas has just said that, in my judgment, the present administration has fully and in absolute good faith complied with its promises, expressed or implied, if any such were made, that the troops should be withdrawn from the Rhine. The small number of troops mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a thousand or a few more, indicate that there is to-day no military force, in any real sense, of Americans left on the Rhine.

In my humble judgment, the representation we now have on the Rhine, military in name only, is in fact a more effective influence for peace than anything else this Government is now doing or could do. [Applause.] It would be a serious mistake, so serious that its consequences might be carried forward over many years, for us at the present time to entirely withdraw our men from the Rhine.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to state my appreciation of the gentleman's defense being couched in the language used by those who advocate the League of Nations. Now, as to the black troops quartered on the German people, what representations have been made by this Government to the French Government?

Mr. TILSON. I know nothing as to what diplomatic representations have been made, but after having been on the Rhine, and while there having conferred with numerous people—many Germans as well as French—I can say that so far as I could learn there is at the present time no such serious menace as that of which the gentleman from Arkansas speaks. From all that I could learn and from such information as I was able to get, the impression made upon me was that such ground as there had been immediately following the war for the charges referred to by the gentleman has been removed. No one has condoned or attempted to condone any crime that has been committed on the Rhine or elsewhere by the French colonial troops, by our own troops, or by any troops, and unfortunately there have been offenses committed by all.

Mr. WINGO. There are Morrocans, Singalese, and negroes quartered there, and there have been complaints and representations that they ought not to be there.

Mr. TILSON. It is a fact that there are some colonial troops on the Rhine, but, if I am correctly informed, organizations, members of which have been guilty of the crimes indicated, have been sent back to their homes, so that at present there are no organizations left the members of which have been guilty of the character of crimes referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I assume that the gentleman from Connecticut covered practically the same territory as I did two years ago. At that time there were a large number of colonial troops in the French occupied territory at Bonn, and well up and down the Rhine, and almost daily they were committing the unspeakable crime. One Singalese who committed a crime against a youth was given six months, when if it had been in this country we would have shot him.

Mr. WINGO. And it is still going on.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was on the Rhine over three years ago, immediately after the war. There were great numbers of colonial troops there at that time, and I heard more or less veiled statements as to some of the crimes committed by these men. That was more than three years ago. I was on the Rhine again three months ago. There are some colonial troops there yet, but they are very greatly reduced in number and not to be compared with the number the gentleman from Minnesota speaks of. I was informed by Germans who occupy positions of importance, and others, that what the gentleman refers to is not now regarded as a serious menace or one of the serious problems yet to be dealt with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more. He has been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. TILSON. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota. As I have said, the impression I got from talking with a great many people—and I conversed with all kinds of people from the reischskommissor to the waiter at the table—was that such fears as may have been felt earlier have largely passed away.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, it is gratifying to us to know that the numbers have been reduced to the extent they have been reduced. Not only Morroccos but Singalese are still there, and last week the Singalese troops committed the atrocities I spoke of.

Mr. TILSON. I can not speak from personal knowledge, except as to the presence of colonial troops, but I am giving the facts as they were given to me when on the Rhine three months ago, and the impressions I received from such information.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Are the black troops still quartered in the German homes?

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe that they are. It is now the policy, I was informed, to quarter the troops in public buildings, and I know that the troops do occupy public buildings. There may be instances where they are quartered in homes, but I did not learn of any such. I had no mission to inquire particularly into such matters, and yet I was interested in trying to get such reliable information as I could.

Mr. KNUTSON. I know that French officers up and down the Rhine used to make their boasts that they were going to introduce new blood into Germany.

Mr. TILSON. I know nothing whatever of such boasts. The gentleman may have made more inquiries in this particular field than I did, for I did not follow this line of investigation.

Going back to the original proposition in regard to withdrawing our troops from the Rhine, I hope that no one will do our troops the injustice to say or feel that they are kept there for any other purpose than for such influence as they may exert on behalf of world peace. I think that they are exerting a great influence for good there in showing to the people of Germany, as well as to France, Belgium, and England, that this country means to be fair and just to all; that we do not desire additional territory on the Rhine or elsewhere; that our purpose in maintaining a small force there is to stand as a witness for this country, and that all we desire is that there shall be permanent and real peace. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Did the gentleman get any impression whether the American troops wanted to come back or whether they are well satisfied to stay there?

Mr. TILSON. The troops are very well satisfied. One officer expressed it in this way, that the only way to get an American soldier away was to drive him on the train at the point of the bayonet. Our troops are well satisfied and wish to stay there as long as they can render valuable service. Better still, the German people and, strange to say, the French, Belgians, and English are all equally desirous that they shall remain there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TILSON. I yield.
Mr. EVANS. We were advised in newspaper reports that the French failed to pay proper respect to the American command on the Rhine. Is the gentleman able to advise us as to the truth or falsity of that statement?
Mr. TILSON. I am not; but I do not believe it to be true. My information received directly from the French was to the effect that they were not only willing but very proud to serve under American commanders. Many of them at Coblenz are under the command of General Allen, and they appeared glad to serve under an American commander. Nor was there any friction between the Americans and the French, so far as I was informed.
In the remaining minute, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will allow me, I desire to press home the point that no injustice should be done to our troops who are serving our country so faithfully and effectively on the Rhine. We should try to fully appreciate rather than in any wise depreciate the work that General Allen and his officers and men are doing there. I regard their work as a real and lasting contribution to world peace. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. If the gentleman from Connecticut will take the floor again I will thank him. When we passed what was called the separate peace resolution it was declared that the troops would be immediately withdrawn. In the political campaign of 1920 certainly it was held out to the country by the successful candidate for the Presidency that a separate peace would be adopted as quickly as the House and Senate could pass and he could sign it, and by plain implication it was held out that the troops would be withdrawn. Now, let me say to the gentleman, if I may, that I never had any particular sympathy with that. I thought those who were holding the troops there were doing it for some good purpose that was not inimical to the interests of the United States. But the party of the gentleman, the political nominee for the Presidency, did not hold out that idea, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] who brought in the bill, the appropriation bill, held out the idea that the troops were going to be withdrawn at once. Now we come to the question I desire to ask: Is the administration ready to apologize for its mistake?
Mr. TILSON. In the first place I do not believe that the administration made a mistake. I think that it was the intention and purpose to withdraw our troops as soon as practicable, but circumstances arose which convinced the administration that it would be helpful to world peace—which includes ourselves—that a representation remain there rather than withdraw them all. Having come to the conclusion that it would make for the peace of the whole world, ourselves included, a small representation, in no sense a military force, has been retained there.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They are soldiers?
Mr. TILSON. Yes; but 1,200 men, at a maximum, could be overwhelmed in an hour.
Mr. FAIRCHILD. Whether it is 1,200 or 500 it is military jurisdiction.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have the floor, but I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. FAIRCHILD. Whether it is 1,200 or 500 it is a military jurisdiction exercised by the United States of America in the army of occupation zone nearly four years after the armistice.
Mr. TILSON. Technically, we have a military force there undoubtedly, but the gentleman will have to admit that a force of 1,200 men is not in any fighting sense a military force.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for an additional five minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.
Mr. BANKHEAD. With the gentleman's permission, I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] this: If these troops are not there purely in a military capacity, what other function do they exercise in their occupancy of that territory outside of that of a military force?
Mr. TILSON. Well, a military force oftentimes exercises a function that is not purely military. Sometimes it may be a function of great delicacy, which is in no true sense a military function.
Mr. BANKHEAD. They do not exercise a diplomatic function, do they?
Mr. TILSON. I think that the effect of their being there is diplomatic in a sense. I consider it a diplomatic effect, because, as I believe, it makes for peace. It, at any rate, reduces the danger of friction between the other powers to have an American force there whom both sides believe to be on the square, with no selfish interests and no ulterior motives. It has a wholesome effect upon all concerned.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, a force of 50,000 might indicate the balance of power?
Mr. TILSON. Fifty thousand becomes a real military force.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Connecticut always tries to answer questions candidly, and——
Mr. TILSON. I try to.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman does not believe, then, that the Democratic administration made a mistake in retaining the troops there?
Mr. TILSON. Well, judging from the fact of their being there at the present time and what they are doing now, I can say no. Whether a previous administration maintained too many there, in order to make it appear as a fighting force, I do not undertake to say. All of that was in the past. At any rate, I believe that it is now for the best interests of this country and of the whole world for us to have a representation on the Rhine as long as the circumstances remain as they are at present.
Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TILSON. Yes.
Mr. STEAGALL. As I understand the gentleman's statement, the conditions there have been aggravated since the campaign when the promise was made that the troops would be removed. If the conditions are growing worse, is it contemplated that the force there will be increased?
Mr. TILSON. It is not a case of force. An increased force would not do any good. The problem on the Rhine is now not one of force.
Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TILSON. Yes.
Mr. KINDRED. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. Referring to the matter of the employment by the French of negro troops in Germany, may I ask the gentleman if he agrees with me that the President ought to make further representations looking toward getting rid of the offensive Singalese and other negro French troops in Germany?
Mr. TILSON. I do not wish to go into the matter of the international relations between our own country and other nations. I do not know enough about it, in the first place; and, in the next place, opinions formed upon insufficient or faulty information concerning relations between nations may, if unwisely expressed, do harm instead of good. These are oftentimes delicate matters when it comes to dealings between nations, so that I am not at all sure that we should accomplish any good, and we might do much harm. I do not know what is best, but I am willing to leave it to the judgment of those in charge of such matters, who are much better informed than I am.
Mr. KINDRED. Does the gentleman think that negro troops are not necessary?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.
Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on line 7 of page 5, to strike out "$180,000" and insert "$175,000."
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: On page 5, line 7, strike out "$180,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$175,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to get some information from the chairman of the committee. Later I may ask the House to allow me to withdraw this amendment. I see that in estimating the expense of this commission an estimate is sent in for $5,000 for the purchase of furniture. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] if, before the purchase of any new furniture, the commission would be compelled to make an inquiry under the general law to find out whether the surplus furniture that we have would be adequate?
Mr. MADDEN. It must be done in every case. The general law now fixes it so that upon the creation of a new office or commission they can not secure furniture without first drawing upon the supplies that we now have.

Mr. BLACK. The purchasing officer will not authorize the purchase of any new furniture unless they get a clearance from the supply committee?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks leave to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

BUREAU OF THE CENSUS.

Not exceeding $30,000 of the appropriation for collecting statistics, Bureau of the Census, for the fiscal year 1923, may be used for binding the schedules containing the names and census data for the individuals enumerated at the census of 1920 and prior censuses.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Beginning on line 8, page 5, and ending on line 14, strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have offered that motion, as I stated in my opening remarks, because this is the only item in the bill that I am opposed to. I am opposed to this for the reason that it certainly is not a deficiency. If you will look at the bill, you will see that it provides that not exceeding $30,000 of the appropriation for collecting statistics for 1923 shall be used to bind schedules containing census data for individuals enumerated in the census of 1920 and prior censuses.

In the hearings before the committee there was absolutely nothing to justify this appropriation except the statement of Secretary Hoover, to be found on page 12, that it is necessary to bind the schedules of the last census—not previous censuses, but the last census. The information which the chairman of the committee gave us was that it was the data for the census of 1900, the census of 1910, and the census of 1920, now in the department and unbound.

Mr. MADDEN. I said 1890, 1910, and 1920.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman says 1890, 1910, and 1920. That information, however, is not in accord with the statement of Secretary Hoover in the hearings, where he says, on page 12:

These are the schedules of the last census.

I take the statement of the chairman of the committee to be correct—that it is to bind the data of the census of 1920 and the previous censuses of 1910 and 1890.

Now, gentlemen will understand that this means that the individual questionnaires submitted to the people all over the country in 1890, 1910, and 1920 are down at the department, and they propose to bind them. No other information is given to the committee as to the necessity for this expenditure of $30,000 to bind these questionnaires, and I submit that there is no justification for considering this a deficiency, and that this matter should be left until the regular session, when the official in charge of this bureau can come before the committee and we can ascertain, first of all, why it is necessary to retain all of these questionnaires throughout all time to come, and also whether $30,000 is necessary. It occurs to me that if there is one thing that this Government does in its departments it is to keep unnecessary papers. As a result we have an agitation for the construction of an expensive archives building. I can not conceive of any reason why the Department of Commerce should find it necessary to go back into the questionnaires of 20, 30, 40, or 50 years ago. The purpose of collecting that data was to procure information on which the census was to be founded, and all the information which was of value has been printed. If it was not printed, it ought to have been printed. If there is any good reason, it can be shown at the next session, and if they have not been bound since 1890 there can exist no necessity for immediate consideration without any information. There is no necessity for our appropriating $30,000 at this time to bind these old questionnaires down at the Department of Commerce.

My friend will say that this is not an additional appropriation, because it simply authorizes the expenditure of funds that the Department of Commerce already has. If that be so, it shows conclusively that we gave the Department of Commerce more money than it needed, or else they would not come here within 75 days after the beginning of the fiscal year and say that it is more important to do this work, which has been neglected since 1890, than any other work for which they have those funds.

The fact is that that is the easy way to get an appropriation. If you come in here and ask for cash you have a pretty hard time getting it. You would have a pretty hard time getting $30,000 for this binding. But let them tell us that they will use it out of some funds that they now have, and they get it. But what is the result? Six months from now there will be a deficiency in that fund. The Department of Commerce will come here and ask for a deficiency caused by the diversion of this $30,000, and the Congress will give it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to use the three minutes to state that the estimates submitted for the Statistical Bureau of the Department of Commerce were voluntarily reduced by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce by about $400,000.

Mr. MADDEN. At the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I had a very strong suspicion that that was so. It was my belief that it was voluntarily done by reason of the pressure brought by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the Secretary of Commerce wrote a letter reducing the estimate by $400,000 for the funds for this statistical work. The chairman saved $400,000 and improved the service. Then the United States Senate for once said that if we could cut it $400,000 they would cut it a little bit more. They did cut it, and after these cuts were made the Secretary of Commerce now comes in and says: "If you will give me the authority, I will use $30,000 of the funds allotted to the Statistical Bureau to bind census questionnaires and will have enough money left to get along with."

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose he does not use it for this purpose. Will he use it for some other purpose, or will it come back into the Treasury?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He is on record as saying that other work he has is not so important, and therefore this $30,000 can be saved; and we can remind him of it whenever he comes back if that $30,000 is not turned back into the Treasury. I have enough confidence in the members of the President's Cabinet to believe that the Secretary of Commerce is going to stand for what he has said, that he does not really need it for important work, and if you do not let him spend it for binding he will turn it back into the Treasury. I do not know whether my friend from Pennsylvania shares my confidence in that regard or not.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know anything about it; but is this binding necessary?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The chairman of the committee will tell you that these questionnaires were not bound in 1910 or in 1890, and I say if it was unnecessary to bind them then, it is not necessary now, when the people are in worse financial condition than ever before, and we can save this $30,000. If it could be postponed since 1890, we can postpone it a little while without endangering the safety of the country. Let it go over to the regular session and then let us have a hearing to find out why it is necessary, so that we can determine whether these papers ought to be saved at all. If they can not show that it is necessary we can tell them to destroy the questionnaires. If they can show that it is necessary we can make some investigation as to the amount necessary. My objection is that without any information we are asked to provide $30,000 for binding in a deficiency appropriation. It is not a deficiency and there is no reason for consideration at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened many times to speeches delivered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], but I question whether I ever listened to one in which he has disclosed so much lack of information as he disclosed in the remarks just made. He says that this data has been printed and that there is no further need for it. The fact is if he knows anything at all about the facts stated in the questionnaires that have been gathered by the collectors of the census, that these questionnaires are not printed, but they are the original documents——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Excuse me, the gentleman misunderstood me if he understood me to say they had all been printed. I said that all the information of value in these questionnaires had been collated and printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I differ with the gentleman in his statement that all the information contained in these questionnaires has been printed, because if he knows the use to which these questionnaires are put from time to time, he knows that they are of inestimable value in the workings of the Government. I can cite the gentleman to one case which ought to be sufficient to convince the gentleman that these records should not be destroyed.

For instance, a case arises where it is necessary to know whether the parents of a certain individual were living in this country at a certain time, or the nationality of that parentage. That may be disclosed by a questionnaire in the census of 1850, 1860, or 1870. There is necessity often in such cases to resort to these questionnaires.

On this question of the need for binding these sheets we should take the testimony of some person who is acquainted directly with the facts. We have here the report of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, in which he discloses the fact that there is frequent use of these questionnaires for reference when called upon by various bureaus. It is generally understood that these questionnaires for 1890, 1910, and 1920 were stored in the old Census Building. Many of them were impaired by the fire, and they require attention.

No one who knows anything about modern office work will question the fact that in order to have expeditious work an essential is the proper filing of correspondence. If you are going to be so cheeseparing in your policy of economy that you are going to allow these valuable records to be in this distorted and impaired condition where they can not be availed of readily when called for by other bureaus for use, you will merely multiply the cost. It is not intended to have these questionnaires bound in morocco or even bound in cloth. As the assistant director of the bureau stated in his letter which was before the committee, they would be bound in millboard binding. There is no money available in the existing appropriation for this year for binding. There is surplus money for other purposes, but no money available for this purpose. Looking at it from a business standpoint, I take it that it is economy to have these things bound in some cheap form, millboard binding only, so that when the Bureau of Immigration, for instance, wants information as to the parentage of a certain person, that information may be readily available. If the money is needed now, it should be appropriated, and the work should not be deferred for six months when these records may become more impaired, and during which time can not be utilized without a valuable clerk at $1,800 or $2,000 a year spending a whole day in making a search because of the disjointed form in which these questionnaires are kept, when if they were properly bound you could get the information in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what he thinks about this?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The hearings on this item were very brief. The Secretary of Commerce came before us and said it was very important to have the authority to bind these schedules. I did not ask him many questions. The hearings will not disclose much information. I am sorry that I did not go into the matter more particularly in the hearings. Since I found there was so much interest in this subject, I have made some inquiries and I find that the schedules referred to are the original schedules carrying the names, ages, and other information relating to persons enumerated in the census. I find that the information contained on these cards is frequently furnished by the Government in photostatic form to the county and State governments of the country and to the courts in many cases, that all the historical associations of the United States use them in very large numbers, that the Pension Bureau uses the information on these cards, and that very frequently where there is a prosecution for a violation of the Mann Act or some other act they use this information in order to establish the ages of the persons. Mr. Hoover did say the information on the cards went back as far as 1790. He said further that if the schedules were not bound they were not really available for the examinations which are made in the course of important investigations; that if they were used they were likely to be lost and no one could tell the value of the information that is contained in them, nor its importance.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understood the chairman to say that the data for 1890, 1910, and 1920 has not been bound.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; those have not been bound.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did the Secretary give any reason why they had not been bound and why it is essential now in a deficiency bill to have an appropriation to bind the records of 1890, 1910, and 1920?

Mr. MADDEN. No. As I say, there was very little information given in the hearings on the subject. I did not ask many questions, because I thought the statement he made justified the binding. If I had had any idea that there was going to be such an interest in it, I should have made a more extensive examination.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the chairman think that the fact that these records have gone unbound so long we can let them go over until the regular session so that we may ascertain something more as to their importance?

Mr. MADDEN. The Secretary thought that the information they contained was such that he was justified in asking to be authorized to do this binding, because he was fearful that without the binding the information would be lost.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want to say that my own experience corroborates what has been said, where it was necessary to make heirship in a large estate. This data was invaluable because it furnished the family history under which it was possible to make proper distribution of the large estate. I want to say that some of these sheets are kept loose in the department, and it is a difficult task to find them; when you have found them they are liable to be mislaid, and it certainly is in the interest of governmental efficiency to bind the schedules. They are the only data we have in the United States relating to the population of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the chairman think that this department should do this binding and that it is now the time to bind them?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; this is as good time as any.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, in connection with some remarks I made a few minutes ago in regard to the removal of the troops from the Rhine, I ask unanimous consent to extend in 8-point type an interview I gave to the Washington Post a few days ago which gives further information somewhat along the same line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I was interested in the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina that possibly this money might be diverted and used in some other channel by the Department of Commerce. I want to tell some of my personal troubles in the Department of Commerce, and I wish some of this money might be used in some other bureau of that department. We have in the city I have the honor to represent a harbor and channel that need some aids to navigation. They have a bureau in this Department of Commerce known as the Aids to Navigation Bureau or Lighthouse Department. Nearly nine months ago I applied for four additional gas buoy lights to light up the channel of about 16 miles in Toledo Harbor. The appropriation made, as I understand, was four and a half million dollars for this department, and yet I could not get four gas buoys at an expense of $5,500 to save hundreds of thousands of dollars of expense to the boat lines doing business in the Toledo Harbor. I talked recently with some of the freight captains of the Great Lakes, and they told me that when they come into the Toledo Harbor after nightfall they must lie at the outer light until daylight in the morning, because they do not dare come down the channel that is filling up with silt which comes down the river. They do not dare because they have not a sufficient number of lights in the channel. Here you are spending $30,000 to bind a lot of schedules that probably will never be used.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. The gentleman's experience is similar to my own experience. I represent a coastal district, and it does seem like the Government is going out of the business of lighting the commercial waterways of the country and quit lighting the waters of the rivers and harbors of the country entirely.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was wondering whether the Bureau of Navigation in the Department of Commerce had jurisdiction over the special matter the gentleman refers to.

Mr. CHALMERS. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the Corps of Engineers of the War Department had jurisdiction of the establishment of lights and buoys. The Bureau of Navigation has jurisdiction as far as the equipment is concerned, and I was under the impression that the Board of Engineers of the War Department had charge of gas buoys.

Mr. CHALMERS. No; this matter falls under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to say that the gentleman from Wisconsin is not informed on that subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. I prefaced my remarks with the statement that I was not certain about that.

Mr. CHALMERS. I will say that the aids to navigation and gas buoys come under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Lighthouses in the Department of Commerce.

You may think that the Toledo Harbor is unimportant, but $5,500 would save these freight captains from staying outside overnight. They do not dare to come into the channel at night. In the Toledo Harbor we do over 13,000,000 tons of business per year. There are very few harbors in the country that do a larger business. Coal is pouring through there now to save you people of the Northwest from freezing, and yet our boats must lie out there overnight because the Government can not afford an expenditure of $5,500 for four gas buoys.

Mr. SEARS. I want to say that my district is in the same situation. The gentleman is appealing for a real benefit to his people and therefore can not get any result, but papers that have been lying loose for 20 years must now be bound.

Mr. BUTLER. Why can not the gentleman get the gas buoys?

Mr. DOWELL. Is it because there is no appropriation or because it is placed at the wrong point?

Mr. CHALMERS. I think it is because it is placed at the wrong point.

Mr. DOWELL. Then an increase of appropriation would not get any more than you have at the present time.

Mr. HICKS. I do not think the gentleman should blame the Commissioner of Lighthouses.

Mr. CHALMERS. I have not said that I do. But I want to notify the House now that next year I will see to it that not only an appropriation is made for these gas buoys but that a sufficient sum is provided to deepen and widen our channel so that the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors will be able to carry out the legislative enactment of the rivers and harbors bill of this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina) there were—ayes 17, noes 47.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12704), the deficiency appropriation bill, had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on amendments and bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back immediately with the following amendment. On page 5, beginning with line 8, strike out the paragraph from line 8 to line 14, inclusive.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith striking out the paragraph on page 5, beginning with line 8 and ending with line 14, inclusive.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The committee again divided and there were—yeas 19, noes 62.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment to receive a message from the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. If it does not lose me the point.

The SPEAKER. It is obvious there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 68, nays 200, answered "present" 1, not voting 158, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MADDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis, Mo., and Salt Lake City, Utah, to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. CALDER, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to joint resolution (S. J. Res. 215) providing for reinvestigation of tri-county irrigation project in Nebraska, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCNARY, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. SHEPPARD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COAL COMMISSION BILL.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I wish in behalf of the conferees on the bill H. R. 12377, known as the Coal Commission bill, to request the privilege of filing, if necessary, the conference report and accompanying statement as late as 12 o'clock to-night.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What bill is that?

Mr. WINSLOW. It is known as the Coal Commission bill, a bill to establish a commission to be known as the United States Coal Commission for the purpose of securing information in connection with questions relative to interstate commerce in coal, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the conferees on the bill H. R. 12377 may have until 12 o'clock to-night in which to file the conference report and statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the deficiency bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the deficiency bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday we passed the bill S. 3890, to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920. I move to lay the corresponding bill, S. 2307, on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to lay on the table bill S. 2307. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 10419.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 10419. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and agree to the same.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
I. L. LENROOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 12 authorize the issuance of patents in eight additional cases, all of which have the approval of E. C. Finney, Acting Secretary of the Interior, as shown by his letters set forth in Senate Report No. 833 on said bill (H. R. 10419).

The amendments numbered 8, 9, 10, and 11 change words from the singular to the plural.

N. J. SINNOTT,
ADDISON T. SMITH,
CARL HAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain briefly the purport of the amendments agreed to?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a customary land relief bill, such as is usually passed at every session of Congress. The House bill contained items giving relief to 12 entrymen. The Senate added additional items. Every item added in the Senate bill was added at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, and the committee of conference, after carefully going over the letters from the Interior Department and the data regarding the same, agreed to all the Senate amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendments are of the same class as the specific provisions of the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. SINNOTT. They are of the same class as were embodied in the House bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11212.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 11212, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS STERLING,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11212) to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

It reduces the minimum age at which employees of the Government may come within the provisions of the bill from 60 to 55 years.

It incorporates as section 5 a provision for the payment of compensation for work actually performed to employees who were unlawfully retained in active service after reaching retirement age. This provision has already passed the House as section 3 of H. R. 3164.

FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the retirement law for civil service employees. It passed the House on the 29th of June, and was amended by the Senate by striking out the House bill and inserting new text, but changing the bill by reducing the age of the employees to be benefited from 60 to 55 years and authorizing the payment for services rendered by clerks who continued in the employment of the Government without authority from the Civil Service Commission. The bill as it passed the House provided that employees who were involuntarily separated from the service should have the privilege of receiving retired pay proportionate to their length of service when they reached the age limit if they had served 15 years or the present worth of the certificate of service authorized to be issued. The law is intended to relieve the navy yard employees who were discharged in large numbers last spring because of lack of work, although many of them had been in the service for 15 or 20 years and in some instances over 30 years, but as they had not reached the age prescribed under the retirement law they could not get the benefit of that act.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. A. P. NELSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON] is recognized. [Prolonged applause and ovation on both sides of the Chamber.]

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is not my purpose to attempt to make a long speech upon this bill. Yet there are certain observations that I feel ought to be made, and which I desire to make now upon the bill before us for consideration.

In the first place, I believe that one of the very best bills passed in the matter of bringing about efficiency in our Government service was passed when the retirement act of 1920 was enacted by Congress; that fact is now generally conceded. I hold in my hand a report entitled "Testimony with respect to the operation of the retirement act," with comments by the Civil Service Commission, containing statements by the various departments in the Government as to the splendid and beneficial results of the operation of the law, and, Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to incorporate that as a part of my remarks, for the information of the House as well as for the information of those who desire to obtain real information as to the efficient workings of this act.

Now, for a few reasons why the bill and the conference report before us ought to be passed, and be passed without any opposition by the membership of this House. I desire to affirm most earnestly and sincerely that this bill is merely to extend justice to those who have been in the employment of the Government of the United States for 15 to 33 years or more, and who, through no fault of their own but at the request and demand of the Government, are now separated from the service of the Government because of the necessary reduction in the number of employees by the action of Congress resulting from the agreement reached by the recent Conference on Limitation of Armament. We all rejoice in the limitation of armaments and most sincerely hope that all the nations of the world will continue to reduce their army and navy establishments to merely adequate police protection on both land and sea. This bill primarily takes care of an emergency which to-day is acute in our navy yards as a result of the sudden dismissal of employees in such yards. I also wish you to note especially that the larger number of men involved are men who toil with their hands at hard labor, and most of them know only one particular line of work, which adds infinitely to their difficulty in finding readily employment by which they can earn a livelihood. The Government itself, I am informed, in the report makes 50 years the maximum age limit for appointment as mechanics in the service.

Mr. Speaker, the position of many of these men who have spent 15 to 33 years in the service of their Government, and who are beyond 55 years of age, and who now by action of Congress are forced to separate from the service is pitiable, indeed. The attempt of many to obtain service elsewhere is futile. Thirty-three years of service in one particular thing has made them almost machines, and they fit in nowhere else.

They are strictly up against a hard and cruel demand by the business world which their long single-track service in the Government has unfitted them to meet.

They are confronted by a series of questions. First, "Where have you been employed?" They answer, "In the service of the United States Government." The next question, "How long?" The answer is "Fifteen to 33 years." "How old are you?" "Past 55 years." Those forced replies immediately disqualify them, because the prospective employer reasons, and correctly so, "If you have been so long in the service of Uncle Sam and he no longer desires your services you are not able to qualify here," and he is turned away to continue for months, and probably years, a fruitless search for labor that he is fitted by 33 years of constant service to perform. Hence, it follows that many of these noble servants who have been most faithful to their trust, and who confidently expected to remain in the service until they would be eligible for retirement under the provisions of the 1920 retirement act, and who, Mr. Speaker, had every reason to be assured that our Government would retain them until eligible for retirement, are now face to face with a most cruel situation.

Mr. Speaker, no large industrial establishment or corporation in our country would think of treating their efficient employees, who have served a quarter of a century or more, as our Government is now treating these dismissed employees. Every efficient employee would be given just and careful consideration and that is all we ask under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. With one exception, the Coast Guard Service. Does not the gentleman think that it is a service very much harder, with more risk to life and health, and we have made no provision for the Coast Guard of the United States under the recent law, whereas there is even greater reason why they should come in?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Well, as far as I am concerned, I wish to say to the gentleman I have nothing but sympathy for the hardships of the coast guards, and I would not object to including them under the provisions of the law if this class of service comes under the civil-service regulations. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the point I am discussing now. I am trying to show the merits due to the men under the provisions of the law. And I affirm most earnestly that these men should be given absolutely the same consideration by a great and noble Government that is accorded to similar employees by both private and corporate concerns in business life generally. It is nothing more than simple justice that I am pleading for under this bill, and it should be granted by this House without further hesitation or reservation. A wise government should grant nothing less, and a loyal employee should ask nothing more than justice and fair play.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman's point is that the action of the Government makes it only fair for us to pass this measure. Is that right?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Absolutely.

Mr. HILL. I want to say to the gentleman that I agree with him and I am for it.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say further that the retirement act itself during the time that it has been in operation has proven to be one of the most effective aids in bringing about in the various departments of the Government service business efficiency and increased service. The act has had a stabilizing effect in all the departments and will increase the spirit of contentment of the employees by reducing the feeling of anxiety and uncertainty as to the future.

I desire also to call to your attention that the direct saving to the Government under this law has been very large, as you will observe from the reports by the department heads. Now, as you know, the Government employees themselves contribute about 67 per cent of the retirement fund. The other part, or 33 per cent, will be contributed by the Government. Most of the pension funds of corporations and private institutions, as well as of many States and cities, are contributed entirely by the corporation, the State, or the institution itself. Not so with the Government under this law. There are good reasons why we made the contributions 2.50 by the employees and 1.06 by the Government. We made it contributory by the employee in order that there should be on the part of the employee a zealous desire to do the largest thing for himself as well as the best thing by the Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Let me say that it seems to me we are simply dealing out justice to these men the same as we would expect to have dealt out to ourselves if we were placed in a similar situation. We are simply following out what is normally practiced by individuals and corporations and institutions elsewhere; and, Mr. Speaker, I simply ask, Is the great Government of the United States of America to be less generous and less concerned about its employees than are corporations or individuals or other State institutions? I believe not. I believe we will pass this bill and this conference report almost unanimously with the feeling that we have simply dealt justly with our employees and fair with our taxpayers and public as we increase the efficiency of the service and actually decrease the cost of it to our Government and taxpayers.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman know any place where they retire employees at the age of 55 years?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Can the gentleman mention any case where, in private or corporate life, they compel the individual to be retired arbitrarily as we do here? We face a hard, cold situation. A bald fact, not a theory. We deal in human life and human souls and not in dollars and material advantages. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Can the gentleman cite any retirement law that pays an annuity at the age of 55?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. We have provided in this act that if the employee retires at a certain age he is given a certain annuity compensation. In the case under discussion these men are in the service of the United States Government. They have discharged absolutely to the best of their ability their obligations to the Government. But now we have come to a place where we must reduce the number of our employees, and they by no fault of their own are left at sea to seek an employment, for which they trained, that can not be found. I say to you that, irrespective of the point which the gentleman makes, it is up to us to be fair to these men, and simple justice requires that when we dismiss them without any fault upon their part we shall be prepared to grant them the provisions contemplated under this amendment to the law.

Mr. BLACK. Has it not always been the policy of the Government to dismiss employees whenever their services were no longer required?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. I think that is true. But that does not do away with the situation I have tried to place before the gentleman, namely, that in this case these men have been in the service of the Government from 15 to 33 years, and they would naturally expect to continue in that service, but because of the changed conditions they are compelled to seek other employment, which under the circumstances it is almost impossible for many of them to find.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If this bill is enacted with the Senate amendment or without the Senate amendment, can the gentleman state what will be the cost to the Treasury?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. The statement is made by the actuary that for the first few years, or possibly a decade, there will be no appropriation necessary by the Government, because there is at the present time $18,000,000 in the Treasury which has come from the contributions of 2½ per cent of the salaries of all the employees whose salary is under $2,500 per year.

Mr. LAYTON. Including these employees?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman can not give any estimate.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. I do not know that anyone can, but the amount will be comparatively small. I will say to the gentleman that if he will look over the report he will find by the statements of the various department heads that it will make but very little difference in many of the departments, except in the navy yards, where we made a large dismissal under the restrictions imposed by the Washington Conference on the Limitation of Armament.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman is right about that, could it not be put off for a decade or two decades until we take care of the men who were in the military service? I will vote against this bonus bill that is soon to come up. Yet the men for whom that bill was passed were in the military service. We are caring for the people who were injured and we are caring for their dependents, and the Treasury is to be greatly burdened. It seems to me we had better in the future, and I hope at no distant time in the future, care for them, and later if we have the money to throw at the birds we can care for those in civil life. [Applause.]

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that I agree with part of the sentiments expressed by him, but I wish most emphatically to call to his attention the fact that these men who were in the navy yards were just as truly in the service of their Government in the defense of our country, and were heroically giving the best service that they could render in order that we might get quickly the necessary equipment in ships and guns, so that our boys could fight more successfully great battles for freedom, justice, and civilization on land and sea.

Mr. CANNON. Does that bring in all the civil employees?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. As I have stated, the additional expense of this bill so far as other departments than navy yards are concerned will be almost nil. The dismissal from the service is confined almost entirely to the navy yard employees.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if it is almost nil, let us amend this bill for the Navy Department.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. I said as far as the other departments are concerned the number is very small. Yet, the gentleman from Illinois does not wish to do an injustice, I am sure, to 2 or 5 or 10 men simply because there are no more of them found in any specific department.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAYTON. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes more.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin two minutes more.

Mr. LAYTON. Was any part of this $18,000,000 that the gentleman speaks of contributed by the beneficiaries proposed in this bill?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Their share in the fund was contributed by them.

Mr. LAYTON. All of their share?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. Yes; up to date.

Mr. LAYTON. Then they ought to have some of it.

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. I merely want to say this with respect to the amount of money in the Treasury that has been put there by the contributions of 2½ per cent of the salaries of Government employees since the time this bill was enacted, that the employees themselves, if they go out, will receive only 4 per cent on the amount that they have contributed, whereas the Government at the present time is receiving 4½ to 4¾ per cent on that same money, now loaned out at interest.

Mr. HULL. Then it will cost the Government practically nothing if this bill is passed. It simply comes out of the fund that the employees have contributed?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. At the present time no appropriation is necessary, because for the next decade or so it will take care of itself. There is going to be a time when the contribution will be 67 per cent by the employees and 33 per cent by the Government. There is no question about that.

Mr. LONDON. This bill affects only about 240 people, does it not?

Mr. ADOLPHUS P. NELSON. About that number.

THE OBJECT OF THE LAW IS ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

Time and experience have proven that this retirement law, like all laws, must be amended in order that its administration and operation shall be proper and just. Its main functions are twofold: First, to secure a better and a more efficient service to the Government; and, second, a better protection against the risk of dependents, and of old-age disability of the employees; for economic efficiency, the employer, whether a government, a corporation, or an industrial institution, has found it to its interest to establish some pension system which will enable the old or disabled employee to retire under proper and helpful conditions. The obligation resting upon the employer, whether Government or an individual, is both a financial and a moral one—financial because of the economic efficiency and better service to be obtained, and moral because of the better and happier conditions to be brought to the whole group of laborers employed.

The almost unanimous testimony of both State and business economic experts is that a proper pension law is an economic necessity in the efficient administration of government as well as private and corporate business. The three factors that must always govern in the consideration of this problem are humanity, economy, and efficiency—all to be based on real merit and service.

RETIREMENT FUNDS—OUTGROWTH OF OUR COMPLEX INDUSTRIAL AND CIVIC LIFE.

Civil pensions have been developed in European countries since the days of the Roman Empire, and are mentioned as being evolved by the Council of Chalcedon in the fifth century. Modern organized society, as expressed in governments, corporations, or private associations, has adopted many forms of aid, and relief funds and insurance funds of various kinds; and in later years superannuation or retirement funds have been instituted, based on scientific study, for the purpose of not only benefiting the pensioners but also for the establishment of efficiency and general betterment of the service. The United States Government is concerned and interested in both phases of the problem. Congress and our Government administration must of necessity see to it that a square deal is given to the faithful Federal employees of our Government; and the Federal employee who is shirking his duty, and only looks for pay day to come around, should be eliminated with the greatest of haste, as he would be in any well regulated and supervised business concern.

THE SUN OF PROMISE DISPELLING THE CLOUDS OF UNREST.

We are living to-day in times of great unrest and social and economical discontent yet pregnant with great opportunities for consecrated wealth and loyal labor to work out a destiny mighty with promise for peace and happiness. Change the awful tide for selfish power for the higher and nobler ambition for heroic service, and you will make at once humanity more helpful and the world more free. The old foundations of error, inequality, fixed wrong, stereotyped injustice, selfish ambitions, groveling aims, and material aggrandizement are to-day in a fluid mass melted in the fire of the world's awful conflict. The hopes and aspirations of mankind to-day are ready to be led by the spirit of freedom, justice, and patriotism to nobler resolves and higher consecrations, ready to become conscious instruments of social good, universal happiness, and nation-wide and world-wide freedom of body, mind, and soul.

The remedy, in my judgment, is plain. Capital must become more generous and labor must become more faithful. Both must clasp hands across the chasm that now divides them in a spirit of real cooperation and with a heart and mind actuated by the principles of the Son of Man to the end that they will serve their Nation and their generation in the highest and truest sense. Thus only can we bring about a larger production and a proper conservation of our national resources, including money and industry. Selfishness, greed, and profiteering must cease.

The great game of grabbing and holding without conscience and regard for our fellow men must stop. The india-rubber conscience produced as an aftermath of the great World War in the ranks of both labor and capital, rich and poor, high and low, must be changed to the principles enunciated by Christ in the Sermon on the Mount or we shall suffer utter defeat and chaos. All the forces of the Government and the people must be united in a spirit of constructive cooperation and deep filial concern if we shall hope to make our Nation socially happy and economically contented. The real constructive program needed by our Nation and the world to-day is to just get back to first principles of civilization and Christianity and build upon the eternal Rock of Ages to the end that farm, mine, and factory shall produce its utmost and be conserved and distributed for the welfare and betterment of mankind. The future growth and glory of our Nation still rest on what Roosevelt called the "square deal to all." We must still build on the primal rights of mankind as a unit and not upon the rights of single individuals or even groups or classes. These ideas are American in their truest and highest sense and make a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people." This idea of universal liberty and universal well-being is the only hope that will fulfill the promises of the immortal Declaration of Independence and will verify the vision of our immortal founders. It is this idea, truly American, that to-day must elevate the intellectual spirit of our Nation and deepen the channels of our industrial, moral, and spiritual life. [Applause.]

The testimony referred to by Mr. NELSON and authorized to be incorporated follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., August, 1922.

TESTIMONY WITH RESPECT TO THE OPERATION OF THE RETIREMENT ACT.

On March 20, 1922, the commission called upon the department for testimony by the following letter:

"In his last annual report the Secretary of the Treasury states (p. 128) that the retirement act has 'already proved helpful and has resulted in improved efficiency and economy in the transaction of the public business.' He suggests for consideration of the Congress—

"1. The possibility that the age limit for retirement might be lowered from 70 to not more than 68 years; and

"2. Whether the amount of annuity under the act might not be somewhat increased.

"He believes that if the retirement age be lowered and at the same time further restrictions be placed upon more than one extension of service after the retirement age, the public service would receive still further benefits from the retirement plan, but that this should not be done until increased annuities are granted. He adds: 'At the present time the annuities under the act appear to be small, particularly if one takes into consideration the prevailing prices of the necessaries of life and the further fact that, in the majority of cases, it is rarely possible at the average salary paid by the Government for employees to lay aside, while in the service, an amount of savings sufficient to cover any deficiencies in the annuity.'

"Several bills are pending in Congress for the amendment of the act, and it would seem desirable that a survey be made respecting its workings, its effect in improving efficiency and economy, and since the act needs amendment, in what particulars amendment should be made. In this connection attention is invited to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions and the report of the Board of Actuaries.

"It has been suggested that the commission ascertain the effect of the retirement system, and while it may not be possible to make an estimate of the financial saving, valuable testimony on the subject can undoubtedly be given.

"The chief points of inquiry appear to be:

"1. To what degree has the retirement system had a stabilizing effect on the service? The turnover has of recent years been extensive, but this is now a good deal less, and it may be possible to estimate the economic value of the retirement system in producing stability and promoting a general sense of security and contentment.

"2. Upon the retirement of each employee a careful survey is, no doubt, made of the need of filling the position either by original appointment or promotion. To what extent has a saving been effected in this regard?

"The office of the Quartermaster General made a careful and comprehensive survey and received detailed reports from quartermasters in charge in the field. They have expressed their opinions candidly as to the operation of the retirement act, and it may be stated that due to the many mandatory reductions made in the civilian force since the cessation of hostilities incident to the World War it has been practically impossible to note the stabilizing effect on the service as a result of the retirement act.

"The Chief of Ordnance states that the testimony of the largest arsenals and plants under the jurisdiction of his department is that the retirement act has not had a stabilizing effect up to the present time, due to abnormal conditions on account of forced reductions. The opinion is expressed that the act would have a stabilizing effect under normal conditions and would increase the spirit of contentment of employees by reducing the feeling of anxiety and uncertainty as to the future. For the same reasons it has not been possible to gauge the effect of the act upon the turnover in employees.

"According to The Adjutant General the large and continued reduction in the clerical force of his office during the period the retirement act has been in effect makes it impracticable to state from experience as to whether or not the system has had a stabilizing effect on the service or to estimate its value in promoting a general sense of security and contentment among the employees.

"The Chief of Finance states that the act has had no noticeably stabilizing effect up to this time, the causes of this failure being that insufficient time has elapsed for improvement of this nature to reflect itself, the turnover due to other causes has been so great as to discredit any stabilizing effect the act might have had, and the inducements in the way of annuities are too low to hold the younger employees if opportunity arises for employment in commercial concerns.

"The Inspector General expresses the view that the retirement system has proven of great economic value in producing stability and promoting a general sense of security and contentment among Government employees, and there is no doubt but that it has increased the efficiency of the employees. The salary of the Government employees has been such that little, if anything, could be put by for a "rainy day," and prior to the passage of the retirement act there was a feeling among employees that when they had grown old in the service there was nothing to look forward to but being dropped and thrown upon the charity of others to support.

"The Chief of Engineers refers to conditions described by other officials of the War Department and which were common to the bureaus of that department. The abnormal conditions have made the number of changes in the service so very great that the older employees appointed prior to the World War and who wish to remain in the service do not have a pleasing outlook, as the annuity is not sufficient to provide for the necessities of life and the comforts of old age.

"The circumstances in the office of the Surgeon General, which have required a reduction of the civilian personnel from a maximum of 1,617 in 1918 to 183 at present, preclude any categorical report on whether the retirement system has had a stabilizing effect on the service. As to whether it promotes a general sense of security and contentment may be considered debatable. A material percentage of those retired do not relish retirement on the annuity provided.

"3. Prior to the retirement system there was an inevitable tendency to keep employees on the pay roll long past their productive period. The evil consequences of retaining employees in important positions after they have become incompetent can not be readily estimated in money, but is likely to be several times the cost of their superannuation in causing stagnation and operating against effective service.

"4. The effect of the system in affording increased opportunity for promotion and aiding in the retention of employees of initiative and force.

"The commission would appreciate any testimony, especially as to the savings effected, that can be obtained to serve as a basis for improved legislation and administration of the system.

"The executive departments, except one (the Treasury Department), many of the bureaus of the larger departments, and nearly all the independent establishments responded freely.

"The replies generally expressed belief that the retirement act has been beneficial as a measure of economy and in improving the morale of the personnel, but because of abnormal conditions and the short period the act has been in effect definite statements have been avoided. The replies are rather a record of sentiment than that the operation of the act has brought out a definite record of accomplishment.

"Taking the hint from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, many of the officials took occasion to make suggestions for legislation to make the act more equitable and just through an increase of annuities to afford a tolerable existence under conditions which have changed greatly since the scale of annuities was first worked out. Sentiment appears to be general that the higher-paid employees should either receive larger annuities than now provided or that their contributions should be decreased.

"Expressions respecting the lowering of the retirement age are pretty well divided. The reports are too voluminous to quote in full.

"The departments and bureaus which pleaded that they were unable to speak definitely will perhaps pardon the omission of their replies. The prerogative of eliminating matter in the interest of brevity has been exercised, but so far as possible the language of the replies has been preserved, and this article is therefore made up of indirect quotations.

STABILIZING EFFECT AND ITS ECONOMIC VALUE.

"The Secretary of War explains that the department has been so continuously engaged in reducing its force of civilian employees—the force having been reduced since the enactment of the retirement act from 130,000 to about 45,000—that the effects of the act have been so obscured as to make it impossible to pass upon the questions presented by the commission from practical experience and observations of the workings of the law. Copies of reports from the chiefs of bureaus and services were presented.

"The retirement act has had thus far a very slight effect on the office of the Judge Advocate General. Only three clerks have been retired, all as soon as the law went into effect. At the time of their retirement the office force was being gradually reduced and the positions were not filled.

"The Postmaster General states that the decreased number of resignations received is in a measure due to the clerks' greater desire to continue in the Government service because of the retirement system, but it has not had that stabilizing effect that might have been expected by reason of the fact that the maximum amount of annuity is so low as to be entirely inadequate to provide for the necessities of the annuitant and those dependent upon him for support.

"The Secretary of the Interior believes that the precise degree to which the retirement system has had a stabilizing effect on the service is impracticable of determination. Much of the turnover is due to inequalities of compensation in the different departments and bureaus in Washington, which causes employees to obtain transfers or appointments to bureaus and departments where higher salaries are paid for the same class of work. He is convinced, however, that as to the vast number of employees who have served long periods, thus virtually making of the public service a life career, the expectation of the reward which awaits them upon reaching the age of retirement has had the effect of keeping many in the service who otherwise would not have remained, and the consequent decrease in turnover has been noticeable.

"The Bureau of Pensions has not suffered from an abnormal turnover during recent years. There was a slightly increased turnover during the war period, but it was a noteworthy fact that employees served for long periods, and in many instances begin and end their careers in the Government service within the Pension Bureau. It is difficult to state with any degree of positiveness that the retirement system has had a stabilizing effect. Students of retirement have, however, universally contended that a retirement system makes for contentment and is an inducement for employees to remain in the service, and this view of the question is accepted.

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office wished to be of record in a general way of not being in sympathy with any scheme of retirement based on eleemosynary considerations. He is, however, in favor of retirement with annuities therefor which reflect in some real measure appreciation of the value of the service rendered by the retiring employee. That the present retirement law is considered in the light of a charity is indicated by the limitation placed upon the annuities provided, in that any employee whose special qualifications, ability, and efficiency have placed him in a position of the greatest responsibility and trust during a service of 30 or more years gets no more consideration on retirement than the employee who has none of these qualifications and has been incapable of holding positions of large responsibility and trust, but rather has managed to retain an inferior position at $1,200 per annum during the last 10 years of his service.

"The passage of the retirement act has, no doubt, been received and accepted by all employees who have not yet nearly reached retirement age as a step in the right direction, but in the General Land Office the majority of those reaching retirement age wish to remain for at least two years more. They urge that they have not been able to save much, often nothing, from their meager salaries, and the small annuity will compel them to seek other employment and probably without success because of their age. For the great majority, however, the law has a stabilizing effect, and after being amended to secure more equitable application there is little doubt that the knowledge that retirement is coming surely, will tend to make employees more contented. The present schedule of annuities can furnish no such stimulus to those in the higher grades. Annuities based on small actual earnings need not be extravagant in character, but they should, comparatively speaking, be equitable.

"The chief clerk of the Patent Office, speaking for the commissioner, states that the retirement system has had a notable effect in stabilizing the service, although it is difficult to estimate the benefit in numerical terms, but it is appreciable enough to appraise its benefits as highly favorable.

"In the Indian Service there are approximately 260 employees in Washington and more than 5,000 located in the field. The turnover during the past year has been much less than it was during, or immediately succeeding, the World War. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs attributes this increased stability to present economic conditions rather than to the retirement system, although undoubtedly this system has had a stabilizing effect.

"The administrative assistant of St. Elizabeths Hospital believes that the retirement system has had a very material and beneficial effect upon the service. The turnover, whether due to the effect of the retirement law or to economic conditions, has decreased very materially during the past year. The possibility of being taken care of after reaching the age where they are no longer able to take care of themselves has the effect of retaining in the service a desirable class of employees.

"The Secretary of Agriculture has no doubt that the retirement act has had a helpful and thoroughly stabilizing effect upon the personnel of the department. The direct result has been to dispel, to an appreciable degree, the uneasiness and uncertainty which formerly existed in the minds of employees who had been accustomed to look forward with the greatest misgivings to the period of decreased usefulness, possibly loss of position, and lack of provision, in a great majority of cases, of any competency for maintaining themselves in their declining years.

"In the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce the retirement act has doubtless effected economy both directly and indirectly; directly by reducing the number of employees in the service and by bringing about a higher degree of efficiency, and indirectly by improved morale resulting from increased opportunities for promotion and a better outlook for the future. The retirement of employees by reason of age and disabilities enabled the department to secure qualified persons and permitted redistribution of the work so that it could be done more economically. While during the first year's operation of the law the ultimate vacancy resulting from retirement must remain unfilled, the department was able in a few cases to dispense with the position. The turnover among employees decreased 50 per cent, but it is not claimed that it was all due to the retirement act.

"The Secretary of Labor states that during the readjustment period following the war the turnover in the department has been very great and it has been impossible to estimate the economic value of the retirement system in producing stability and promoting a general sense of security and contentment. The younger portion of the personnel do not welcome deductions from their salaries for the retirement fund, as they do not expect to remain in the service 30, 40, or 50 years necessary to secure annuity. The act undoubtedly has a stabilizing effect upon the older clerks and officials, who look upon the Government service as their life work.

SAVING EFFECTED.

"The Quartermaster General reported that up to June 2, 1922, 179 employees had been retired on account of age or total disability, 6 of them employees of the department and 173 employees of the Quartermaster Corps at large. Only 20 of the resulting vacancies were filled by promotion of employees in the service or by new appointees. A saving of approximately $160,000 has been effected by such retirement.

"The Chief of Ordnance states that no estimate can be made of the saving effected because of the fact that when retirement has occurred it has simply meant one person less in the establishment, and the vacancy so created has not ordinarily been filled. These retirements have really covered a part of the forced reduction still in effect.

"In The Adjutant General's Office none of the positions which became vacant by reason of retirement have been filled by original appointment; the resulting vacancies in all except the lowest grades have been filled by promotion. Because of the reduction in force going on, few of the vacancies in the lower grades have been filled and the saving effected under the retirement system may properly be said to be the salaries of 77 employees at $1,200 per annum and 10 at $720 per annum, a total of $99,600.

"The Inspector General reported that but one employee has been retired, and because of the fact that the force is small it was necessary to fill the position by promotion, and the ultimate vacancy by appointment.

"The Chief of Engineers reports that four employees on the departmental rolls have been retired, three for age and one for disability. Three of these employees had been of very little service for some time. The other person had rendered good service and the position was filled at once. The savings effected were the difference between the salaries the persons would have received and the amount of annuities which they receive, $1,496.

"In the Engineer Department at large 164 employees were retired, 25 of whom were of educational grade. Their retirement permitted of a net reduction in force in educational positions of 18 and a net saving of $28,819.92.

"The Surgeon General states that retirements constituted a very small portion of the separations that were necessary to reduce the force from a war to a peace basis. Surveys to determine the need of refilling the positions vacated by retirement were not on the program, and no reliable figures can be reported as to what actual savings in pay-roll expenditures may be attributed to retirements.

"The Postmaster General states that upon retirement of an employee the vacancy thus created is promptly filled unless it is found that the position can be dispensed with, which is not often the case. The filling of a vacancy, while not effecting financial saving to the department, results in largely increased efficiency by reason of the promotion of a younger, more vigorous, and mentally competent man.

"The Acting Secretary of the Interior states that it is not practicable to estimate the amount of money saving which has resulted from retirements, as vacancies have usually been filled by promotion. In many instances, however, vacancies have remained unfilled for varying periods until the needs of the service required that appointments be made thereto, and there is no doubt that the lapsed salaries from this source have amounted to a considerable sum in the aggregate.

"The Commissioner of Pensions explains that because of extraordinary conditions the bureau has been compelled to fill practically all vacancies caused by retirement. Increased pensions to Civil War veterans and to Spanish War veterans and the retirement act itself have all imposed extra duties upon the bureau, without increased appropriations to meet this extraordinary condition, with the exception of a small appropriation for use in connection with the administration of the retirement act.

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office reports that vacancies created by the retirement act have been filled by promotion in all but the lower grades, and in these by new appointments or transfers from other services. The only saving in funds was that due to delay in filling vacancies, when unused statutory appropriations have reverted to the Treasury Department.

"In the Patent Office the work has increased to such a tremendous extent during the last several years that every vacancy, no matter how occurring, is required to be filled in order to have the office function. Any saving effected has been in the direction of making an improved appointment in place of the employee retired.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs reports that it has been found necessary to fill the majority of positions made vacant by retirement. In Washington promotions were made to the positions above the entrance grade. The same was true as to most of the vacancies arising in the field.

"The administrative assistant of St. Elizabeths Hospital states that the hospital has been able to get along without filling the places of three employees who were retired, and the saving amounts to about $3,750 per annum.

"The Secretary of Agriculture states that upon retirement of each employee a careful survey is made of the need of filling the position, either by promotion or original appointment. Wherever possible, vacancies are filled by the promotion of employees occupying the highest positions on the efficiency registers. In exceptional cases, such as those where peculiar qualifications are demanded which can not be satisfied by the existing personnel, the positions are filled by original appointment. Places made vacant through the retirement of employees are filled only when the needs of the service so require, but it is not possible to estimate to what extent a saving has been effected in this regard.

"The Secretary of Labor states that upon retirement of an employee a survey is always made to determine whether the position should be filled by original appointment or by promotion. Usually a retired employee received a salary which made promotion possible, and original appointments have been made to the lower grades. No great saving has been accomplished because the force of the department is small, but advantage has resulted through securing a younger and more active employee than the one retired.

EFFECT ON PRACTICE OF RETAINING EMPLOYEES OF ADVANCED AGE.

"Comparatively few employees in the Quartermaster Corps of retirement age were found holding important administrative and executive positions with high salaries commensurate with such duties, for it has been the policy of this service to reassign employees, and those of advanced age are not retained on important assignments when they are found unable to continue to satisfactorily and efficiently assume responsible positions.

"The Chief of Ordnance believes that the retirement act will correct the tendency to retain employees when their efficiency and productiveness has lowered, and that the cost of annuity would be more than covered by the increased efficiency and amount of work produced by the younger employees who might be promoted or appointed to fill the places of those retired.

"The Adjutant General recognizes the tendency, prior to the retirement system, to retain employees on the pay roll after they had passed their productive period. He states that the replacement of these employees under the retirement system by younger and more competent employees has undoubtedly resulted in an improvement in the service. He believes that the resulting gain to the Government is many times the amount of the annuities paid to retired employees.

"The Chief of Engineers does not believe that the 'tendency to keep employees on the pay rolls long past their productive period' has not been overcome by the operation of the retirement act. Old and faithful employees having others dependent upon them and not being able to make ends meet on the meager annuity allowed have, no doubt, been retained past the retirement age in every department, although no longer as efficient as when younger.

"The Surgeon General states that the experience of his office shows that the general belief that employees are kept on the pay roll long past their productive period is much exaggerated. Many of the most valuable employees the office has ever had have performed most excellent service long after they were 68 years of age. It would be unfortunate to the service and no advantage to the individuals to compel their separation while still capable of and actually performing valuable work. He does not believe the provision of the present law with regard to age of retirement and for continuation in the service beyond retirement age should be disturbed.

"The Judge Advocate General expresses the opinion that the law has operated advantageously in overcoming the tendency to keep superannuated employees on the roll. Of the three retired in the office, one was retired on account of physical disability and the others were persons who had rendered excellent service in earlier days but whose efficiency had become somewhat impaired.

"The Postmaster General states that one of the best results of the retirement act has been the clearing from the Government service of the superannuated employees who were no longer able to perform their duties but who had been retained on the principle that it would be unjust and inhuman to turn them adrift without means of support.

"The Assistant Secretary of the Navy refers to the relief which the retirement act affords by ridding the service of superannuates who are unable to render full return for salaries received but who prior to the retirement act had been retained through sentimental reasons. The removal of superannuates provides vacancies which may be filled by promotion, and promotion is an incentive to younger men and women to render more efficient service in the hope of recognition for advancement. Vacancies are also afforded to which persons may be appointed early in life, thereby infusing new blood into the service.

"The Acting Secretary of the Interior recognizes the indisputable fact that prior to the establishment of the retirement system there was an inevitable tendency to keep employees on the pay roll, in many instances without reduction in salary, long past their most productive period of service. The benefit which the Government has derived through the operation of the retirement act in correcting this condition is, doubtless, one of the most important results achieved.

"The Commissioner of Pensions gives a quotation from a close student of the principles governing retirement, who states that it is beyond the province of statistics to measure the loss that results to a government when a superannuated employee is retained in a position of responsibility, consequently, the good effect can not be readily estimated in money value.

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office refers to the records of his office, which show that during the last 15 years at least employees who had passed their productive period have been reduced in salary, sometimes more than once, in order that the higher salaries could be paid to more efficient, younger employees. None of them was reduced to anywhere near the amount provided by the highest annuity under the retirement law. The wide practice of retaining employees doubtless resulted in great cost to the Government and cost much more than the annuities later provided by the retirement act.

"The chief clerk of the Patent Office refers to the lessened necessity of keeping employees on the pay roll beyond their productive period and to the increased opportunity of promotion, which results in retention of employees of value to the office.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs expresses the opinion that the most important benefit arising to the Indian Service from the retirement act is the retirement of superannuated employees, which has unquestionably speeded up the work of the bureau.

"The administrative assistant of St. Elizabeths Hospital states that it is difficult to estimate in money the savings on account of the former tendency to keep employees on the pay roll long past their productive period. This is rendered more difficult by reason of the fact that the hospital has been growing fast, and while many additional employees have been necessary, aside from those retired, it was due to increased amount of work. He states that by the promotion of younger employees in the places of older ones since retired, more work has been accomplished at the same rate of pay.

"The Secretary of Labor recognizes the fact that there was a tendency to keep employees on the pay roll past their productive period, and states that the provision for compulsory retirement at a certain age, unless the employee is certified as being competent to remain, has been helpful in the administration of the department.

"The Superintendent of he State, War, and Navy Department Building states that before the retirement act went into effect employees were kept on the rolls long past their 100 per cent productive period, which involved expense, stopped deserved promotion, tended to impair the morale, and operated against efficient service.

EFFECT OF INCREASED OPPORTUNITY AFFORDED FOR PROMOTION.

"The effect of the act on promotions in the Ordnance Department at large has not been apparent, as the rates of pay at the various field establishments are fixed by wage boards, according to the rate of pay prevailing in the district outside the Government service. It does not, therefore, follow that a retirement would result in the promotion of some other employee to the position.

"In The Adjutant General's Office vacancies in the higher grades resulting from the retirement system have been filled by promotion, and to that extent the system has afforded increased opportunities for the advancement of deserving employees.

"As yet, the retirement system has had no noticeable effect in the Finance Department by affording increased opportunity for promotion or aiding in the retention of employees of initiative and force. It is considered, however, that after a definite policy has been decided upon as to the number of employees who will be retained in the service, the retirement system will have a very beneficial effect along these lines, provided also the amount of annuity should be increased.

"The Inspector General believes the retirement act has increased the efficiency of the Government service and has relieved, to a great extent, the stagnation in promotion in the higher grades.

"In the office of the Chief of Engineers the effect of the system in affording increased opportunity for promotion has been negligible. Because of contemplated cuts in the appropriations for civilian employees, positions made vacant by retirement will probably have to be left unfilled to meet the reduction. Nearly all promotions on the rolls of the office result from resignations of employees who leave to accept more attractive positions elsewhere.

"The Surgeon General accepts as a matter of course the effect of the retirement act in increasing the flow of promotion, and the tendency in some degree to encourage junior employees of initiative and force to continue in the service; however, seniors may, and often do, also have initiative and force in addition to resourcefulness and skill from long experience, and their displacement merely to make way for their juniors and to increase the rapidity of promotion would not promote the public interest. The retention of the energetic and ambitious calls for the modernizing of the salaries of all civilian employees to approximate the present cost of living and to yield an adequate reward for those who have made their way to the top rather than for the displacement of the latter while still effective and capable.

"The Postmaster General expresses the view that the retirement system has doubtless been of benefit in affording increased opportunity of promotion and in aiding in the retention of employees of initiative and force.

"The Secretary of the Interior refers to the effect of the retirement system in affording increased opportunity for promotion and aiding in the retention of capable and efficient employees as being self-evident. There are doubtless employees in nearly every large office operating under statutory salaries to whom it has been possible to give salaries more nearly commensurate with their duties only by the retirement of their associates in higher grades.

"Valuable testimony comes from the office of the Commissioner of Pensions. He states that the effect of the retirement system has unquestionably resulted in increased opportunity for promotion, and because of this opportunity there now exists a new spirit, a spirit of hopefulness among the younger and middle-aged employees, which has taken the place of the lethargy which permeated many branches of the service before the retirement law became effective. This bureau affords a concrete example in this respect. As soon as the law became operative on August 21, 1920, about 140 employees of the bureau were retired. These employees were in receipt of salaries ranging between $720 and $2,250 per annum. Their retirement was followed by promotion of a large number of employees, many of whom had theretofore received no promotion for a great number of years. The beneficial effect upon morale in the bureau was immediately noticeable. Since that time other employees have retired, and, as a result, promotion of one or more employees has followed in each instance. These promotions undoubtedly have had a stimulating effect upon the employees generally, many of whom, before the retirement act became effective, were in despair, and they were constantly seeking to be transferred to other branches of the service where there would be better opportunity for advancement. It is hardly necessary to dwell upon the beneficial effects derived from bringing younger employees into the bureau as the result of retiring the superannuated employees and of promoting others. It need only be stated briefly that this bureau has experienced a rejuvenation since the retirement act went into operation.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs believes that the retirement system affords increased opportunity for promotion and aids in the retention of employees of initiative and ability.

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office refers to increased opportunity for promotion due to retirement as a natural effect of a retirement system from which the public service will greatly benefit when promotions are based upon earning capacity alone.

"At St. Elizabeths Hospital the retirement of superannuated employees gives opportunity for promotion of competent employees and helps to retain them in the service. These employees are then put on their own initiative, and the hospital has the benefit of new ideas, new thoughts, greater efficiency, and more comprehensive schemes of work.

"The Secretary of Agriculture states that the opportunity for promotion made possible through the retirement act has undoubtedly tended to greater satisfaction on the part of the continuing personnel and greater incentive to put forth the best effort, by reason of more rapid advancement during the period of active service, with the prospect of ultimate provision for old age. These benefits are likely to become more apparent as time goes on and opportunity has been afforded to test the operation of the retirement system in a thorough way.

"The Secretary of Labor thinks there is no doubt that the retirement of the older and higher salaried employees affords increased opportunity for promotion and aids in retaining valuable employees.

LOWERING THE LIMIT FOR RETIREMENT.

"The Quartermaster General believes that, taking the average employee, the maximum age limit for retirement should be reduced from 70 to 68 years of age with a provision for continuation of not more than two periods of two years each. In only exceptional cases does the efficiency of an employee justify his continued employment after reaching the age of 68 years.

"It is the opinion of the Chief of Ordnance that the retirement age should either be made the same for all other classes of employees or the age limit should be reduced from 65–70 year basis to a 60–65 year basis. This would enable a department to use its discretion in recommending the continuance in the service of those who have reached retirement age but who are still useful and efficient, and, on the other hand, to remove from the service employees whose services were no longer desired, due to their age and decreased ability. This would also tend to raise the general standard of the service.

"The Chief of Finance believes in a further reduction of the retirement age below 68, as suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury. Recommendation is made that 65 years be made the age limit because it has been found that in a great majority of cases an employee, when he has reached the age of 65 years, becomes less efficient and his services are no longer an asset but a detriment to the efficient and prompt conduct of business.

"The Judge Advocate General is of the opinion that if the age limit for retirement were lowered to 68 years it would be of decided advantage to the service.

"The Commissioner of Pensions believes that the age limit of 65 years, as proposed in the earlier retirement bills, is preferable. It is believed that the bill as originally introduced in respect to optional age for retirement at 65, with extension privileges during the first 10 years under the operation of the law, was far better than the bill finally enacted. The bureau believes that the optional age for retirement of employees in the so-called departmental service should be 65 years, and that after July 1, 1925, the compulsory age for retirement for this group of employees should be 70 years, and that continuation in the service for any period between the ages of 65 and 70 years should be by mutual arrangement between the employee and the head of the department or independent establishment concerned.

"The experience of the General Land Office appears to be opposed to any reduction of the age limit below 70 years unless earlier retirement were made conditionally optional to the employee, the same to be based upon a proper showing that the character of his service did not warrant his retention longer at his present compensation. Under the present retirement law the office would prefer a reduction, of course, provided it did not take the employee below $1,200, the limitation governing the highest annuity. Reduction of employees below $1,200 will always be a serious matter, as the reduction would seriously affect the annuity.

"The Director of the Geological Survey states that he fails to see strong reasons why any definite age should be set as essential for retirement, and that for a field force, such as that of the Geological Survey, he thinks the placing of the retirement age at 70 years is most harmful to the interests of the Government and of the individual. The proper performance of the strenuous duties of the geologists, topographers, and engineers in the field service requires a robustness and physical ability not demanded by the usual sedentary office pursuits. He judges that these field men ought to be eligible for retirement at the same age as Army and Navy officers, postal mail clerks, mechanics, or other Government employees whose physical fitness is essential for the proper performance of routine duties. He would, however, not desire reduction of the age limit to 62 years set for scientific and technical men, because many of them have amassed a great store of material which can be worked up in the office or utilized after the men are no longer able to take any part in active field investigations.

"The Commissioner of Indian Affairs states that the retirement age for certain employees in the Indian Service, especially the classroom teachers, should be lowered. He is also of the opinion that an increase in the amount of annuity would not be improper.

"The Commissioner of Education is of the opinion that the age limit for retirement should be lowered and that voluntary retirement, with allowance, should be made possible for persons who have served the Government for a long period of years, as is provided for the military and naval services.

"The Secretary of Commerce believes it advisable to fix a lower age, say 65 years, for voluntary retirement. He also believes that the time element in fixing the amount of annuity should be in years of service instead of three-year periods, as now fixed.

"The Secretary of Labor agrees with the Secretary of the Treasury that the retirement age should be reduced from 70 to 68 years, although it might possibly be better to reduce it to 65 years, with the privilege of continuance in the service if the employee is in full possession of his faculties and is able to perform the duties of his position.

"The Superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building states that if a substantial increase in the retirement allowance is made, employees would be willing to go out, and the retiring age might be slightly reduced. His office concurs in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury that unless the allowance is increased the retiring age should remain as it is at present. To maintain the age at 70 years tends very materially to keep down the expense of the retirement act, and also gives the Government the fullest benefit of experience and judgment of qualified employees who are still active mentally and physically.

ADJUSTMENT OF ANNUITIES ON AN EQUITABLE AND JUST BASIS.

"The Secretary of War, speaking generally on the subject, says that while a retirement system with annuities tends naturally to stabilize a force he doubts that any appreciable measure of stabilization is being effected under the present retirement law, with its maximum annuity allowance of $720 per annum, which maximum is only allowed after 30 years of service and when an employee, other than in the Postal Service or a mechanic, reaches 70 years of age. For the same reason he does not believe that the present law operates as an inducement for entrance into the Government service.

"The Secretary of War repeated a reply which he made to an inquiry in relation to a bill which proposed, among other things, increasing the scale of annuities with a limit in any case of $1,200, as follows:

"'I have noted that the existing law provides that $720 per annum shall be the maximum annuity in any case of retirement. Where this sum in effect retires an annuitant at as much as half pay, let us say, it would perhaps be difficult to justify an increase, however inadequate the annuity might be at price levels which seem likely to continue for some years above former price levels. But in the use of annuitants for whom it represents one-quarter pay or less, the $720 per annum is of course utterly inadequate, and especially so in the case of employees who have made the Government service their life career and have risen to positions of responsibility.

"'I am informed that there will be very few cases where the proposed bill will give an annuity higher than the present maximum, $720 per annum, until after 30 years' service. I think in such cases the $1,200 annuity might well be provided for the few remaining years of life. Certainly as large compensation should be paid to retired civilian employees of the Government as the amount of funds that have been collected will warrant, based upon competent actuarial consideration of the subject.'

"The Quartermaster General states that the annuities provided by the retirement act appear to be small, and he believes that the act should be amended so as to provide for annuities somewhat larger than those now being paid. Many quartermasters report that dissatisfaction on the part of employees receiving high salaries exists in regard to the present flat deduction of 2½ per cent of basic salary or compensation. An employee receiving $3,000 per annum is required to make a much larger contribution to the retirement fund than an employee receiving $1,200 per annum, and upon retirement, under the present provision of the act, the $1,200 employee will receive the same maximum annuity of $720 per annum received by the employee who contributes on the basis of a salary of $3,000. It is considered that the contribution should be graduated and that annuities should, to a certain extent, be more in proportion to the contribution made to the retirement fund.

"The Chief of Ordnance states that it is generally recommended by all those who have watched the operation of the act that the schedule of annuity is too low and is not sufficient to enable the employee to live comfortably under present conditions.

"The Adjutant General refers to the pronounced sentiment among all the employees that the annuities provided are wholly inadequate and that they should be materially increased. This sentiment has resulted in requests for retention from practically all employees about to be retired, evidently based upon the inadequacy of the annuities to support themselves and their dependents. In order to secure any stabilizing effects on the service and a general sense of security and contentment, it is believed that the act will have to be amended so as to make more adequate provision for the payment of varying amounts, graduated according to the salary of the employee and taking into consideration the length of service rendered by them. The present law makes no difference whatever in the amount of annuity paid to employees whose salaries may vary considerably and who, because of that variance, contribute different amounts to the retirement fund, and yet are retired with the same annuity. As a matter of information, The Adjutant General referred to a petition signed by about 90 per cent of the employees of the office. This petition urged changing the retirement act to permit optional retirement after 30 years' service, with a range of annuities from $900 to $1,500, on the basis of salary for the 10 years preceding the date of retirement, but not to exceed 75 per cent of such average salary, and that annuities to those with shorter services should be proportionally increased. It was claimed that the maximum annuity now authorized is not sufficient to maintain properly any one person, and in the case of an annuitant with dependents it is woefully inadequate, and age prevents the annuitant from obtaining gainful employment, and not many are able to save because little, if anything, is left for saving after living expenses have been met.

"The Inspector General expresses his approval of bills providing for increase of annuities, based on average salary and length of service.

"The Assistant Secretary of the Navy states that the cost of living at present, and which will probably never return to a pre-war level, is such that the annuities granted under the present act are insufficient to support annuitants in even the most modest manner. It is the exception when Government employees are able to lay aside sufficient amounts to provide them with even a small income in the later years of their lives. The present scheme of assessment is not equitable, as the employee with the larger salary pays a greater rate in return for an annuity that he receives at the age of retirement than the lesser-paid employee. Suggestion is made that the law should be revised to provide an equitable assessment; although this might have the effect of increasing the cost of retirement, it is believed that the advantage to the employee and to the Government would warrant it and that the employee would not object if the age limit is lowered.

"The Commissioner of Pensions is in sympathy with the idea that the annuity should be increased, and approves the plan suggested by the board of actuaries. However, he believes that it would be more expedient to advocate a maximum annuity of $1,200 per annum rather than an unlimited maximum, as provided by the actuaries' report.

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office illustrates the inequalities in annuities by citing the case of a man with 30 years of service who may have saved for 20 years at $660 per annum but have received $1,200 for the last 10 years of service, which would give him an annuity of $720 per annum, or 80 per cent of his average salary, whereas a more indispensable administrative or technical employee, who may have entered the service at $1,200 per annum and gradually rose to $5,000 per annum, and whose average salary during the last 10 years of service was, perhaps, $3,000, and whose average salary during the entire service was $2,000, must retire on $720 per annum. This plan places a premium on mediocrity and on retirement day penalizes all who have been chiefly instrumental in keeping the Government machinery oiled and in working condition. If this theory of retirement of a civil-service employee is correct, why should a major general receive greater annuity and more privileges than a sergeant or a private, or an admiral more than a boatswain or a sailor before the mast? He emphasizes the fact that, although the higher-paid grades of employees may, and do, save part of their salaries, their contribution to the retirement fund is not measured by the annuity they will receive on retirement; and nothing is more certain than that the higher-salaried employees, because of the responsible positions they hold, are unable to limit their monthly expenditures to the purchase of a bare existence. A high-grade employee who has qualified himself for the duties, possibly, of a great land lawyer, technologist, administrative officer, or other equally necessary official, earning and receiving compensation in some measure commensurate with his responsibilities and efficiency, may not after 30 years of service be equitably retired with the annuity granted a simple clerical employee having no qualifications other than those needed to enable him to cling to a job paying $1,200 per annum during his last 10 years of service. He suggests increases which are not based strictly upon recognition of character of work, but which he believes would provide more equitable annuities than the existing law because the high-grade employees will receive recognition not now given.

"The Director of the Geological Survey records his emphatic disapproval of the present rate of annuities. The retention of 2½ per cent of salary, whether it be $1,200 or $12,000 a year, resulting in the same annuity, irrespective of deductions, is so obviously unfair that it seems scarcely to merit discussion, and he can not believe that Congress will continue this practice when the matter is called to its attention.

"The administrative assistant of St. Elizabeths Hospital agrees with the suggestion that the amount of annuity should be increased somewhat. When the retirement act was first under consideration the cost of living was nothing like as high as at present; and while the cost of living may be somewhat lowered, the present annuity is too low for an employee to take care of himself.

"The Secretary of Commerce states that statistics have shown that the cost of the retirement system is much less than was anticipated, and that this might be good ground for considering a general increase of the annuity rates. Opportunity should be taken to eliminate what is now an unfair provision of the system; namely, while the maximum annuity is that which might be earned by a $1,200 clerk the same deduction is made from all salaries, whether $1,200 or $3,000, the deduction from the higher salary amounting to several times that of the lower, although the higher paid employee can not earn a greater annuity than the lower.

"The Secretary of Labor believes that the annuities paid are very small and that it is almost impossible for an employee to exist on the amount set aside for that purpose. A relatively small percentage of the employees are able to lay aside from their salaries a sufficient sum to augment the annuity, and the experience of the department is that persons reaching the retirement age look with horror upon the necessity of living on the small amount allowed, and use every effort to be retained in the service, whether or not competent to perform their duties.

RETIREMENT ON LENGTH OF SERVICE.

"The Chief of Ordnance believes there should be some provision whereby an employee who has served 30 or 35 years in the Government should be permitted to retire, irrespective of the fact that he has not reached retirement age.

GENERAL EFFECT.

"The Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs believes that there should be a fixed age for retirement, and thus relieve the administrative officers of the burden of determining whether or not an employee should be granted an extension. This would seem only fair, considering that the younger element, which in the end will pay by deduction from his salary a great deal more than the others, is debarred from promotion which compulsory retirement would bring about.

"The result of the operation of the retirement act in the Engineer Department at large is believed to have been moderately beneficent. Formerly this office was in the dilemma of retaining on the rolls an employee who had become inefficient through age or of turning him out without any means of support whatever. The adoption of the retirement provisions has given employees something other than the poorhouse to look forward to, and has in this way to a certain extent improved their morale. It is, therefore, believed that a slightly greater average efficiency in the service has been attained.

"The Acting Secretary of the Department of the Interior states that the department is thoroughly convinced that the effect of the retirement act has been and will be highly beneficial upon the morale of the service and that its result will undoubtedly be fewer resignations, less turnover, more interest in the service, and greater effort on the part of the employees to render faithful and efficient service and to keep their records good in order that they may ultimately share in the benefits of the retirement act.

COMMENTS ON THE FOREGOING REPORTS.

"The criticisms most strongly implied by the testimony are that annuities are inadequate and that the contributions required of the higher-paid employees are unjust and inequitable. In considering these criticisms it is essential to bear in mind the fact that beneficiaries for a number of years will receive annuities greatly out of proportion to their contributions and that every cent they receive above the amount of their contributions creates an obligation upon the Government. There is no general fund, but a multiplicity of funds, and the Government will have to foot the bill in the case of all employees who receive annuities in excess of their contributions. Deductions for the retirement fund are assessments only in the sense that they may be involuntary; they are, rather, in the nature of savings accounts, with liberal interest, which the beneficiaries or their estates will receive in full. Full realization of this fact ought to a large extent dissipate the opposition of the younger employees.

"The retirement act was drafted when the cost of living was much lower than now, and perhaps at the time of its passage it was anticipated that such cost would soon be much lower. To produce stability and promote a general sense of security and contentment, annuities should at least be sufficient to so supplement the savings during 30 years of the average Government employee as to make it possible for him to spend his few remaining years after retirement in comfort. This is what Congress doubtless intended, and the changed condition should be met. Undoubtedly in years to come, when each person shall have been in the service sufficiently long to contribute a considerable amount toward his annuity, annuities will be increased.

"The criticism that the higher-paid employees do not receive justice does not seem wholly justified at this time. The annuities were naturally made low to reduce the future obligations of the Government. Salaries were so low that it would have been impossible to require large contributions. A large proportion of those retired upon annuity for many years to come will have contributed a comparatively small part toward the annuities they receive. When the time comes that the higher-salaried employees have contributed a sufficient amount to more than purchase annuity as now provided, some adjustment will doubtless be made. At present all annuitants receive benefits out of all proportion to the amounts they have contributed, and the Government is relieved to the extent that the larger contributions of the higher-paid employees leave less for it to pay. In other words, the Government calls upon those best able to bear the burden to contribute larger sums than the lower-paid employees, in some instances probably larger than are required to purchase the same annuities from insurance companies."

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS OF ST. LOUIS AND SALT LAKE CITY.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 208, to insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate, a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of Senate Joint Resolution 208, authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for their head offices and branches.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DALE, Mr. KING, and Mr. WINGO.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on Senate Joint Resolution 208 be given until midnight to-night to file their report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the conferees on this Senate joint resolution be given until midnight to-night to file their report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement of the House conferees are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the resolution (S. J. Res. 208) authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 8, 10, 11, and 12; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "and San Francisco are"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "branch buildings at Little Rock, Ark., and Salt Lake City, Utah, respectively, on lots heretofore acquired for that purpose, but the total investment in such buildings shall not exceed an amount equal to 2½ per cent of the paid-in capital stock and surplus of such banks, respectively; and the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the erection of a building"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment to the title of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its head office and authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and San Francisco to enter into contracts for the erection of branch buildings at Little Rock, Ark., and Salt Lake City, Utah."

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the resolution (S. J. Res. 208) authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This statement is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 7: The Senate resolution authorized the Federal Reserve Bank of Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of buildings for its head office and branches. The House amendment struck out this provision; and the Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco to enter into contracts for the erection of branch buildings at Salt Lake City, Utah.

On amendment No. 9: The Senate resolution authorized the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for the head office of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis and branch buildings at Little Rock, Ark., and Salt Lake City, Utah. This amendment limited the authority under this resolution to the erection of a head office for the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to this amendment with an amendment authorizing the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and San Francisco to enter into contracts for the erection of branch buildings at Little Rock, Ark., and Salt Lake City, Utah, respectively, limiting the total investment in such buildings to an amount not in excess of 2½ per cent of the paid-in capital stock and surplus of such banks, respectively, and authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its head office.

On amendment No. 12: The Senate resolution provided that the total investment in buildings erected by the Federal Reserve Banks of St. Louis and Salt Lake City shall not exceed an amount equal to 30 per cent of the banks' paid-in capital stock and surplus. The House amendment limits the amount to 25 per cent; and the Senate recedes. The effect of this amendment together with the action taken on amendment No. 9 is to limit the total investment that can be made in the head office for the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis to an amount not in excess of 25 per cent of its paid-in capital stock and surplus.

Amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, and 11: These amendments are clerical changes due to the striking out of the resolution the authorization of the Federal Reserve Bank of Salt Lake City to erect buildings for its head office and branches. The House recedes on amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and the Senate recedes on amendments Nos. 8, 10, and 11.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the conferees appointed to consider this bill in conference with the Senate conferees but did not sign the conference report, and I do not think that it should be agreed to. With the permission of the House, I want to state briefly why I do not think the conference report should be adopted.

In May, 1920, Congress passed the civil service retirement act. The ages of retirement provided for in that retirement act were as follows: First, it was provided that the general run of Government employees should be retired at the age of 70. Second, it was provided that letter carriers, postal clerks, rural carriers, and mechanics—which would include the navy-yard employees—should be retired at 65. Third, it was provided that railway postal clerks should be retired at 62. I do not think there is any substantial sentiment in the House in favor of lowering these retirement ages, as a general proposition.

In 1921 a very substantial reduction in the 1916 naval building program was ordered by Congress, and as a result of this curtailment of the naval building program a large curtailment of forces in the navy yards was made necessary. At once there arose an insistent demand to amend the retirement act so as to provide retirement payments for all of the navy-yard employees thus dropped from the Government service who had reached the age of 50 years and who had been in the Government service 15 years or more.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In a moment I will yield, when I complete my statement. This demand found its expression in a bill which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] introduced and which was referred to our Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. We gave careful hearings and consideration to the bill.

After we had finished these hearings it was the deliberate conclusion of the committee that it would be unwise and unreasonable to grant retirement pay to any civil-service employee of the Government under the age of 60 years. And so we amended the Fairfield bill and made it apply only to those who had reached the age of 60 years or more. As amended, the bill was unanimously reported by our committee to the House. When the bill was brought up on the 20th of June I was not here, but the House agreed to the bill as reported by our committee and fixed the retirement age at 60 years. The bill went to the Senate and the Senate in considering it amended it and substituted 55 years for 60 years. The bill came back to the House, and in conference the majority members of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD], have agreed to the Senate amendment fixing the retirement age at 55, and so that is the matter which is now before us for decision.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Is it not true that so far as the employees themselves are concerned they have consistently insisted on the retirement age being as high as possible, in order that they may be that much longer in the service, and that it has been sought on the part of Congress to put it down to an age where we could get better efficiency in the Government service?

Mr. BLACK. No; that has not been my experience as a member of the committee. My experience is that I have received letters and telegrams from different unions of Federal employees in different parts of the country urging me to support this conference report and thereby lower the age.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. The gentleman does not get my question. What I mean is the general tendency on the part of the employees of the Government has been not to reduce the age but to have it as high as possible that they might be in the service that much longer. Efficiency is urged on the part of the Congress and of the Government, and that is the reason why the Government, as well as Congress, is urging a proper and reasonable age limit.

Mr. BLACK. My experience in the committee has been that most of the Government employees advocated that the age of retirement be somewhat lower than it was fixed in the original law. In further answer to the gentleman's question, let me say that one of the reasons that I am opposed to agreeing to this conference report is because it will set the precedent of granting retirement pay to Government employees who have only reached the age of 55 years. Already, as a member of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, I know that there is considerable agitation made to get the civil service retirement law amended so as to give voluntary retirement to employees who have served the Government a certain number of years, regardless of whether they have attained the retirement age as now fixed by law.

Now, let me give the gentleman a concrete illlustration of what I mean when I say there is agitation to amend the law so as to grant retirement pay to those who have served a certain length of time but who have not reached the retirement age. A Government employee, for example, enters the service at the age of 25. He serves 30 years, and he would only be 55 years of age and would lack 7, 10, or 15 years of being at the retirement age, as the case may be. There is now an agitation going on to have the retirement act changed to give such employee the privilege of voluntarily retiring whenever he has served the Government 30 years and grant him retirement pay, regardless of whether he has reached the retirement age or not.

That is one of the reasons that I am opposed to this conference report. We are setting a precedent here, and my experience is it is a whole lot easier to set a precedent than it is to get away from it after it is set. I think that it is carrying things entirely too far to retire a civil employee who has only reached the age of 55 years and pay him a gratuity at the Government expense. When I say gratuity, I mean speaking well within the facts, because that is what it does mean as to the employees covered by this bill. They have only paid into the retirement fund a very small contribution, and what they have paid in has been returned to them by the Government with compound interest at 4 per cent.

The civil service retirement law very properly provided that when a Government employee is separated from the service either voluntarily or involuntarily the amount he has paid into the retirement fund shall be paid back to him with compound interest. So it simply means that if we pass this law we will be putting these gentlemen on the civil-service pension list at the expense of the Government. They will be required to return to the Treasury the very small contribution they have withdrawn, but that will not amount to very much.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman speaks of its being a gratuity and that the Government will pay it. Have we made any appropriation for this purpose?
